[Text] Minister of State and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, who attended the OECD's working group meeting in Paris after having concluded his visit to Libya, returned to Ankara this evening. In a statement at Yesilokoy Airport, Ozal said that in addition to the agreement previously signed in Ankara, a new oil agreement has been signed between Turkey and Libya. Ozal added that, with this agreement, 30 percent of the cost of the 2 million tons of oil to be purchased from Libya will be deducted from Libya's commercial debts to Turkey. Ozal noted that an agreement in principle had been reached that the remaining 70 percent will be covered through additional payments to Turkish contractors working in Libya. Pointing out that he later attended the OECD's second working group meeting in Paris, Ozal said that economic developments in Turkey within the last 2 1/2 years were reviewed at the meeting. He added that Turkey's economic policy and the results achieved were received positively by the representatives of the member countries.

Begins Ankara Contacts

TA211040 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 21 Jun 82

[Text] Jordanian Supplies Minister Ibrahim Ayyub has begun his contacts in Ankara. He called on Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk this morning and conferred with him for some time. In a statement during the meeting, Canturk said that the Jordanian minister will hold contacts in Ankara within the framework of the trade protocol signed between Turkey and Jordan in Amman in April. Canturk added that during these contacts an agreement might be reached for the sale of 75,000 tons of wheat and barley and other products to Jordan.

Ayyub said that Jordan wishes to raise Turkish-Jordanian relations to the highest level in accordance with mutual interests. Noting that Jordan might obtain many of its needs from Turkey, Ayyub added that Jordan expected Turkey to purchase phosphate rocks from his country. Ayyub and the delegation accompanying him are also meeting with officials from the Soil Products Office, the Meat and Fish Association, the Army Mutual Aid Association and the Hydraulic Machinery Industry and Trade Corporation.

HIGHLIGHTS OF DRAFT CONSTITUTION OUTLINED

TA181615 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Text] Ankara, 18 Jun (AA) -- Turkey may have a second consultative chamber of around 60 members, called the Council of the Republic, if the draft constitution being written up by the 15-man consultative assembly committee is approved.

Sources close to the drafting committee say 60 articles of the new document have already been drafted by committee members working into the night to complete their work by the 10 July deadline they have set for themselves. The 1961 Constitution had 157 articles. According to articles already drafted, general elections are to be held every 4 years as before, with the minimum age for electors remaining at 21, and for candidates at 30. The total number of parliamentary seats will probably be brought down from 450 to 350 or 400.

Sanctions are being thought up for MP's resigning from the party on whose ticket they were elected.

A committee member said the drafting of an article was postponed if the committee was divided on it in order to speed up the whole of the drafting.

PROSECUTOR DEMANDS PRISON TERM FOR ECEVIT

TA181542 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1530 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Text] Ankara, 18 Jun (AA) -- A military prosecutor Friday demanded prison sentences totaling 6 months to 2 years for Bulent Ecevit, ex-chairman of the now defunct Republican People's Party.

Ecevit appeared before a martial law court in Ankara to face charges of violating Article 16/1 of the Martial Law Code on two counts: for a statement given to the journal "DER SPIEGEL' and to German TV.

Ecevit submitted a plea for an examination of the case by experts. The hearing was adjourned to allow Ecevit's lawyers to prepare their defence.

MILLIYET ON TURKISH CYPRIOT VISIT, RDF

NC191622 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 16 Jun 82 p 8

["Telex" column by Toman Erel: "'Sense of Sequence' Particularly in Times of Crisis"]

[Excerpts] As a followup to a matter that we tackled the other day, let me familiarize you with the latest developments: "The visit to Turkey en masse by all the members of the TFSC Government and the Legislative Assembly has been abandoned."

It is understood that the initial program caused negative reactions both in the Turkish Cypriot sector and in Ankara. The Turkish Cypriot opposition parties argue that it was head of state Denktas who regarded such a visit as strange and who spread the rumor behind the scenes that "Ankara intended to do some scolding."

So the initially intended group visit has been converted into a visit by two representative delegations.

This is a return to reasonable dimensions. Thus, the blunder that would picture the TFSC as "a showpiece completely guided by Turkey" has been avoided.

Turkey's relations with the TFSC must be handled with care during the current period. As is known, quite the reverse of the tolerance shown to Israel in the U.S. Congress is shown to us. A tendency again emerged in the Congress during the debate on aid to Turkey to bring up the Cyprus question and to curtail aid on this basis.

In the next few days, the U.S. Government may say to Ankara: "Our Congress insists on certain concessions in Cyprus. Make these concessions and finish with it."

In response, Ankara must be able to say: "The TFSC has a parliament and a government of its own." Why should we undermine our position with our own hands?

Yes, a sense of sequence is important not only in the professional life of a journalist. It is a principle equally useful in foreign politics and in the life of states, particularly during periods of crisis and bargaining....

We wonder what would have happened had Inonu [a former Turkish president] not insisted on the simple idea during the 1939-45 period that "Turkey must be adequately prepared from a military point of view before it can enter the war."

And now the rapid deployment force "probabilities" are in our door. While flames in the Middle East show strong signs of turning into interbloc frictions, the NATO summit has issued a resolution on this subject which could be interpreted variously.

It is understood that the European members of NATO are prepared to give the green light to any intervention in the Middle East, particularly to Turkey's contribution to the United States. Consequently, Ankara should pose this question: "Will NATO be on our side if Turkey gets involved in this affair and gets into trouble as a result?" Or will our allies in NATO make this retort: "That is a joint affair between you and the United States: It does not concern us."

We must never forget that our participation in operations on the side of the United States, "like those carried out by Israel", would have a profound effect on our relations with our Arab and Muslim friends. How faithful shall we remain to such principles and opinions as "the defense of the Gulf belongs to the Gulf states," and "no peace can be established in the Middle East until the Palestine issue is resolved," which have been uttered several times by most authoritative sources?

The two dailies include the English language publication "NEW AGE" and a Turkish one calling itself "DEMOCRATIC TURKEY." The calendar is called the "1982-1402" calender of the "European Islamic Youth Organization."

The books and journals banned are Turkish and Persian language publications containing sectarian propaganda.

UNION OF JOURNALISTS APPEALS FOR AMNESTY

TA181620 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1358 GMT 18 Jun 82

[Text] Istanbul, 18 Jun (AA) -- The journalists union of Turkey [TGS], a trade union affiliated with the Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-is], has applied to the government for an amnesty on violation of the Press Law.

The plea by Union Chairman Nail Gureli notes there are over 200 cases involving charges against members of the press for offences by the published word. Most of the cases involved acts done before September 1980.

The press had behaved reasonsibly since then and deserved an amnesty, Gureli believed. He also asked for lifting of the ban on appeal against sentences of less than 6 months in prison, and discontinuing of holding editors responsible for articles written by others.

TINDEMANS SAYS ISRAEL REJECTED EEC APPEAL

NC211534 Paris AFP in English 1530 GMT 21 Jun 82

[Text] Luxembourg, 21 Jun (AFP) -- The European Economic Community demanded a series of assurances concerning the Lebanese situation in a questionnaire sent to the Israeli Government on June 14 which was harshly rejected by Israel, Belgian Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans revealed here today.

He made the announcement after two days of talks here among the 10 EEC foreign ministers, adding that the Community had also decided to suspend signature of a financial cooperation protocol with Israel.

In the questionnaire, the EEC demanded assurances that Israel would respect the sovereignty of Lebanon and the Lebanese-Israeli frontier, and that it had no intention of annexing of occupying Lebanese territory.

The 10-point questionnaire also wanted assurances that Israel had "no hostile intentions against the Palestinian people," and that it did not plan to attack "neighboring countries, including Syria."

It said Israel should respect the Geneva convention and allow both humanitarian organisations and the press to work freely in the occupied territories.

A terse, four-point reply from Israel termed the EEC document a "fragebogen" -- a German word describing questionnaires submitted by Nazi officials to "enemies of the regime" -- and said it was "unacceptable."

"Many of the anwers to the questions can be found in recent statements made by the government at different levels," the Israeli reply read.

"The Israeli position," it said, "is that all non-Lebanese armed forces, be they regular armies or armed groups, must leave Lebanese territory, with the exception, of course, of UNIFIL" -- the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon.

An eventual political solution must prevent a return to the situation before the June 6 invasion, the Israeli reply continued, adding that "we will not stay (in Lebanon) a single day longer than necessary."

It said an unconditional Israeli withdrawal before such a political solution was reached was "inconceivable" and that it was "wrong to threaten Israel or take actions which would not contribute to the search for a political solution."

Mr Tindemans said the EEC ministers did not find the Israeli reply "satisfactory."

However, the ministers did not issue a new written statement on the Lebanese situation, referring to their June 9 Bonn declaration "vigorously condemning (this) unjustifiable ... violation of international law and basic humanitarian principles."

Earlier, British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym said that although no new decisions had been reached, the 10 foreign ministers had discussed "possible sanctions" against Israel.

These included an eventual embargo on arms supplies, Mr Pym said.

And Mr Tindemans added in his statement today that the EEC had decided to pursue financial aid to Lebanon, either on a nation-to-nation basis, or within the Community framework.

NEUTRAL, NONALIGNED MINISTERS TO MEET IN AUGUST

AU211145 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 19 Jun 82 p 1

[Excerpt] The foreign ministers of the nine nonaligned and neutral European states intend to meet in Stockholm at the end of August to discuss the Madrid CSCE follow-up conference. According to statemens by the foreign ministers in Stockholm and Vienna the ministers intend to put the finishing touch to the pending compromise proposal that is to permit all participating states to approve the concluding document.

Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr declared in this context that in Stockholm it is intended to further review the concluding document draft submitted by the neutrals and nonaligned countries in Madrid, in the light of the latest developments and of several contacts talks that have been held. After all, he said, one wants to achieve a positive and well-balanced result at the resumption of the second CSCE follow-up meeting in Madrid. Pahr added that the Stockholm consultation will also discuss how the time between this meeting and the resumption of the Madrid meeting in November can be utilized. Possibly there will be contacts with representatives of other states, he said.

The Stockholm meeting on 29 and 30 August will be attended by the foreign ministers of Austria, Sweden, Finland, Switzerland, Yugoslavia, Cyprus, Malta, Liechtenstein and San Marino. According to a Stockholm Foreign Ministry spokemsan, Sweden will renew its offer to host a European disarmament conference that is yet to be agreed on.

MINISTER APEL OUTLINES FUTURE DEFENSE POLICY

[Excerpts] Bonn, 21 Jun (DPA) — Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel has announced an extension of basic military service and the employment of women in noncombatant units in the second half of this decade. However, he does not intend to follow suggestions that aliens living in the Federal Republic should be conscripted. These suggestions were put forward because of the expected fall in the number of conscripts owing to the low birth rate. Future arms programs should be less costly, he said. Early investment should be made in the development and procurement of weapons systems which require fewer personnel.

Apel was presenting to the press in Bonn today the report of the long-term commission on the future of the Bundeswehr in the 1990's. He said the personnel problem requires a major political effort. The minister hinted recently in the Bundestag that the period of conscription would have to be extended from 1986 from the present 15 months to probably 18 months.

"Our defense planning will continue to be based on a Bundeswehr strength of 1.2 million (including reservists) well-trained and well-equipped men."

The procurement programs currently underway almost completely preempt resources until 1987 and a good deal of the resources thereafter. It is only at the beginning of the 1990's that there will be full planning scope for new programs. The important point will be to make the equipment of the 1990's affordable. The pace of modernization in the Bundeswehr can, and will have to slow down.

This slow-down is tolerable if the emphasis in new equipment is shifted from delivery systems in the narrow sense (sensors, effectors). "Reducing the demand for the most sophisticated technology for defense material will be written into planning and procurement procedures. Curbing costs is the object." Constantly increasing prices for defense goods will no longer be acceptable.

Before developing major new systems, we will have to examine "what less costly possibilities there are for matching the equipment of the armed forces to the threat they face and strengthening their defensive potential." This will affect all services — air, land and sea systems. "The Bundeswehr's structure in the 1980's will be adapted in an evolutionary way to the conditions of the 1990's but without fixation on the inherited pattern of individual services or other organizational areas."

The ability of the armed forces to expand in time in terms of qualitative fighting power and numerical strength in the event of crises and a state of defense must be paramount. Not everything that is acceptable today in terms of price can be implemented without diminution in future, not even in defense planning. A review of defense policy and strategic assumptions cannot be avoided. Apel is against extending the cadre principle by which cadre units are brought up to strength with reservists in an emergency. The training and operational management of the armed forces must be ensured. Amenities will have to be cut back. The commission recommends that the present pattern of the Bundeswehr should be maintained in the 1990's.

The long-term commission, chaired by State Secretary Klaus-Dieter Leisler and Inspector-General Juergen Brandt, has been considering for a year the future development of the armed forces in arms, equipment and personnel.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON COALITION PROBLEMS

DW211445 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1710 GMT 20 Jun 82

[Interview with Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FRG foreign minister and FDP chairman, by Bodo H. Hauser on "Bonn Perspectives"; in Bonn, date not given -- videotaped]

[Answer] It is not our style, in any event. However, I have gained the impression from many statements by the Social Democrats in the past several days that they regard the Free Democrats in Hesse as their bondmen and that the SPD in Hesse feels that it is a state party with a permanent title to government participation. The truth is that cooperation between Free Democrats and Social Democrats in Hesse, which has been successful over many years, has lately become increasingly entangled in the barbed wire obstacles of SPD congress decisions, especially with respect to economic and energy policies. Important projects, on which thousands of jobs depend, were either not carried out or were delayed for the time being. This makes it necessary for Hesse to obtain a government capable of acting and making decisions, a government able to pursue a responsible and prudent economic policy, a policy of job security.

[Question] Do you have any reason to fear that the SPD might come to terms with the environmentalists at the expense of the FDP?

[Answer] I believe that this would happen rather at the expense of the SPD's central constituency. That is obvious, after all. Together with the alternative groupings, the Social Democrats wanted to prevent election winner Von Weizsaecker from moving into city hall in Berlin. What is happening in Hamburg is an attempt to gain the support in city hall of the alternative groupings which have been infiltrated by the communists there. Such alliances already exist in Hesse as well, that is to say, in Kassel, but also to some degree in Darmstadt. This is the reason why many SPD voters wonder how they can vote for a Social Democratic Party which flirts with environmentalists and alternative groupings who advocate a policy which will definitely jeopardize jobs. This is becoming particularly plain in Hesse.

[Question] After having fought Alfred Dregger for years, you now want to form a coalition with him. Can this be justified?

[Answer] To begin with, we definitely have no intention of electing Mr Dregger FDP chairman in Hesse. What I think is important is the fact that many voters in Hesse want the economic policy and the decisionmaking ability of the government we are demanding for Hesse for the next 4 years. In an FDP-CDU coalition, the liberal voters will have the opportunity to bring about a change in Hesse, that is dismissing the SPD from governmental responsibility while at the same time enforcing liberal policy by strengthening the FDP in a coalition with the CDU.

[Answer] It has become clear that it was the Hesse SPD in particular which formed the spearhead for the motion at the Munich SPD congress to raise taxes -- a motion which envisaged intervention in the economy. This means in effect that there is no chance for good cooperation in economic policy in Hesse during the next 4 years. However, in Bonn the motions adopted at the party congress have not become government policy, and we have not been asked to agree with that. This certainly shows a clear difference.

[Question] An FDP argument in Hesse is that it is important to prevent a two-thirds majority of the CDU-CSU in the Bundesrat. Can't you already prevent this now through the coalition agreement in the Saarland?

[Answer] This is certainly made easier by the statement by Hesse CDU Chairman Dr Dregger that he does not, in the event he forms the land government, intend to force the Free Democrats in Hesse into loyalty conflicts.

[Question] Hasn't the Darmstadt decision forced the FDP to change coalition partners here in Bonn even before the elections in Hesse? After all, if you drop below 5 percent in Hesse, the situation would be incomparably more difficult for both parties.

[Answer] I think many questions are posed nowadays too tactically. What is really at stake are practical policy goals. The government to which we aspire in Hesse will undoubtedly support an economic and fiscal policy which we Free Democrats consider appropriate for the Federal Government, whereas this was doubtful in the case of the Social Democrats. It is not true, by the way, that the Hesse SPD's support for foreign and security policies is certain, especially considering what was heard at Hesse party conventions. No, the Free Democrats must be and remain loyal to their cause. In the face of the serious challenges in economic and financial policies, this means we must promote a solid financial policy so as to make economic revitalization possible, to provide the Federal Bank with new ways to reduce interest rates, and to refrain from dumping today's problems on the shoulders of our children and grandchildren over the medium and long term.

[Question] The outcome of the vote in Darmstadt was very tight. Will it be hard for you to integrate the internal party opposition in Hesse and as well as here in Bonn?

[Answer] It was with great respect that I acknowledged the statement by those making up the minority in Darmstadt that they will support the election campaign of the party and our objectives. This is what the federal executive board underscored as well. I think that the degree of loyalty in the FDP and the will for common success should not be underrated.

[Question] Do you, Mr Genscher, include in your considerations a break in the coalition during the negotiations on the 1983 budget?

[Answer] It is our objective to do our duty in the preparation of the 1983 budget jointly with the Social Democrats. We are not gamblers.

[Question] As far as the FDP is concerned, where are the limits in the 1983 budget which must not be exceeded?

[Answer] Well, I do not intend to place preconditions on talks which will really be difficult. However, the principle that the budget must be solidly financed -- and this can be done only if we are prepared to make changes to benefits laws and if we refuse to take refuge in an irresponsible state indebtedness and in an immense increase in revenues -- this principle outlines the room for action, I believe. Individual issues msut be discussed at the negotiating table.

[Question] Do you believe that your coalition partner will go along with you in these points as well?

[Answer] I gained the impression from the talks last week that, like ourselves, the other side has the serious will to create a proper budget.

FOREIGN MINISTER HOSTS MOZAMBIQUE COUNTERPART

[Text] Bonn, 21 Jun (DPA) -- Today's visit to Bonn by the Mozambique foreign minister has given fresh impetus to the development of closer relations with the states of southern Africa. At the invitation of Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Joaquim Alberto Chiassano visited the Federal Republic for the first time since the establishment of diplomatic relations 6 years ago.

Their discussion centered on the internal, chiefly economic, situation and possibilities for the development of relations between Bonn and Mozambique, the Bonn Foreign Ministry said. As one of the black frontline states, Mozambique is an important partner in international efforts to achieve independence for Namibia.

The Namibia problem was mentioned by Genscher at tonight's dinner for Chissano. Genscher said: "The people of Namibia are entitled to independence and to national self-determination. What has been possible in Zimbabwe must also succeed in Namibia." He stressed the Federal Government's desire for partnership with young African nations. The FRG wishes to encourage them in their genuine nonalignment.

BOELLING: U.S. EMBARGO 'COMPLETE SURPRISE'

[Text] Bonn, 21 Jun (DPA) -- The intensification of the U.S. embargo measures against the USSR, which are aimed primarily at delaying the gas pipeline deal, has taken the Federal Republic completely by surprise. Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling said on Monday in Bonn that according to his information no consultations had taken place beforehand. Boelling underlined the Federal Government's standpoint that such measures are not conducive to attaining the political goals envisaged.

The Federal Government would like to adhere to the contract and seeks to change Washington's attitude both through talks with Washington and through consultations with France, Italy and Great Britain. The legality of this measure will be examined by the Federal Government. Negotiations on this issue with the American Government have begun through the German Embassy in Washington.

Industry Critical

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 21 Jun (DPA) -- German industry has noted the extension of the U.S. embargo on deliveries for the European-Soviet gas pipeline deal "with displeasure." The decision was reached "without concluding consultations by the U.S. Government at the end of the world economic summit," the Federal Association of German Industry [BDI] contended in Cologne on Monday. It contradicts the trade policy agreed on jointly at Versailles. Forcing a violation of existing contracts is hard to accept. Extending national legislation endangers the existing international trade order, it was said. The BDI fully shares the fears of American concerns and associations that the U.S. partners may suffer serious damage to their reliability and credibility.

The intensification of the U.S. trade embargo was described on Monday by a representative of the SPD Bundestag group, Uwe Jens, as a return to national and egotistic policies. Whereas the United States for its part delivers grain to the USSR, the U.S. measures will greatly hamper Europe's business with the Eastern Bloc. The AEG concern, which was in any case seriously hit, will now "really start tottering."

Discord Within Alliance

DW211247 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 21 Jun 82 p 4

[Commentary signed A.: "Reagan Turns Off the Gas Tap"]

[Text] To the great satisfaction of the French, Germans, Italians and British, the West European allies' gas pipeline deal with the Soviet Union, which has been a subject of dispute in the United States for many months now, was the topic of much discussion at the Versailles economic summit.

The fact that it was discussed only privately and as a side issue, so to speak, led to the wrong conclusion that the matter had been settled as far as President Reagan was concerned.

Ronald Reagan's latest decision shows that this was a deception -- many people will say an intended deception. The President now wants to expand the embargo on the delivery of technical component parts for the Siberia project to also include firms outside the United States which are operating with U.S. licenses. For the time being, it remains to be seen whether he will be successful or whether he has simply saddled himself with protracted lawsuits. What is already certain, however, is that this measure -- if it really comes into force -- will at best delay the construction of the gas pipeline, but will by no means prevent it. In the past, this argument was raised time and again by Secretary of State Haig and this led to the false impression in Europe that the issue of the gas pipeline had been shelved in Washington. In reality the subject was not brought up formally by Reagan in Versailles because neither the legal situation nor the political consequences of a total embargo could be seen clearly. The only halfhearted support by the allies for a restrictive trade and credit policy toward the Soviet Union has now encouraged those in Washington who urge the President to be as tough as possible.

The proponents of economic sanctions led by Defense Secretary Weinberger have finally prevailed. It is questionable whether "reconciliation in Poland" will be promoted this way. What is sure, however, is that Ronald Reagan has sown new discord within the alliance.

Press Reacts Strongly

0650 GMT 21 Jun 82

[From the press review]

[Text] U.S. President Reagan's surprising decision to further increase trade restrictions against the Soviet Union, thereby impeding the construction of the controversial natural gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe, is commented on by the NEUE PRESSE in Hannover as follows: "This policy is putting more than just several thousand jobs in jeopardy. Even in Reagan's own party, influential politicians are speaking about a danger to the Western alliance. If the responsible people in Bonn and Paris want to be taken seriously in the future, then they must ask themselves how long they can allow the interpretation of Western interests to be dictated by Washington as has been the case up until now."

The HESSISCHE-NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE in Kassel writes: "During his European trip Ronald Reagan wore summer clothes. He had hardly returned to Washington when he got out his winter overcoat again. Once again he is as before -- harsh not only against the Soviet Union but also against the allies. The increased economic sanctions he ordered will not improve the situation in Poland but give another twist to deteriorating East-West relations."

Under the headline "A Thorn in The Flesh," the KIELER NACHRICHTEN writes: "Reagan's new embargo decision against the Soviet Union came rather suddenly. Although it is being justified by the rather discouraging developments in Poland, the Soviet Union's gas pipeline deal with the West European states is certainly what matters in the first place. This agreement has been a thorn in the flesh of the U.S. President even though the fear that West Europe might become politically dependent on Moscow because of the huge energy shipments from Siberia is not necessarily valid. Now, European -- including German -- firms are hit by the expanded embargo provisions. All of a sudden thousands of additional jobs are threatened in an economic situation which already is anything but rosy."

MITTERRAND DEPARTS FOR 2-DAY VISIT TO MADRID

[Text] Paris, Jun 22 (AFP) -- President Francois Mitterrand left here today for a two-day visit to Madrid where he will discuss improving Franco-Spanish relations which have been bedevilled by Basque terrorism and Spain's entry into the European Common Market (EEC).

Spain has several times complained that Basque autonomists carry out bomb attacks in Spain and then seek refuge in southern France. Spanish police want more cooperation from their French counterparts.

Mr Mitterrand was expected to assure Spain that its entry into the EEC, which had France's backing, would have his full understanding. Concern has been expressed here that Spain will compete against France in the agricultural and steel sectors.

Mr Mitterrand will have several meetings with King Juan Carlos and Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo and other Spanish political leaders. He is accompanied by Claude Cheysson (external relations); Jean-Pierre Chevenement (research); Jack Lang (cultural affairs); Georgina Dufoix (family welfare).

PLO REPRESENTATIVE MEETS MAUROY, CHEYSSON

NC191905 Beirut Voice of Lebanon in Arabic 1725 GMT 19 Jun 82

[Text] French Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy today received PLO Executive Committee member Faruq Qaddumi and reviewed with him the dangerous situation in Lebanon. Our Paris correspondent, Fadi Najjar, speaks to us about this meeting.

[Begin recording] Pierre Mauroy today received Faruq Qaddumi in the first meeting between a Palestinian representative and the French prime minister. Qaddumi also met with Minister of External Relations Claude Cheysson and French Communist Party Secretrary General Georges Marchais. In his statements, Qaddumi concentrated on three points:

1. He is in Paris as a representative of the PLO and not on a private visit. The French side refused to comment on the protocol nature of the visit. Qaddumi added: (?The conditions were conducive) today before the French Government for receiving 'Arafat officially in Paris very soon. However, the French side refused to comment on this.

2. In connection with Moscow's stand, Qaddumi said: The Soviets have adopted a supportive political stand and will take more.

3. Concerning the siege of West Beirut, Qaddumi said: France's relations are ones of alliance with the United States, and Paris can exercise some pressure on Washington. Here lies the essence of the Palestinian movement, since the Palestinian leaders are trying to come out of Beirut alive and without loss of face if possible. They also recognize that their fate is hanging by an American thread. For 10 days, we have seen a (?radical shift) in the Palestinian stand on steadfastness and confrontation, the moderate Arabs, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Camp David, Egypt, Moscow and Washington.

Meanwhile, the French Foreign Ministry recalled after Qaddumi's visit that Cheysson has received the Palestinian representative several times and that France insists on respect for the cease-fire in Lebanon and on putting a final end to the fighting. [end recording]

ITALIAN-SOVIET GAS SUPPLY NEGOTIATIONS SET

PM211057 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 17 Jun 82 p 30

[Edoardo Borriello dispatch: "Marcora Wants Russian Methane To Counter High Algerian Gas Prices"]

[Excerpt] Lausanne, 16 Jun -- A new round of negotiations for the Siberian gas pipeline and methane supplies to Italy is due to start. Soviet Gas Industry Minister Vasiliy Dinkov arrives in Italy Tuesday, 22 June. After a visit to Nuovo Pignone's Florence factory and a brief stay in Bologna, Dinkov will proceed to Rome for talks with National Hydrocarbons Agency [ENI] chiefs and, presumably, with members of the Italian Government.

It is not an official visit so not many people in Italy know about it, but it was Minister Dinkov himself who revealed the news this morning in conversation with newsmen during a pause in the proceedings of the world gas conference in Lausanne.

The news is particularly important in view of the 30 June deadline set by our government for the so-called "pause for reflection" on Italy's participation in the construction of the gigantic Siberian gas pipeline, which is designed to carry methane to Italy and other West European countries from 1986. The 30 June deadline is the second one set by the Spadolini government for an answer to the Soviets. The first was 15 April.

What will happen if, yet again, Rome is unable to give a final reply? The conversation with Minister Dinkov gave the impression that the Soviets are willing to continue waiting.

"I do not believe," the minister -- a tall, heavily built man, with a brusque but cordial manner -- said, "that any deadline has been set for the negotiations. We attach great importance to relations with Italy since we purchase almost everything in your country."

What about the price that Moscow is asking for its gas? "There are no problems there," he replied, adding that the Soviet Union follows the international gas market, as far as prices are concerned.

Agreements for material supplies have already been reached with Nuovo Pignone (ENI) and ITALSIDER [industrial reconstruction institute] for the construction of the gas pipeline, which will extend from the Yamal peninsula in eastern Siberia to the Czechoslovak border, where it will link up with existing distribution networks.

An informal agreement has also been reached with the National Gas Pipeline Company [SNAM] (ENI) for the supply of gas by Soyuzgaseksport. The government has not yet given its go-ahead, however. This has been opposed up to now by the Socialist and Social Democratic Parties, as well as by some Christian Democratic deputies.

The industry minister [Marcora], on the other hand, is definitely in favor of the agreement, since one of his responsibilities is energy supplies and the diversification of sources. Minister Marcora and his experts believe that the signing of an agreement with the Soviets will exert a positive influence on negotiations with the Algerians (who are asking excessively high prices for their gas).

A confidential ministry note states the following on the subject of contracts with Algeria and the Soviet Union: "Both must be completed as quickly as possible and at the best possible economic terms, precisely in order to achieve the objectives of diversification of energy sources and of supply areas, as indicated in the national energy plan unanimously approved by parliament. To achieve purchases from both sources on more favorable economic terms it is believed that the best policy is to conclude with political approval the agreement already reached by SNAM."

The confidential note adds that practicality and commercial experience suggest that the agreement with the Soviets "could moderate the demands of the Algerians, who, it must not be forgotten, have already decided twice to renegotiate a concluded agreement."

PRESIDENT PERTINI TO VISIT FRANCE 5-7 JULY

POLICE ARREST RED BRIGADES MEMBER, WEST GERMAN

[Text] ANSA — Rome, June 21 -- Documents revealing disagreements between the so-called "militarist" and "movement" wings of the Red Brigades urban guerilla group were found on the person of a presumed brigades member arrested here last week.

Italian police, who revealed the arrest today, described the defendent as 28-year old Franco Messina, believed to be a member of the ruling body of the brigades "Roman Column." They also said that Messina was rounded up in an extensive operation during which two "coves" were discovered and numerous other suspects arrested.

Believed to have gone underground in 1981, Messina is accused, among other things, of participating in the 1979 attack on the Roman headquarters of the Christian Democrat Party, during which two policemen lost their lives. Investigators also maintain that Messina had particular responsibilities in the militarist wing, especially after last months' arrests decimated the brigades Roman organization. At the moment of his arrest, the terrorist was armed with a 7.65 calibre pistol. The documents found on his person also indicated new objectives for brigades actions, including the names of magistrates, NATO officials, journalists and public security agents.

In another arrest reported today by Italian police, West German citizen Christa Margot Frohlich was picked up at Rome's Fiumicino Airport on Friday after customs authorities found a large quantity of explosives in her luggage.

According to the Roman police, the 40-year old Frohlich was carrying a suitcase with a false bottom in which were found three and a half kilos of "T4" high-potential explosives, two electric detonators and a timing mechanism.

At the moment of her arrest the woman believed by police to be a member of the West German "RFT" or Red Army Faction, was carrying an Austrian and a West German passport, both with false names. She was also carrying an authentic West German identity card. Frohlich declared herself a political prisoner and refused to respond to questioning. At the time of the arrest the police also confiscated approximately three and half thousand dollars in currency from different countries and a notebook containing train schedules for the Rome-Paris line. The most credible theory on the West German's presence in Rome, according to police, is that she was passing through Italy on her way to France.

Frohlich was charged with possession of false documents, and explosives and brought to Rome's Rebibbia Prison to await indictment.

BRIEFS

PIPERNO FREED IN CANADA -- The Italian physicist Francesco Piperno, accused by the Italian Government of collusion with the Red Brigades, was freed Wednesday, 2 June, in Montreal by Judge Paul Martineau of the Superior Court of Quebec. This magistrate concluded that there was a total "lack of evidence" against the physicist. [Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Jun 82 p 5]

PCP'S CUNHAL SCORES PSP'S SEVERANCE OF RELATIONS

PM211151 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 9 Jun 82 pp 5-6

[Account of 5 June speech in Guimaraes by PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal]

[Excerpt] In a situation so grave for Portuguese democracy, the PCP has made repeated calls to the workers, the Portuguese people, democrats, the Socialist Party [PSP] and the democratic institutions to take part in their struggle, their activity and their decisions in the defense of the threatened democratic system.

It is known that many PSP members, including many prominent leaders and many deputies, have declared themselves opposed to the revision of the constitution under the terms of the agreement signed with the "Democratic Alliance" by Mario Soares.

It is completely legitimate for the PCP, in its struggle in defense of the constitution and of the democratic system -- bearing in mind that only the Socialist deputies can give the "Democratic Alliance" the two-thirds of the votes for the revision of the constitution -- to call on the Socialist deputies not to vote for the plan for revision which comes up for debate in the Assembly of the Republic's plenum over the next few days.

What would the PSP secretary general like? What would the PSP standing committee like?

That the PCP say: M. Soares has made an agreement with the "Democratic Alliance" for the revision of the constitution. That agreement, if it is approved by the Socialist deputies, represents an imminent danger to the democratic system, but the PCP believes that the Socialist deputies should vote for that agreement because that is what their secretary general wants?

Is that what the PSP secretary general would like the PCP to say?

No. To ensure the Socialist deputies' doubtful voting discipline is a matter for the PSP. It is not for the PCP to ensure and defend that discipline.

Our duty (and we will perform it) is to seek to help ensure by our political activity that all democrats shoulder their responsibilities and intervene to prevent such an unconstitutional revision of the constitution.

This is precisely what our party's Central Committee did at its 31 May-1 June meeting.

The PSP standing committee's extraordinary, nervous, preciptitate and absurd reaction served only to confirm to what extent certain PSP leaders are sinking and continuing to sink into their alliance with the reactionary forces.

The PSP standing committee's proclamation that it has decided to "suspend" political relations with the PCP is at the same time ridiculous and demagogic.

How can the PSP standing committee suspend something that was suspended long ago? Sever something that was severed long ago?

On many occasions over the last few years -- on crucial occasions in the Portuguese situation -- the PCP leadership proposed to the PSP leadership meetings to jointly examine the situation -- without any commitment and without even procedural preconditions -- in order to consider the possibility of joint or convergent action to oust the "Democratic Alliance" from power and contribute to a democratic solution, to joint or convergent action in defense of the interests of the workers, freedoms, democracy, the democratic system and the constitution.

And every time we proposed these meetings the PSP leadership responded systematically by refusing to meet with the PCP, at the same time that it was meeting, negotiating and cooperating with the reactionary parties -- with the Social Democratic Center Party, with the Popular Democratic Party [former name of Social Democratic Party], with the "Democratic Alliance."

Can anybody regard as a good testimonial of loyalty to democracy the cooperation, alliance and collaboration with the reactionary parties -- with the political descendants of Salazar and Caetano -- and the refusal -- even to meet with -- much less ally itself and cooperate with -- the only party which led the struggle for freedom and democracy in Portugal throughout 48 years of fascist dictatorship and at the cost of the greatest sacrifices, and after 25 April [1974] in the most difficult and complex situations?

The ridiculous declaration that the PSP is suspending relations with the PCP is further proof of what the PSP standing committee constantly denies: its collaboration with the "Democratic Alliance."

Any socialist, any democrat, any citizen may ask: Why does the PSP standing committee bombastically assert that it is suspending political relations with the PCP, when it is not known ever to have suspended them with the reactionary parties -- rather, it has always sought alliances with them despite the most sordid attacks by those parties against all the democratic forces, including the PSP?

The PSP standing committee's statement has some aims in mind. As the 3 June note from our party's political commission emphasizes, it is seeking to distract attention and deceive public opinion about the gravity of the "Democratic Alliance" Mario Soares agreement: to create new sources of argument and discord among democrats, weakening the resistance to the "Democratic Alliance" and in defense of the democratic system; to seek, on the basis of anticommunism, to heal rifts and curb conflicts within the PSP, which the standing committee itself describes as an "internal crisis," and to restore artificially its unity, jeopardized by Mario Soares' alliance with the "Democratic Alliance.

However, this ridiculous declaration is another move doomed to backfire.

Rather than inciting the socialists and elements in the PSP against the PCP, it will incite them against the "Democratic Alliance," as the real enemy.

Rather than weakening the Portuguese people's struggle in defense of the constitution and of the democratic system, it will open many people's eyes to the dangers represented by the PSP/Mario Soares' alliance with the forces which wish to destroy the democratic system.

Rather than "isolating the PCP," as the PSP/Mario Soares proclaims and as the Social Democratic Party has just proclaimed; it will make clear that the PCP is the only major party which consistently and relentlessly combats reaction and defends the interests of the people, the country and democracy, and therefore, instead of being isolated, is increasingly intensifying and consolidating its ties with the masses and is increasingly winning the Portuguese people's sympathy, confidence and support.

The PSP secretary general and the PSP standing committee wish to stem the ever intensifying trend toward unity among democrats, toward cooperation between socialists and communists; they will not succeed.

Rather than stemming the ever-intensifying trend of cooperation by socialists with communists in defense of democracy, it will strengthen the awareness that the alliance necessary to democracy is not that of the democratic forces such as the PSP with the reactionary forces which wish to eliminate democracy, but the alliance of all democrats -- specifically, of communists and socialists, of the PCP and the PSP.

The PSP standing committee was mistaken, of course, if it believed that, in view of its resounding declaration, the PCP would go over to open warfare with the PSP and with the socialists; that the PCP would respond to the ridiculous declaration that the PSP was suspending relations suspended long ago with the PCP with verbal retaliation, by declaring, for instance, that it was severing relations with the PSP.

No, that is not our attitude.

The PSP secretary general and the standing committee are ordering the members of their party not to establish contacts, or links, or understandings, much less agreements with the Communists.

We, on the contrary, are telling the members of our party to establish contacts, links, understandings and, if possible, agreements with the Socialists.

At the same time that, hand in hand with the "Democratic Alliance," they are seeking to effect an unconstitutional revision of the constitution which is a danger to the democratic system, the PSP secretary general and his collaborationists are proclaiming that they want nothing to do with the PCP.

We, on the contrary, while firmly and tirelessly combating the "Democratic Alliance," proclaim that we want unity with all democrats, with the Socialists, with the PSP.

Our policy of unity among democrats is not propaganda, publicity or demagoguery. It is a real and consistent policy which stems from the deep awareness that that unity is necessary and essential to defend the interests of the people and of the country, to defeat reaction and its policy and to save, consolidate and continue the democratic system won with the April revolution and enshrined and institutionalized in the consitution of the republic.

And nobody will be so naive as to interpret the ridiculous decision to suspend relations with the PCP as a sign of strength and the PCP's persistence in advocating unity between communists and socialists as a sign of weakness.

The reverse is the truth. The PSP's decision demonstrates its nervousness and weakness, and the PCP's insistence on unity is a sign of its consistent policy, its firmness, its loyalty to democracy, and hence a sign of its strength.

Those who persist in allying themselves with reaction, by combating the PCP and sabotaging unity among democrats, run counter to the increasingly-strong tendencies and trends at the level of the working class, the people's masses and the most diverse democratic sectors toward rapprochement, understanding and joint or convergent action on the part of all democrats against reaction, against the "Democratic Alliance" and against the new dangers of fascism which the "Democratic Alliance's" plans entail.

SOCIALIST PARTY LEADERSHIP MEETING REPORTED

PM211329 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 15 Jun 82 pp 3-4

[Unattributed report on 14 June Portuguese Socialist Party national committee meeting in Lisbon: "Zenha Replies to National Committee Today"]

[Text] Salgado Zenha has told DIARIO DE NOTICIAS that, today, he will answer the request by his party's national committee that he resign his post as leader of the Portuguese Socialist Party [PSP] Parliamentary Group, while Jose Rabaca considers his suspension, decreed at the same meeting, a "subterfuge" for surmounting the "real" crisis affecting the PSP. Mario Soares, interviewed by Portuguese Radio 1, considered it incomprehensible that the president of the republic can say that he disagrees with the government reshuffle but fail to do "what we asked him to do, which is to dismiss the government" — which, according to the PSP secretary general, "has become a caretaker government.

The measures decreed by the PSP national committee at its meeting Sunday [13 June] were endorsed by Mario Soares as necessary to "put an end to the internal confusion."

The most important measure concerns the request that Salgado Zenha resign his leadership of the parliamentary group. The Socialist leader told DIARIO DE NOTICIAS that he will issue a definitive reply today.

After the meeting he said: "I do not like being shouldered out." If this implies a refusal to leave this post, it is envisaged that the political commission will withdraw its confidence vested in him and replaced him immediately.

One deputy of the majority sector said that Zenha may place his position at the parliamentary group's disposal, "but the latter will not accept it." This opinion, conveyed by ANOP, embodies an alternative yet to be examined by majority circles.

Be that as it may, everything seems to indicate that "there will be another crisis within the parliamentary group," according to several sources close to the former secretary that we contacted.

Another measure adopted by the Socialists was to suspend Jose Rabaca and to order the national disputes committee to expel him, "in view of his repeated public statements of support for the establishment of a new political party," according to a motion presented by Soares.

In this connection Jose Rabaca told DIARIO DE NOTICIAS that it is an attempt to surmount a "real crisis" by means of a "subterfuge." He added that "when nothing can be produced, a spectacle -- preferably a circus act -- is staged."

According to Jose Rabaca the PSP's crises are no different from those affecting the other parties, but he stressed that neither the Social Democratic Party nor the Social Democratic Center Party contemplated forbidding its members to contact "phantoms."

As for the reason for what he called his "excommunication," namely, the advocacy of the formation of another political party, Jose Rabaca stressed: "I calmly maintain the most resolute belief that the country needs a credible party in order to regard democracy as viable." Rabaca believes that some people are opting for a different solution. In his view this is because of the "erosion of the democratic hypothesis," "against which I will continue to struggle...inside or outside the PSP."

The document approved by the Socialist National Committee stresses that by advocating the formation of a new party Rabaca "lacked the moral and political dignity to leave the PSP." In this connection Rabaca considers it "ridiculous" that so many parvenus of the socialist "nomenklatura" "permit themselves to judge not only me but somebody of Salgado Zenha's statue."

The motion submitted by the present PSP leadership also demands, among other points, the dissociation of Salgado Zenha, Vitor Constancio and Antonio Arnaut from the national committee of support for Ramalho Eanes' renewed candidacy. Zenha responded to this measure by asserting that this committee "does not exist" and that since Eanes' election he has "ceased to belong to it."

The national committee also approved another document submitted by Soares concerning strategy. In it Eanes is asked to elucidate his political thinking "to the country."

Mario Soares is also instructed to convey to the president of the republic "the PSP's anxieties at the continuation of the crisis and the national need to hold a general election immediately after the law on the revision of the constitution has been promulgated."

During the meeting, opened by the PSP secretary general, who gave a summary of the motions to be submitted, Salgado Zenha also submitted a document, on which no vote was taken. Instead, Vitor Constancio submitted for consideration by the meeting a motion signed by the minority, which was rejected. Constancio argued the "vital need to harmonize and reconcile the party's differing opinions."

In Vitor Constancio's view, "the right to express opinions outside the party must not affect respect for the line of approach defined by the party bodies." But he also urged a "guarantee of neutrality from the party machinery regarding the various differing opinions that exist."

Speaking early yesterday evening on Portuguese Radio 1, Mario Soares described the PSP's decision regarding Salgado Zenha as "painful but justified and logical." Additipnally, the Socialist leader described as "inopportune" the president of the republic's appeals for independent candidates in the local elections, and said that the prime minister would not react "with political dignity" to the stances adopted by Ramalho Eanes regarding the recent government reshuffle.

Having described the way the reshuffle took place as unusual, Mario Soares said that "it is incomprehensible that the president of the republic can say he disagrees but fail to do what we asked him to, which is to dismiss the government." He also said that the government's dismissal and the revision of the constitution are separate issues, concluding that "this government has become a caretaker government."

Asked about a possible future coalition, Mario Soares said that "the PSP will not give any premature replies, since any reply would influence a future election," but he described the PSP's stance on such hypothetical agreements in the following two points: "The PSP will not return to the practice of minority governments and will not conclude circumstantial agreements; we will conclude agreements on the basis of our own program."

The Socialist leader said that he would question the president of the republic about the so-called Eanesist party, and he repeated the statement that "the national committee of support for President Eanes' renewed candidacy does not now exist but did meet," with which he replied to Socialist Party members who asserted at the party's previous national committtee meeting that the organization for the president's repeat candidacy did not exist. "The situation is unclear," Mario Soares commented, adding that he had been instructed by the party to clarify the matter directly with Ramalho Eanes.

Mario Soares also said that "it has been proven during the past 8 years of democracy that decisions to form new parties do not pay," and that "inconsistencies among those who invoke Eanesism are greater than those within the existing parties."

Still on the subject of the PSP's internal situation, Mario Soares said it depended on whether or not Salgado Zenha accepts the national political committee's decisions and on "how he accepts or refuses to accept the party's internal discipline." Mario Soares said that "the entire party awaits and indication that the PSP is not in the realm of anarchy."

PRIME MINISTER BALSEMAO DISCUSSES ECONOMY

LD212316 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 21 Jun 82

[Text] Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao said today that the revised constitution ought to provide for denationalization even if with strict limitations. He was speaking at a conference held at the Gulbenkian Foundation under the auspices of the FINANCIAL TIMES on the general topic of Portugal's new outlook.

Balsemao said that the revised constitution may be expected to continue to bar any denationalization because, he said, the democratic opposition has not yet managed to give up its outdated slogans on the matter.

The prime minister stressed that the curbs on Portuguese exports imposed by some industrialized countries -- including EEC ones -- are one of the major factors causing problems for our balance of payments. He is, however, hopeful that this problem will be solved in the near future, stressing that, at any rate, such an attitude would be unacceptable after Portugal's entry into the EEC.

After also describing as unacceptable any restrictions on the freedom of movement of Portuguese emigrants already in EEC countries, Pinto Balsemao stressed that Portugal's contribution to the EEC will be greater if the Portuguese economy is in a healthy state. He particularly mentioned our ties with Africa as an important contribution.

Finally the prime minister decribed as satisfactory the pace of negotiations for our entry into the EEC and voiced hope that the Community's internal difficulties will not delay the negotiations process.

MILITARY SECTORS SEEK TO GIVE COMMAND TO KING

PM211311 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 17 Jun 82 p 17

[Miguel Angel Aguilar report: "Military Pressures Against Calvo-Sotelo"]

[Text] The military governor of a province told a minister clearly last weekend that a sector of the army is very annoyed with Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo because of his statements after the judgment containing the sentences in the 23 February [1981 — date of attempted coup] trial was published Thursday, 3 June. In parliamentary circles it is asserted that the unease in these military sectors took shape in a document Sunday, 6 June, which they intended to convey to the king, although they finally refrained from doing so.

Circles close to the Defense Ministry acknowledged some days ago that the opinion surveys collected in the units and conveyed to the command register deep displeasure at the public criticisms which the sentence has received from the political leaders, and especially from the prime minister, to whose words an additional amount of aggressiveness is ascribed because of the immediacy with which they were broadcast by Spanish National Radio.

A senior government official admitted to EL PAIS yesterday that the prime minister's turn of phrase was unfortunate, when he acknowledged that he had not read the judgment, despite which he ventured to express a categorical opinion, without availing himself of the discretion afforded to him by the convening of the cabinet for the following day. Details are becoming known which point toward expressions of incompatibility with the head of government, which some observers deem similar to those noted in the last few months of Suarez' premiership, immediately before his resignation in January 1980 [as published]. Last, Socialist Party leader Felipe Gonzalez felt obliged at his last press conference, 4 June, to declare himself vigorously opposed to any attempt at a caretaker government, in whose favor pressures are making themselves felt again.

These frictions are intensified by the clear tendency of sectors of the military command to communicate directly with the king, invoking his position as supreme commander of the armed forces, without accepting the mediation of the government, with which it constitutionally rests to direct the civil and military administration, national defense and the conduct of war. Politicians and jurists unanimously agree that the supreme command of the armed forces assigned to the king is of a similar nature to other cases in the constitution, according to which justice is administered in the name of the king and it is the king who approves laws or who declares war or makes peace.

Vis-a vis the strict constitutional assumptions, the aim has taken hold in some sectors of the armed forces to invest the king with actual supreme command of the armed forces, disregarding the government's activity and real powers. The proponents of that line also advocate extensive institutional autonomy for the armed forces and a situation of self-government, without the executive power having left any role other than contributing the financial resources required.

CARRILLO PLAYS DOWN RECENT PCE UPHEAVALS

PM211555 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 16 Jun 82 p 17

["F.J." report on PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo 15 June press conference in Madrid]

[Excerpts] "We will do our utmost to ensure that the government remains until 1983, though obviously without making any fundamental concessions," PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo said yesterday at his first public appearance since last weekend's Central Committee meeting at which his resignation as PCE leader was rejected.

After stating that a real solution to the party's problems has been found and that the party is not in a state of crisis, Carrillo expressed slight optimism regarding the Communists' prospects in the next general election which, he stressed, the PCE will do its utmost to ensure takes place in 1983.

Carrillo again proclaimed the dangers of a political polarization in the country, attacking both to the right (Fraga) and to the left (the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE]. "The right is becoming a real threat to the country. Not only because of the establishment but also as a result of the fact that even within parliament there is a growing force still imbued with vestiges of the previous political system. A conglomeration of all the forces that want to change the most regenerative aspects of the constitution is forming around Fraga."

With regard to the PSOE, Carrillo said that "it is moving not toward a Mitterrand-type line but toward a Soares-type line, only worse. The Socialists are dissociating themselves more and more every day from revolution by democratic means and declaring themselves Social Democrats," the Communist leader said, flanked at the press conference by Deputy Secretary General Jaime Ballesteros and his legal adviser, Enrique Curiel.

Though the major part of Carrillo's lengthy opening statement — he spoke uninterruptedly for almost an hour — was devoted to the PCE's internal problems following last weekend's Central Committee meeting, the Communist leader did not once refer explicitly to Deputy Secretary General Nicolas Sartorius, who resigned. Later, he simply said that "none of us has broached the subject of appointing a new deputy secretary general," though he did admit that thought will be given to a possible expansion of the Executive Committee and Secretariat at a forthcoming Central Committee meeting. Carrillo said that the battle waged within the PCE over the past few days has centered on the decision whether or not to continue along the Eurocommunist path. He also said that the PCE has made "an unprecedented effort of regeneration" and that this line will be pursued, though "by regenerating ourselves we do not want to make a break with our history." Despite all press speculations concerning his resignation, Carrillo insisted that only at the last moment "and with an effort to swallow my pride" did he decide to withdraw his resignation, having seen that the whole Executive Committee supported him. He hinted that it was his party's enemies that invented the expression "Carrilloist old guard" and denied the existence of any such old guard or the preponderance of the so-called "party apparatus."

The Communist secretary general stated that the PCE will adopt a strategy of "political marketing" similar to that of other parties with respect to elections, but he gave assurances that this will not mean any recourse to outside financing from other countries, "though some claim that we are therefore being too quixotic. As long as I hold this post, the PCE will seek its financial resources at home."

He denied that the PCE has ever hindered the workers commissions' independence, though he was asked whether or not Communists working within the workers commissions defend party policy. With regard to the declared "open door" policy toward expellees from the PCE, Carrillo asserted that "personally, I would have no objection to those who have been disciplined resuming their former leadership posts on their return." However, he also warned that any measures of reconciliation and amnesty would be impossible, because they would imply a resumption of all the polemics.

Explains Resignation

PM211333 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 16 Jun 82 p 17

[Alberto Jacoviello interview with PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo; date not specified]

[Excerpts] Madrid — [Question] So, Santiago, you resign as party secretary general and then 2 days later announce that you will continue to hold the post. I do not know how these matters are regarded in Spain. Outside Spain not much has been understood of it. Would you care to explain it to me?

[Answer] My resignation was the consequence of an attempt within the party's Executive Committee itself to reverse the policy line laid down by the latest congress, held last year. Indeed, an attempt was made to impose a reconciliation with those who disagree with this policy, that is, with the Madrid group of so-called renewalists; with the Basques, who now belong to another party; and with the Catalonians, who have formed a pro-Soviet party. I believe that this would be disastrous for the PCE. So I resigned, saying: If you want to follow this path, then do so without me.

[Question] How long have you been secretary general?

[Answer] Since 1960.

[Question] That is 22 years. In all this time did you ever submit your resignation before, or consider standing down?

[Answer] No, never.

[Question] Do you believe that any secretary general of any other major communist party has resigned from his post or publicly submitted his resignation?

[Answer] I know of no such precedent.

[Question] I must therefore assume that your gesture could begin a new tradition for communist parties. Indeed, hitherto communist party secretaries general have been eternal, so to speak. Once elected, they held the post for life. But how should your gesture be interpreted: as a factor of democratic innovation or as the sign of profound unease within the PCE?

[Answer] I believe that no communist party is more democratic than Spain's. Let us not forget, for instance, that there was secret ballotting at our congress. Let us not forget that during preparations for it, majorities and minorities were formed which expressed themselves freely at the congress....

[Question] So should your resignation too be regarded as a democratic act?

[Answer] That is now how I see it. My resignation had a different meaning. I said: If the majority of the Central Committee no longer agrees with the congress line, then I am leaving. I will abandon the post of secretary general, not the party.

[Question] Was the Central Committee vote asking you to remain unanimous?

[Answer] No. There were four votes against. Not against my continuing to hold the secretary generalship -- which nobody challenged -- but against certain points in the policy document.

[Question] Santiago, let us talk frankly. You come on as a champion of party democracy. Indeed, many people acknowledge that you acted with political courage and steadfastness in breaking the ties of dependence on the CPSU and in adhering to the current that has formed within the international communist movement called Eurocommunism. But many others accuse you of managing the party by Stalinist methods and argue that this is the real cause of the continuous convulsions that are making it sick.

[Answer] That is a complete lie. They also say that I have formed a Central Committee in my own image and likeness. But I have already told you that the Central Committee was elected by a congress that voted by secret ballot. And if you look at the average age of the Executive Committee members, you will easily see that the great majority of them are barely over 40 years old. This means that they come from a political experience very different from mine. So how can it be claimed that they are Carrilloists?

[Question] Santiago, the three Eurocommunist parties are experiencing difficulties. Yours is so lacerated as to prompt you to make the dramatic and unprecedented gesture of submitting your resignation. Marchais's party is losing votes and it seems that participation in government is not helping it. Berlinguer's party is vacillating without adhering to a clear line, and his leadership group seems more and more split. How do you explain this?

[Answer] If we look at events in a historical perspective, temporary difficulties should not surprise or alarm us. Other parties have experienced worse moments. Guy Mollet's Socialist Party, for instance, virtually disappeared. Now its leader is president of the French Republic. The Eurocommunist parties are now basically suffering the consequences of the crisis that is affecting our society and creating very strong fluctuations in society. But Eurocommunism as a tendency is expanding. Other European communist parties are moving closer to our stances...

[Question] Santiago, Santiago, this is not a convincing answer. Perhaps you are right when you say that other communist parties are moving toward Eurocommunist stances. But that does not alter the fact that the voters do not seem at all convinced that the communist parties provide a real alternative. Do you not believe that this is the main point?

[Answer] There is another factor that you must bear in mind. The Western communist parties were helped a great deal by the USSR's prestige during World War II. Now, however, they are suffering as a result of the loss of that prestige because of Czechoslovakia, Afghanistan, Poland, and so forth....

[Question] So let us state the case as it really is, Santiago. The communist parties, whether Eurocommunist or not, are in fact the offspring of a historical defeat -- the historical defeat of real socialism. That is their problem. They no longer reflect models, and until they formulate their own autonomous and convincing model their decline will continue. It this not what is happening to the PCE too?

[Answer] Spain has its own specific character. We have said since the outset that, because of the very way in which the transition from Francoism to democracy took place, what was needed was a united front government — the only kind that could have the strength and prestige needed to make a break with the past and set the country moving toward a solid democracy. We were not heeded. This was due partly to our weakness and partly to the erroneous policy of the Socialists, who rejected our proposals.

[Question] Santiago, I ask you about the communists' crisis and you answer me by accusing the Socialists. What should they do? Refuse the votes the people cast in favor of their line, as in Andalusia?

[Answer] That is not what I am saying at all. What I am saying is that by rejecting a united front policy, the Spanish Socialists are creating illusions among the voters, indicating an easy way. Though this harms us, it harms above all the country, which cannot find the path of unity around a program capable of breaking with the past and building a solid democracy.

[Question] Why, do you not consider Spanish democracy solid?

[Answer] No, it is not solid. Moreover, the Socialists will come to realize it. Their policy is leading them into a blind alley. If they win the election they will find themselves having to face the entire bloc of the regime, which still stands, on their own, or having to considerably dilute their ambitions and thus devalue their victory.

LABOR MOVEMENT BACKS NUCLEAR-ARMS-FREE ZONE

PM211351 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 18 Jun 82 p 6

[Steinar Moe report]

[Text] The resolution on nuclear-free zones adopted at the Nordic labor congress means that the trade union movement and the social democratic parties in the Nordic countries have united around a common platform which details a number of conditions for such a zone in the Nordic area," Norwegian Labor Party Chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland said at the end of the congress in Sandefjord Thursday [17 June]. She told ARBEIDERPRESSEN that this resolution, along with the broad support given to the outline for disarmament endeavors contained in the Palme Commission's report, was one of the most important results of this year's congress. Labor Party Youth Section Chairman Egil Knudsen said that he agreed that this was a good point of departure for helping to move the work for nuclear-free zones a step forward. He stressed that it is the Nordic countries themselves which must push on with this work.

The congress statement on disarmament says that the proposal for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area is an element of the work to bring about nuclear disarmament in a broader European context and that the goal must be to prevent nuclear arms being used on, from or against Nordic territory. The labor congress took the view that such a zone must:

Promote detente and strengthen security in the Nordic area and in the whole of Europe; reduce the nuclear threat against the area; make a contribution to reciprocal reductions in the number of nuclear arms in Europe; and further develop the Nordic area's status as a nuclear-free zone.

The statement also mentioned a number of elements which could be included in such a zone: A ban on participation in nuclear tests; a ban on the deployment and stockpiling of nuclear arms; a ban on training of Nordic troops in the use of nuclear arms; a ban on docking or transit by warships carrying nuclear arms, and on similarly equipped aircraft flying through Nordic airspace, and checks on traffic through the Nordic area; undertakings from the nuclear powers not to use or threaten to use nuclear arms against areas within the zone; and undertaking from the nuclear powers not to threaten to use nuclear arms from within the zone.

SKP'S KAJANOJA NOW TO STAY WITHIN GOVERNMENT

PM211031 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 17 Jun 82 p 9

[Text] Finnish Communist Party [SKP] Chairman Jouko Kajanoja will remain in the government for the time being. The SKP Politburo discussed the government situation at its meeting yesterday and reached the conclusion that Kajanoja cannot leave the government in the present circumstances. In a press statement the SKP said that in connection with the draft budget for next year it is necessary for the government to adopt decisive measures to reduce unemployment and promote employment. At the present time the Politburo does not think it possible to withdraw Chairman Kajanoja from the government, the statement said.

After he had been elected party chairman, Kajanoja announced that he was ready to leave his post of labor minister in order to devote his whole time to his work as chairman. The SKP Politburo's decision must be seen as binding for the time being. Party sources said that it is possible that the question will be raised again in the fall, once the government has ironed out the budget proposal. The Politburo also discussed the preparations for the Eduskunta elections. The committee stressed the importance of each district drawing up a list of candidates broadly representative of the movement as a whole.

[Text] Lefkose, 21 Jun (AA) -- The session of intercommunal talks originally scheduled for Tuesday has been postponed until Thursday, 24 June. The session was postponed to allow special representative of the UN secretary general Hugo Gobbi to confer with both sides after his return from New York.

CAGATAY ON TURKISH CYPRIOT-TURKISH RELATIONS

TA211609 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1550 GMT 21 Jun 82

[Text] Lefkose, June 21 (AA) -- Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus said Monday relations with Turkey had attained new dimensions following his just completed visit to Ankara and Istanbul, accompanied by several ministers and three members of the Federated Assembly.

On his return at Ercan Airport, Cagatay said the visit had enabled him and his colleagues to see for themselves the stable development of Turkey in peace and calm, and reassured them of continued and increased Turkish aid to the efforts of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus to become self-sufficient. "We are returning to Cyprus with elated morale," he commented.

Briefings at the prime ministry and general staff (?headquarters) in Ankara had allowed them to get up-to-date information on the political, economic, and military situation in Turkey.

Discussions with Turkish Culture and Tourism Minister Ilhan Evliyaoglu had covered incentives to tourism in the Federated State, Cagatay said, announcing he had invited Evliyaoglu to visit Cyprus. Their visit to the Middle East Trade and Export Center "OTIM" in Istanbul had enabled them both to observe latest technological developments in Turkey and to discuss ways in which Turkish Cypriots could benefit from the activities and opportunities provided by the center, Cagatay added.

"We anticipate the future with renewed faith and confidence," he said.

PEACE COUNCIL HAILS BREZHNEV'S NUCLEAR PROPOSAL

NC220820 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 22 Jun 82 p 3

[Text] The Pan-Cypriot Peace Council has hailed the Soviet Union's decision not to be the first to use nuclear weapons.

A relevant statement says that Chairman Brezhnev's message to the UN General Assembly's special meeting on disarmament is an event of immense significance because it has come at a moment when international tension is at its peak and dangers of a military confrontation have become even greater as a result of imperialism's aggressive activities in sensitive areas. This is the case in Israel's blunt invasion of Lebanon where, with the direct support of the U.S. military machine, the most terrible crimes are being committed against the Palestinian and Lebanese people.

It has become clear, that statement adds, that the U.S. cold war policy is being condemned by the U.S. people themselves. A few days ago 1 million people took to the streets of New York with the demand for nuclear disarmament. This stentorian shout of the millions cannot be ignored for long. Nothing can stop the avalanche of the peace forces which are advancing in all parts of the world, concludes the Pan-Cypriot Peace Council's statement.

OIL SUPPLY AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH LIBYA

NC220715 Istanbul GUNES in Turkish 17 Jun 82 p 5

[Text] Tripoli (GUNES) — Turkey and Libya yesterday signed a bilateral economic agreement. The agreement, signed by Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal on behalf of Turkey and Minister of Housing al-Marqush and Minister of Planning al-Shakshuki on behalf of Libya, stipulates that Turkey will receive an additional 2 million tons of oil from Libya between July 1982 and July 1983. It has been stated that the purchase value of this oil, which is $482 million, will be used in the first 6 months to liquidate Libya's debts to Turkish exporters. Of the $482 million, 20 percent will be allocated to exporters and the balance will be kept separately in order to pay Turkish contractors what is already due them.

Meanwhile, Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal, who is due to leave for Paris this morning where he will participate in the OECD conference, has also discussed the problems of the Turkish workers in Libya. The day before yesterday, Ozal requested Ibrahim al-Faqih Hasan, Libyan minister of social security, to take steps toward extending social security and health insurance benefits to Turkish workers in Libya.

COMMERCE MINISTER ADDRESSES TURKISH CYPRIOTS

TA211715 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 Jun 82

[Text] The Turkish-Turkish Cypriot joint economic committee began its meetings in Ankara today. Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk is heading the Turkish delegation while the Turkish Cypriot delegation is being led by Trade and Tourism Minister Nazif Borman. In a statement prior to the meeting, Canturk said that relations of trade, industry, transportation, agriculture and tourism between Turkey and the TFSC and concrete measures to bring cooperation in these fields to its highest level would be discussed during the talks. Recalling that Turkey attributed great importance to the strengthening of the Turkish Cypriot economy, Canturk said that the TFSC was exerting arduous efforts in order to develop its economy. Canturk noted that Turkish Cypriot imports from Turkey in 1981 increased by 64 percent, reaching 5 billion Turkish lira, while its exports to Turkey during the same period increased by 68 percent, reaching 771 million Turkish lira. Pointing out that a package of measures aimed at strengthening the Turkish Cypriot economy was being prepared, the Turkish commerce minister said that these would provide the TFSC with a strong economic infrastructure.

Replying to Canturk, the Turkish Cypriot trade and tourism minister said that the Turkish Cypriot community had no economic independence prior to 1974, adding that Turkish Cypriot economic institutions were established only after the Turkish peace operation.

Borman said that the Turkish Cypriot GNP which was only 2 billion Turkish lira in 1974 reached 25 billion Turkish lira while foreign trade volume which was 1 billion Turkish lira had reached 16 billion. He added that similar achievements were made in the fields of transportation, tourism, cooperatives and culture. Borman said that efforts would be made during the talks to decide on measures that will increase production and GNP in the TFSC, expressing his belief that Turkey would extend significant aid on this subject.

Turkish Cypriot Minister of Industry and Cooperatives Ismet Kotak is also participating in the meetings of the committee.

HURRIYET REPORTS ON SECRET GREEK ARMY GROUP

NC220747 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 20 Jun 82 p 5

[Text] Nicosia (HURRIYET) -- Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, who has been subjected to two attempted coups and who has carried out two major liquidations in the armed forces since he assumed office, is again in trouble with his army.

A communique secretly distributed in Greece and in the Greek Cypriot sector yesterday, bearing the signature of an organization known as "the national unity of Greek officers," characterized Karamanlis and Papandreou as "traitors and charlatans" playing with the honor of the Hellenic nation.

The communique, which was written in Greek and English, addressed itself to "the members of the Greek Armed Forces and patriotic fellow countrymen." It argued that the "connivance of this vicious administration, which gambles on the national interests and honor of the Hellenic nation, is tantamount to betraying the fatherland."

This communique, which maintains that the Greek Armed Forces will soon take over the administration and try "the traitors and charlatans" before independent courts and that the constitution, which is open to every form of corruption, will be temporarily suspended to give a chance to "virtuous persons to establish true democracy," has created much excitement.

The communique also argued that communist collaborators have infiltrated all sectors of the administration and that relations with the NATO alliance, needed for the security of the national existence of the Greek people, and with the "friendly countries with which we have to be on the same front" have been brought to the breaking point."

TCP'S BILEN ADDRESSES SOFIA CONFERENCE

TA211240 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 21 Jun 82

[Text] Dear Listeners, as you know, the 100th birthday of Georgi Dimitrov was celebrated throughout the world a few days ago. The international conference organized in Sofia was undoubtedly the focal point of all these celebrations. We are now going to present you with an extensive summary of the statement made by Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee Secretary General at this conference. Comrade Bilen began his speech as follows:

Dear Comrades, we are very happy to attend this conference organized on occasion of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Georgi Dimitrov, one of the outstanding leaders of the world communist movement and a loyal son of the Bulgarian people. It is our duty to extend our most sincere thanks to the Central Committee of Dimitrov's Leninist Party, the Bulgarian Communist Party [BCP], for having given us the opportunity to participate in this conference and for the warm hospitality shown us.

We, in this speech, would like to express the great current significance of Dimitrov's principles and ideals for the struggles of the Turkish working class and all the forces of peace and democracy. However, above all, we would like to point out that we have once again witnessed in Sofia that the Bulgarian working class and the toiling people have successfully fulfilled, under the leadership of the BCP and its outstanding secretary general, Comrade Zhivkov, the will of Dimitrov, saying, "We have to achieve within a few decades what other countries have achieved in a hundred years under different circumstances."

The Bulgarian people have been able to achieve these superior successes because they have always been loyal to the path drawn by its great leader and teacher, Dimitrov, and to Bulgarian-Soviet brotherhood. Today, the Bulgarian people are advancing with strong steps in their struggle for the establishment of the developed socialist community and for the preparation of the material foundation for a transition to communism.

Comrade Bilen expressed TCP views on the question of "peace or war," the most important international question of our time. He expressed the true face of Reagan's policies. He also stressed the importance of the peace initiatives taken by the socialist countries and the Soviet Union. Noting that the TCP supports all world forces struggling for peace and against imperialism, he expressed appreciation for the solidarity of brotherly parties with our people and our party under the oppression of the reactionary military dictatorship. Exposing U.S. imperialism's plans in connection with our country, Comrade Bilen continued:

In its recent Central Committee plenum held in May, my party gave priority to the duty of mobilizing all forces in a bid to form a strong people's resistance for peace and against U.S. imperialism. There are large forces in our country that favor peace. The junta is barbarically oppressing all these forces. For example, members of the Turkish Peace Committee are currently being prosecuted in junta courts with anticommunist accusations, and prison sentences of up to 30 years are being demanded for them. However, this attitude cannot destroy the struggle for peace. Even the press, which under the junta's heavy censorship has raised its voice against the U.S. imperialism's dangerous plans directed toward our country. Of course, our party is struggling for the more effective participation of these forces in this struggle. We maintain that the junta's barbaric attacks and its persecution of peace-lovers cannot prevent courageous participation in the struggle for peace. Given the current situation, those who cannot risk being prosecuted will find themselves threading along imperialism's path toward nuclear suicide.

The junta's attack on the forces of peace is not only in the form of brute force and terror, it is at the same time trying to deceive many democrats capable of joining the peace struggle by instigating chauvinistic feelings against the Greek, Armenian and Kurdish peoples. It is impossible to wage a successful struggle for peace without struggling against chauvinism, without waging an uninterrupted campaign of ideological clarification in the name of friendship among peoples and without believing in the international proletariat.

We are also aware of the fact that, with this current atmosphere of reaction and attempts to poison our people through chauvinism, it is impossible to wage a successful struggle for peace and the friendship of peoples without adopting a Leninist attitude toward national nihilism. Dimitrov's advice on the issue made many years ago is very precious for us as well. Given the current complex conditions, Turkey's attitude toward a series of international problems carries an importance for regional and world peace that cannot be underestimated. This attitude, above all, might depend upon the unity of forces favoring peace and democracy in Turkey and the strength of their struggle. The TCP appeals to all forces favoring peace to join the struggle to secure peace and to relieve Turkey from being a factor of tension in the region and to fulfill the following points: Our territory should be purged of all nuclear arms and depots. Turkey should benefit from the Soviet promise that it will not use nuclear arms against countries not deploying nuclear arms within their territories. Turkey should benefit from this historic opportunity. Not a single person favoring peace and wanting close friendship and cooperation with the Islamic countries approves of the NATO decision to use Turkish soil for the Rapid Deployment Force. The U.S. Rapid Deployment Force should under no circumstances benefit from Turkish soil. Permission should not be granted for the use of Turkish soil in provocative actions against Iran. An end should be put to the spy flights being carried out from NATO and U.S. bases stationed in Turkey. The plan to deploy AWACS in Konya should not be realized. There should be bilateral talks between Turkey and Greece outside the framework of NATO without delay in a bid to secure a peaceful and just solution concerning the Aegean, based on the equality of the two countries. The Turkish Armed Forces should withdraw from Cyprus without any preconditions. The TCP believes in the sovereignty, territorial integrity, independence and nonalignment of Cyprus.

It proposes that the whole of the island be purged of armed forces. The TCP supports efforts directed toward an international conference for securing a peaceful, just and lasting solution in Cyprus and the continuation of the intercommunal talks for the solution of the problems existing between the two communities on the island. Turkey should support the Soviet proposal and should oppose the plan to deploy U.S. nuclear missiles in Central Europe. An end should be put to the constantly increasing arms expenditures, plans for the purchase and construction of U.S. planes capable of carrying nuclear arms should be rejected, and cuts from military expenditures should be channeled into social fields. It is impossible to prevent Turkey from being involuntarily dragged into dangerous adventures without taking these most urgent steps.

The TCP believes that Turkey should above all withdraw from NATO. It should dismantle the U.S. bases and annul all the bilateral slavery agreements in order to transform Turkey from a factor of tension in the region to one of peace. A nonaligned Turkey favoring peace can establish genuine relations of friendship with all its neighbors and can attain new possibilities for the solution of the profound economic and social problems now crippling it. This means the formation of a strong foundation for our people's freedom and their democratic rights.

Speaking at the conference in Sofia on the occasion of Dimitrov's 100th birth anniversary, Comrade Bilen went on to explain the junta's oppression in Turkey, the struggles of our people and the struggle waged by the TCP on the issue of the constitution. He said that the party was continuing its struggle under these difficult conditions and that it attached great importance to revitalizing its activities among the masses. He then related Dimitrov's contributions to the TCP. Bilen said:

Dear Comrades, before concluding, I would like to refer to the most current and urgent problem of our joint movement at this historic period when the question of peace or war -- namely, the future of humanity -- is a subject for discussion. The answer is to further strengthen the unity of the world communist and workers parties. The unity of the world communist movement is more important than ever. It is clear that the most important role in gaining new victories against imperialism and in securing world peace falls upon the world communist movement. This spectatular jubilee taking place in Dimitrov's homeland best expresses the strength and expansion of the world communist movement.

Today, at this conference we obviously are stronger. No matter how different the conditions they work under and how different the problems they deal with, these parties are united in trying to fulfil the lofty internationalist duty of thwarting the aggressive policy of imperialism and of securing world peace.

As was stressed by Comrade Brezhnev at the 26th congress, the arduous struggle of the communists for peace and against the aggressive policy of imperialism and the arms race, which encompasses the danger of a nuclear holocaust, is a significant factor in strengthening the unity of the world communist movement and increasing its respectability. With the belief that we share the views of the overwhelming majority of fraternal parties, we would like to stress this bare truth. We owe this day, in other words the fact that humanity has been able to avoid a nuclear destruction since 1945 when the first atomic bomb was exploded, to the Soviet Union. At the same time, we are learning from its past, from the rich experience of the Great October Revolution led by Lenin. We see our future in the example of the current lofty Soviet Union.

The memories of the Turkish-Soviet friendship established during our national liberation war have not been erased from the minds of our people. The junta, which is trying to keep up with the crazy arms policy of the likes of Reagan, and the reactionary propaganda machine in its service are trying to erase these memories. The campaign of slander against the Soviet Union, the bastion of peace, is gradually increasing. Reaction is mercilessly attacking us, the communists, and the other forces of peace and democracy with the lie of the so-called Soviet threat. We now see that Italian Communist party leaders have emerged with a line strengthening the imperialist lie concerning the Soviet threat. While the junta is trying to divert us from the lofty path of the October Revolution and the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, we are hearing similar advice from the leaders of the Italian Communist Party. While we are preparing the masses for the struggle against intolerable exploitation, unemployment and lack of housing, in short against deprivation; while we are proud of the gradual development of socialist democracy; and while we observe the revolutionary effects of these phenomena in ourselves, we are astonished to witness the fact that the Italian Communist Party leadership is slandering real socialism with all its gains. These developments do not help the struggle in our country; on the contrary, they damage it.

Dimitrov's statement to the effect that the attitude toward the Soviet Union of every individual and organization within the workers movement is the touchstone of his or its loyalty to the socialist cause: the interests of the working class, is still valid today. The struggle against the enemies of the Soviet Union and the socialist countries is not the duty of communists alone but also of all those in favor of peace and democracy. As has been pointed out in the report read at the recent plenum of our Central Committee, our party has experienced the Leninist view concerning the international importance of the October Revolution.

Dear comrades, the current complex world conditions and the increasing duties of our movement makes the holding of a new international conference of the world communist and workers parties imperative. It is clear that such a move will further strengthen the international unity of our movement and give additional strength to the forces of peace and social progress to pursue their struggle. I thank you for your attention.

TCP ISSUES STATEMENT ON PEACE COMMITTEE TRIAL

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee statement dated 21 June 1982 -- read by announcer]

[Text] The shameful trial of the Turkish Peace Committee officials begins in Istanbul on 24 June 1982. The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] calls on all our citizens and every sensible politician to turn their attention to this trial. Leading scientists, artists and politicians, the officials of mass organizations having hundreds of thousands of members will be put on trial. In his indictment, the fascist Colonel Takkeci demands prison terms of up to 30 years just because these persons, the pride of our country and our people, defended peace and struggled to turn our country into a peace factor in the region.

The only truth that cannot be concealed in the world today is that the main question which concerns all the peoples and all the countries in the world now is the question of war or peace. The Peace Committee officials adopted an active stand regarding this issue. They expressed our people's desire for peace.

The junta administration, however, supports the policies of the U.S. administration which constitute the source of the danger of war. For this reason, the junta is subjecting to heavy oppression all those who want to prevent our country from being dragged into fire at the hands of the U.S. administration and the NATO chiefs.

The Peace Committee trial was started directly on the initiative of the ultra pro-American and extreme reactionary General Ersin [ground forces commander and National Security Council member] -- initiatives which even violated the bans imposed by the junta itself.

The junta generals do not have even one piece of evidence that might justify their barbaric oppression of the progressive and patriotic forces.

In his indictments in the Peace Committee trial and the TCP Istanbul trial, the fascist prosecutor Takkeci produces as so-called evidence the charge that these organizations work for the Soviet Union.

The junta generals are trying to base these gross anticommunist and anti-Soviet allegations on the primitive lie that the Soviet Union threatens our country. However, Soviet President Brezhnev announced in a message to the UN disarmament conference that as of 15 June 1982 the Soviet Union would never be the first to resort to nuclear warfare first. This is a historic step. If the United States and the other countries having nuclear weapons follow in the footsteps of the Soviet Union, it is obvious that the danger of war can be prevented.

The junta administration does not disobey the U.S. administration. During the NATO summit in Bonn, the junta's prime minister, Ulusu, voted in line with Reagan's desires on all issues. The junta's foreign minister, Turkmen, ignored the concrete proposals for peace and disarmament posted at the United Nations.

The situation is extraordinarily serious, the junta is pushing Turkey toward fire in order to receive the U.S. administration's support and strengthen its dictatorship. It is not using the option of saving Anatolia -- with all its people, Turkish and Kurdish, with all its historic works of civilization -- from a nuclear war that will completely destroy it.

In the face of the latest step taken by the Soviet Union, the truth is unequivocally and undebatably clear: If our lands are purged of the United States' nuclear weapons, then our country will be saved from the destructive results of a possible nuclear war. It is these nuclear missiles that threaten our country. The U.S. and NATO bosses who insist on the strategy of the first nuclear strike, are turning our beautiful country into a target of a nuclear war.

[The junta] is trying to let the Peace Committee officials rot in the dungeons because they opposed all these things, because they are carrying out an honorable and great duty.

The TCP calls on all our people: Let us save the Peace Committee officials from the hands of the junta. Let us not put peace on trial. Let us get rid of the U.S. nuclear missiles in our country. Let us save our future.

VOTCP RAPS NATO GENERAL ROGERS' VISIT TO TURKEY

TA221028 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 22 Jun 82

[Station commentary: "NATO's Inauspicious Owl, General Rogers, Is in Turkey Once Again"]

[Excerpts] Gen Bernard Rogers, the commander of the NATO Eurpoean allied forces is in Turkey once again. It is not this NATO chief's first visit to Turkey. Rogers came to Turkey twice secretly in July and August 1980, before the 12 September coup. At the time, he went back and forth between Ankara and Athens ensuring that, in line with the Rogers plan, Greece rejoined NATO's military wing. He had also imposed the NATO plan about the Aegean Sea on both Turkey ahd Greece.

Now the chief of NATO's military wing is in Turkey once again. This time he will hold direct talks with Evren. Rogers' visit comes at a time when Greece's relations with NATO are tense and when the junta in Turkey is speeding up its provocations against Greece.

On 17 June, the Soviet newspaper KRASNAYA ZVEZDA reported that the Greek Government had sumitted a note of protest to the Turkish Government following a violation of Greek airspace by 16 Turkish warplanes in the northern Aegean. The aim of the NATO chiefs is obvious: To use the reactionary junta in Turkey as a tool to threaten Greece and ultimately to impose the NATO plan on both countries. To use the chauvinistic provocations of the reactionary junta in Turkey as trump cards to break the anti-imperialist movement and anti-NATO resistance in Greece; to exacerbate the existing conflicts and tension between the two countries in order to impose NATO's hegemonistic plans on both countries under the guise of a mediator.

That is General Rogers' aim. In the comming days we will see whether this aim will be achieved or not.

On the other hand, it is reported that General Rogers will carry out certain inspections in Erzurum and Van. It is known that there is a nuclear weapons arsenal in Erzurum. The Van airport is being expanded to accomodate B-52 planes, which carry heavy strategic weapons, as well as F-111 aircraft. The British newspaper NEW STATESMAN reported that under a secret American plan, Van will be the general headquarters of the attack units called RDF. This is not a coincidence because the RDF is under the command of General Rogers.

It is obvious, Dear Listeners: First Pentagon chief Weinberger came to Turkey and the Turkish-American Joint Defense Group was set up. Then, the architect of the RDF, Richard Perle, arrived in April. He chaired the meeting of the Turkish-American Joint Defense Group. After that, Secretary of State and former NATO Commander in Chief Haig visited Turkey. Now, General Rogers, the commander of NATO's military wing and of the RDF, is visting Turkey.

Our country, which is groaning under the claws of the junta generals, has been turned into an inn for the U.S. and NATO warmongers. They each come with a new death plan. The junta generals stamp their approval on every death plan. The United States' and NATO's vultures are roaming above our country. The junta generals, who have opened our land to the United States' RDF, are demanding 30-year prison terms for officials of the Turkish Peace Committee. Fifty-two officials of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker unions are facing death sentences.

The TCP makes the following call on all our people against the junta generals' policies of treason and destruction: It is not our fate to be dragged into the flames of war by the U.S. administration. This can be resisted. The junta's oppression can be repelled. If all peace-loving forces unite and raise our voices we can win the struggle to live in peace and security. The artiwar popular movement rising in all countries today is on our side. The TCP calls on all peaceful and democratic forces to wage a joint struggle, shoulder to shoulder, against the U.S. death plans, the RDF, AWACS planes and nuclear missiles and against the junta.

[Excerpt] The topic of natural gas is on the Trade Minister Staribacher's agenda today. Soviet Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Nikolay Grigorevich Osipov arrived in Vienna today. Staribacher will be finalizing with him until Wednesday the agreements on new gas deliveries from the Soviet Union. As of 1984-85 1.3 billion more cubic meters of natural gas will be purchased from the USSR and there will be tough bargaining in the next few hours about the price. It will probably be a little less than 2.90 schillings per cubic meter.

VAN AGT SETS TERMS FOR UNIFIL CONTINUATION

[Text] New York, 17 Jun — According to Prime Minister van Agt, the situation in southern Lebanon, where the Netherlands UNIFIL detachment is deployed, is "completely intolerable." During talks with representatives of other UNIFIL nations he said that things could not go on as they had been. Since there are still Israeli troops in the Netherlands section, Dutch troops are unable to do anything.

It is said that the Israelis are using all means to attempt to prevent the Dutch unit from giving humanitarian aid to the local population. But despite this the Netherlands is prepared in principle to keep its troops in southern Lebanon, the prime minister said, on condition that the terms of service are fixed in a Security Council resolution. The other UNIFIL nations also gave their support to this position.

The informal talks took place at the request of Prime Minister van Agt. The Swedish foreign minister was also present. The other UNIFIL nations (Ireland, Senegal, Norway, France, Fiji, Nepal, Italy, Ghana and Nigeria) were represented by their UN ambassadors.

Next Saturday the UNIFIL mandate runs out, and it seems certain that it will not automatically be extended for another 6 months as has been customary in the past.

The intention is that on Friday morning [18 June] UN Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar will consult the members of the Security Council about a possible extension of the mandate. The Security Council will reach a decision on Friday or Saturday. According to a spokesman for the Netherlands UN mission yesterday there was still no suggestion that the Soviet Union would use its veto or that the United States would start to provide a section of UNIFIL forces.

The spokesman said that Van Agt was not trying to take the place of the Security Council with his proposal for informal talks, which took place at the Dutch mission's offices. No decisions were made and no conclusions were drawn, although it was said that those who participated in the talks were all more or less on the same wavelength. The possibility has not been ruled out that in the absence of a definite decision the mandate could be extended for a short period.

THATCHER ON POSTPONEMENT OF GIBRALTAR TALKS

LD212214 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2132 GMT 21 Jun 82

[Text] Mrs Thatcher said tonight Britain would not have been prepared to discuss the sovereignty of Gibraltar at talks which were to have taken place with Spain in Portugal this week. The prime minister was, in effect, confirming a strong Spanish belief that after the Falklands victory, Britain saw the talks as something of a cosmetic exercise.

Senior Spanish diplomats said tonight that was a major reason why Spain had sought the postponement of the talks and had not been prepared to lift the restrictions on Gibraltar which would have opened the frontier.

Mrs Thatcher, who was answering questions from Scandanavian journalists, said it was sad the talks had been postponed. She had hoped Spain would have lifted the restrictions on Gibraltar so talks could start -- but not on sovereignty. She said: "the fact is that the whole of our belief and the whole of the belief in democracy is that it is the people that matter.

"It's the people that shall have the right to make their own choice about their own future."

EC COMMISSION CHAIRMAN THORN CONTINUES VISIT

Views EC-U.S. Relations

AU251249 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 25 Jun 82 p 2

[Report on interview with Gaston Thorn, chairman of the European Community Commission, in Vienna on 24 June]

[Excerpt] In a talk with DIE PRESSE in Vienna on Thursday European Community Commission Chairman Gaston Thorn showed concern about the serious differences between the European Community and the United States. In Thorn's opinion it should be "very difficult" to resolve the problems which have arisen as a result of the latest exacerbation of U.S. embargo stipulation regarding the Soviet gas pipeline.

According to Thorn, it is necessary for both sides to come to talks very quickly and to get the quarrel under control. Otherwise, the results of numerous talks would be "encumbered with a burden." In this context the commission chairman expressly referred to the GATT conference scheduled for the end of 1982. "We must get things under control even before the summer holidays, or at the latest by the fall."

Thorn stressed that he did "not want any retaliation, any war." No one is interested in such an escalation. Nevertheless, he said, he had been compelled to explain to the Americans "that we cannot put up with this because it is unjust, it will not lead to anything good, and it tears open many wounds." These tensions are "bad for international trade, and even bad for America."

The European Community politician expressed disappointment at the fact that, with his latest embargo measures, U.S. President Reagan has broken promises he made to the Europeans at the Versailles world economic summit early in June. Thorn literally declared: "Quite frankly, if a friend does something one would not have expected of him, one is disappointed."

Commenting on the latest remarks by French President Mitterrand about the disadvantages the European Community would incur through Spain's joining it, Thorn called these remarks as something "not to be taken too seriously." Thorn did not exclude the possibility that this might be an indication of a veto by the French chief of state. It has been known for a long time that some problems exist, and it cannot be ruled out that the European Community's third enlargement might involve even more problems than did the second one. But now it is necessary to tackle these problems and to resolve them, he said.

Comments on Lebanon

AU251124 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1600 GMT 24 Jun 82

[Harry Sichrowski interview with European Community Commission Chairman Gaston Thorn and Chancellor Kreisky in Vienna on 24 June -- recorded, in German]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Chairman Thorn, one of the main topics of your talks with Chancellor Kreisky was the Lebanon issue. To what extent do you share the chancellor's views, to what extent are your views or those of the European Community different?

[Thorn] Let me tell you first of all that of course I have come to Vienna to discuss the economic relations between Austria and the Community now that our agreement has been in effect for 10 years. But the current events in the Middle East have unfortunately taken up a large part of our time at the talks. Like the chancellor, the Ten, which perhaps has hardly ever before spoken so clearly and so sharply as it did on 9 June, condemns the attitude of Israel, which invaded Lebanon and still refuses to comply with the UN resolutions and to withdraw.

We are of the opinion that Israel, as well as all other forces which have occupied Lebanon, should withdraw as quickly as possible, as fast as they can, so that we can all then help to reunite Lebanon, to restore its sovereignty and to build it up again.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, it is known that you have a very definite attitude toward the events in the Middle East. Are you, in general, satisfied with the attitude of the European Community, and of Chairman Thorn?

[Kreisky] Chairman Thorn is an expert on the Middle East. I know that it goes chiefly to his personal credit that on several occasions the Community took such clear-cut positions on Middle East questions, and that it showed understanding. We actually believed that gradually U.S. public opinion would also undergo a change in this respect, and that thus a gradual change would also result in the Israeli position. Of course all that is futile at the moment. These hopes have been crushed by Israel's military action, by the war. Now the Community, as I see it, is a large political association of free democratic states, and hence I have used the opportunity of its chairman's visit for directing an urgent appeal to these states and governments to go a few steps further in the Lebanon issue. Needless to say we, Austria, would follow on this road.

Possibility of Sanctions

AU251125 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1730 GMT 24 Jun 82

[Report on 24 June talks between European Community Commission Chairman Gaston Thorn and Chancellor Kreisky in Vienna — recorded, in German]

[Excerpt] [Moderator] In addition to the bilateral questions the war in Lebanon was discussed in the Kreisky-Thorn talks. Both call for Israel's withdrawl. Chancellor Kreisky in reply to the question how this could be achieved said:

[Kreisky] Primarily I believe that the means that should be employed are the ones which are stipulated in the UN Charter. I cannot imagine that in the event of such a flagrant violation of international law, that is, starting a war, that all these means will not be used. That seems to me the most important aspect for the time being. The United Nations must make use of these means. They are primarily sanctions. As regrettable as this may be, there is no other way to deal with a belligerent.

[Question] Can the commission conceive the possibility of sanctions?

[Thorn] There has been talk about sanctions where other countries were concerned, on earlier occasions. And let me remind you that the Ten declared as early as 9 June that if Israel fails to comply with the demands of the United Nations and of the Ten, the Community would have to consider in the near future what further steps it must take. And I think that if one speaks of further steps, then sanctions are at least one of the possibilities or answers that are mainly available. Now I cannot predict what will happen — on Monday and Tuesday the state and government chiefs of the Ten will meet with the commission in Brussels, and we will of course discuss this problem. And by then the Community will have heard what Mr Kreisky's views are and what views are held by others, and I believe that now the time has come for Europe to answer, to take a stance.

[Report on Kreisky toast at a dinner given for Gaston Thorn, chairman of the European Community Commission, in Vienna on 24 June]

[Text] Vienna (AZ) — Sanctions against Israel because of its invasion of Lebanon have been demanded by Chancellor Kreisky. In a toast on the occasion of the visit of Gaston Thorn, chairman of the European Community Commission, he directed to the Europeans, to the Soviet Union and to the United States an ardent appeal to do everything possible to bring about Israel's immediate withdrawal from Lebanon.

Kreisky appealed to Washington and Moscow to "make joint efforts to halt the murdering." The chancellor referred to UNICEF reports that through the Lebanon war at least 10,000 people have been killed, 40,000 wounded and 600,000 forced to flee.

Kreisky continued: "We, who have survived the horrors of two world wars, must not create the impression that we have forgotten what we pledged at the end of World War II. Hence I direct an urgent appeal to the statesmen to jointly support the end of the fighting in Lebanon and to ensure that the Palestinian people at long last be granted their legitimate rights."

In his toast the chancellor then called upon the European Community chairman, who himself had made a fact-finding tour to the Arab world, as a witness "that there was a high degree of readiness for negotiations not only in most Arab countries but also in the PLO." The European peoples, Kreisky said, cannot remain silent if they do not want to lose all credibility in the Arab world." Israel's attitude, which constitutes a violation of international law, requires at least the use of the sanctions stipulated in Article 41 of the UN Charter. This article provides for cutting off trade, transport and communications relations with countries acting counter to unequivocal UN decisions.

On Thursday, Kreisky received a letter from the Lebanese Government thanking him for the stance he had taken on the Lebanon war together with Kirchschlaeger and Mitterrand.

[Excerpt] Vienna -- Abdallah Franji, PLO representative in Bonn, described his talk with Chancellor Kreisky late in the evening on Wednesday as extremely cordial. In a talk with DIE PRESSE Franji paid tribute to the "solidaristic attitude" displayed by Kreisky vis-a-vis the Palestinians. Franji had brought the chancellor a message from PLO chief 'Arafat in which 'Arafat expressed the Palestinians' bewilderment at the unfeelingness [teilnahmslosigkeit] of the Western mass media in the face of the Israeli attitude in southern Lebanon.

CDA STILL UNDECIDED ON NUCLEAR ARMS DEPLOYMENT

PM241127 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 19 Jun 82 p 3

[Excerpt] The Hague -- In its updated election program the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] has once again avoided adopting any firm position on the deployment or otherwise of new nuclear arms in the Netherlands. "The CDA," the appendix to last year's election program 'A Meaningful Life' states, "does not want any steps to be taken on the deployment or otherwise of medium-range nuclear arms in the Netherlands which could harm talks in Geneva."

In this respect the CDA has taken a step backward from its earlier position. Last year it said that "at present" the Netherlands was unable to reach a decision and that if a decision were necessary at that moment, it would be negative. In its updated election program the CDA is leaving all its options open -- in the coming years the party could on the basis of this program move in any direction, although it is stated that policy is aimed at preventing the deployment of new nuclear arms.

VAN AGT COMMENTS ON ISRAELI INVASION OF LEBANON

[Text] The Hague, 19 Jun -- According to Foreign Minister van Agt, Israel's action in Lebanon is out of proportion and in conflict with international law. He said this yesterday in the Second Chamber, a majority of whose members were either critical or very critical of Israel's recent action.

The foreign minister agreed with a motion submitted by Labor Party member Ter Beek asking for an investigation into steps which could be taken in the event of an Israeli refusal to withdraw from Lebanon. However, he had greater difficulty in accepting a second Ter Beek motion concerning the involvement of Dutch industry in possible supplies of F-16 aircraft to Israel by the United States. The minister said that government intervention could harm the Fokker Aircraft Company, and also that it was impossible to ascertain which aircraft would receive the parts supplied by Fokker.

The minister also declared his agreement with a motion from Democrats '66 member Nuis condemning the Israeli action as "a flagrant violation of international law" and calling for the "withdrawal of Israeli and other foreign troops from Lebanon."

Van Agt declared that a full solution to the conflict is the Middle East is unthinkable without mutual recognition on the part of Israel and the PLO. On the question of the involvement of the PLO in peace talks he referred to the view of the EEC nations who have expressed their support for a place for the PLO at the negotiating table. The reestablishment of the soverignty of the legal government in Lebanon, called for in a motion by People's Party for Freedom and Democracy member Ploeg, was described by Van Agt as the objective of this policy. This motion also called for the withdrawal of all foreign troops with the exception of the UNIFIL peace-keeping force. Ploeg pointed out that he did not want to point an accusing finger in the text at any of the parties involved.

The foreign minister was opposed to a motion submitted by Van der Spek (Pacifist Socialist Party) calling for the immediate termination of Dutch participation in the UNIFIL force in Lebanon. Van Agt also disagreed with a motion from Communist Party of the Netherlands member Schreuders calling for support for the Palestinian Red Crescent.

The Chamber will vote next week on the motions submitted.

BONN LEADERS REACT TO HAIG'S RESIGNATION

Schmidt Sends Telegram

LD261048 Hamburg DPA in German 1004 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] Bonn, 26 Jun (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt thanked the resigned U.S. secretary of state, Alexander Haig in the name of the FRG, for his work and assured him of continuing friendship. In a telegram published on Saturday in Bonn Schmidt said that he is sad about his resignation. Schmidt confirmed Haig's great understanding of world problems and praised him as a creative statesman. Haig's firm belief in communality has been invaluable for the alliance and its member states.

Genscher Optimistic on Shultz

DW280832 Cologne ARD Television Network in German 2100 GMT 25 Jun 82

[Ernst-Dieter Lueg interview with Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Bonn; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] A friend of the Europeans has resigned from his post. What news have you received in his context?

[Answer] I believe that you are right in saying that Haig has been a friend of the Europeans. Above all he is familiar with our problems, and while secretary of state he always considered himself the guardian of U.S.-European relations. Viewed from this angle everyone among us will, of course, regret the personal decision he took, and all we can do is hope that under the impression of this decision the U.S. administration will continue a policy along the lines he had in mind, namely, a policy of close cooperation with Europe.

In this respect the personality of his successor actually gives cause to hope, because George Shultz is a man who, for reasons other than Haig's, feels allied with Europe, has many personal friends in Germany and Europe, including the chancellor, and in whose case we may be sure that, like his predecessor, he will endeavor to eliminate the problems between Europe and the United States to the extent that they exist.

[Question] Surely a U.S. action caused irritation here in Bonn. I mean the U.S. President's pipe embargo. Do you believe that this helped prompt the secretary of state to resign?

[Answer] It would be premature to form a judgment on this now. Yet, I will not rule out the possibility that this might be one of the reasons for Haig's personal decision.

[Question] Are you sure that the successor will really continue the great lines of transatlantic policy, or could something change after all in the European scene as a result of the personnel reshuffle?

[Answer] No, in that case I don't think so. As I said, the successor is a man who for reasons other than Haig's -- who knew Europe from his work here in NATO -- feels allied with Europe. And we should not forget that we have just had a NATO summit in Bonn by which the common positions in very decisive issues of the alliance have been stipulated once again. This NATO summit had been well prepared and therefore also forms a reliable basis for cooperation.

Apel Views Arms Talks

DW280845 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1800 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Defense Minister Hans Apel interview by reporter Lenz in Bonn; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Were you surprised by yesterday's resignation of U.S. Secretary of State Haig?

[Answer] I was very much surprised because I am an old friend of Al Haig's. He was for many years the commander in chief of NATO in Europe. I am also somewhat shocked. Yet it is not my business to comment on American policy. I am convinced that we will be able to pursue a good policy together as before.

[Question] Do you think that this resignation will have repercussions with regard to arms control negotiations which have just begun?

[Answer] I am not at all convinced of that. I am much more convinced that they will proceed according to plan because this has been agreed by NATO and confirmed as well as supported by President Reagan here in Bonn at the NATO summit meeting.

[Question] It has been learned that Haig resigned, among other things, because of the gas pipeline embargo with which he did not agree. Do you think that some positive changes might be in the offing in this respect and that Reagan has realized the signs and might possibly give in?

[Answer] I would wish it were so, but I cannot judge whether this will happen because this decision is naturally also casting a shadow at the very good results of Bonn and Versailles.

GENSCHER DISCUSSES NATO SUMMIT WITH USSR ENVOY

[Text] Bonn, 25 Jun (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher explained the decisions of the Bonn NATO summit, especially as regards East-West relations and questions of arms control and disarmament, to Soviet Ambassador in Bonn, Vladimir S. Semenov on Friday before his departure for Moscow.

The Foreign Ministry said that Genscher expressed the Federal Government's expectation that this sign of Western unity and this sincere signal of peace and understanding will be taken seriously in Moscow and will be positively answered. Semenov is traveling to the USSR for a vacation.

ISLAMIC CONFERENCE LEADER MEETS WITH GENSCHER

[Excerpt] Bonn, 25 Jun (DPA) -- In Bonn today the secretary general of the Islamic Conference organization, Habib Chatti, urged the Federal Republic and the other EEC countries to distance themselves from the U.S.' pro-Israeli stance in the Lebanon conflict and to support "right and justice." Following a meeting with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, Chatti told newsmen he regretted Bonn's restraint and did not exclude as a "last resort" sanctions by the Islamic countries against the West if Israel could not be persuaded to withdraw from Lebanon.

Chatti welcomed the Federal Government's basic support for the rights of the Palestinians and unconditional Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon but he said he would rather have a promise of action.

The former Tunisian foreign minister strongly rejected the demand by Israel and the United States for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon, that is to say the Syrians too. He pointed out that the Syrian units were stationed in Lebanon legally on the basis of a decision by all Arab countries, while Israel, he said, had violated international law and the UN Charter with its invasion. Genscher had told him that the European Community had still not defined its attitude in this queston.

Chatti, whose organization includes 43 Islamic states, reminded the Europeans that, in contrast to the United States, they had special ties, including economic ones, with the Middle East region. "In contrast to the countries on the other side of the Iron Curtain, the West Europeans are not satellites," Chatti said. "They are partners with the United States." To stand for right and justice meant in the case of Lebanon to adopt a different stance from that of the United States.

The Foreign Ministry in Bonn today spoke of "Israeli aggression" in Lebanon. A ministry statement said that Genscher's talk with Chatti focused on the question of "how an end can be achieved to Israeli aggression." Genscher had again stressed the need for the reestablishment of Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Chatti, whose agenda also included a meeting this afternoon with Hans-Juergen Wischnewski, minister of state in the chancellor's office, stressed several times that at the moment it was premature to speak of sanctions by the Islamic world against the West. But when all diplomatic and other possibilities had been exhausted there could be a repeat of the 1973 Arab oil boycott. He welcomed Baghdad's announcement that Iraqi troops would be withdrawn from all Iranian territory by the end of June as a "factor favoring a peace" between Iraq and Iran. The two Islamic states had, however, weakened the Arab world with their war, facilitated the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and served Western interests.

DEFENSE OFFICIAL URGES EXTENDING MILITARY SERVICE

[Excerpts] Bonn, 27 Jun (DPA) -- Klaus-Dieter Leisler, secretary of state in the Ministry of Defense, believes that the Bundestag should decide on the extension of basic military service from the present 15 months to at least 18 months as early as 1985. In an interview on South German Radio Leisler said on Sunday that the legislation in question should be rackled right at the beginning of the new legislative period. The measure is necessary since the expected fall in the birthrate caused by the pill will become evident as early as 1985.

Leisler said that the long-term commission on the future of the Bundeswehr estimates that if no changes are introduced the Bundeswehr will have approximately 100,000 fewer soldiers in 1995. In the interests of security, exemption from military service will have to be reduced. Many young people are entering the federal border guards or the police rather than the Bundeswehr. This practice will have to reduced in favor of the forces.

OFFICIAL PREDICTS WOMEN IN BUNDESWEHR BY 1985

[Text] Hamburg, 27 Jun (DPA) -- The inspector general of the Bundeswehr, Juergen Brandt, has in an interview for the Monday edition of HAMBURGER ABENDBLATT voiced the opinion that "security is no longer guaranteed without women in the Bundeswehr." Brandt explained that it was not the case, as in World War II, of having a load of girls for menial work. The inclusion of women in military service made sense only if all the ranks, right up to that of general, were opened for women. Given the legal framework, he saw volunteer female soldiers in the barracks in fairly large numbers from 1990 onwards, but the first officer cadets in around 1985.

An edited version of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

BRANDT: U.S. EMBARGO 'DISTURBING, UNREASONABLE'

LD251408 Hamburg DPA in German 1234 GMT 25 Jun 82

[Text] Bonn, 25 Jun (DPA) — SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has described the American administration's decision to intensify its trade embargo against the Soviet Union as "extremely distrubing and unreasonable." Referring in Bonn today to Washington's embargo policy, which is hindering the natural gas pipeline deal between several West European countries and the Soviet Union, Brandt said that "the European allies ought not to be treated in this manner." Brandt indirectly urged these countries to stick to their legitimate interests in this deal.

In a speech to the German-American security conference of the Friedrich-Ebert Foundation, Brandt called upon the United States and the Soviet Union to show mutual accommodation and trust in order to make progress possible in disarmament in particular. He said that a zero option at the Geneva negotiations on nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe could only be achieved "if the negotiating partners do not adhere rigidly to their initial positions but soon take steps toward one another."

Brandt said that there are great hopes in connection with a summit meeting between President Ronald Reagan and Soviet party and state head Leonid Brezhnev which might take place in the autumn. He said that it ought to reestablish a minimum of mutual trust, without which relations between the world powers and efforts for arms control could make no progress.

Pipeline Deal Will Go Through

LD272126 Hamburg DPA in Germany 2052 GMT 27 Jun 82

[Text] Cologne, 27 Jun (DPA) -- Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff said that he is under no illusions that the new American secretary of state, George Shultz, will hold a different opinion with reference to the gas pipeline deal than that of U.S. President Ronald Reagan. In a Westdeutscher Rundfunk [WDR] Television interview Lambsdorff said on Sunday evening that he does not believe that a difference of opinion could reappear there. This subject would be discussed calmly and carefully. Lambsdorff appeared confident that this deal would be carried through and the pipeline built. "We will receive the gas, though the American measures can somewhat impede, delay and make this more expensive. But there is no doubt that the countries involved are technically in a position to carry this deal through."

Paper Views Consequences

[Eberhard Wisdorff commentary]

[Text] Once again the governmental window dressers have laid it on much too thick. The artfully errected edifice of the Versailles summit agreements of the seven most important industrial countries just slightly more than 2 weeks ago is a shambles now that the United States has destroyed the laboriously created trust through a number of concrete steps. Federal Economics Minister Lambsdorff seemed to have an early foreboding when he, during the conference, set agreement on the minimum interest rates and Washington's department on the issue of punitive steel tariffs as the criterion for a successful meeting.

It becomes even worse. The announcement of compensatory tariffs, the continuing difficulties regarding the issue of interest rates and the completely diverging interpretation of the agreement on reserve in the grant of credits to the East immediately after the summit were followed by the extension of the U.S. embargo against the Soviet Union to European licensees with all its consequences on the international legal awareness, the division of labor and loyalty to reaties.

The latest critic in the Bundestag on Wednesday was Finance Minister Lahnstein who, with a view to Washington's step, spoke of a hardly understandable politization of important sections of world trade.

This is true indeed in the relationship between Europe and the United States. A dangerous mixture emerges from the pursuit of the stubborn Ostpolitik concepts of the United States and the disregard for evolved rules of international economic exchange. The discussion on the role of trade with the East and the credit relations with the Warsaw Pact has lately been waged broadly enough with all the pros and cons. Likewise it was clear that the basic positions could not be bridged between Washington and the Europeans. Yet, the brutal U.S. course of action allows conclusions which hitherto had not been evident with such clarity.

1. Reagan pursues his Ostpolitik concept of wringing concessions from Moscow adamantly, despite his conciliatory deportment in Europe.

2. The efforts to maintain free world trade and the struggle against protectionism just avowed in Versailles will be seriously impaired. Modes of deportment similar to a trade war cannot be ruled out, as indicated by initial utterances of French European Affairs Minister Chandernagor in the EC Council of Ministers.

3. The Federal Government must reckon that Washington's pressure will continue with regard to a reduction in the Hermes guarantees for business with the East. Bonn had not derived this commitment from the Versailles agreements.

4. Reagan's course of action is bound to enhance the doubts of whether a change has taken place in Washington's North-South policy on whether this policy will further be made to predominantly serve the goals of Ostpoltik.

5. Shadows are also cast on the forthcoming disarmament negotiations and on the will to achieve genuine progress.

Bonn cannot possibly be spared the accusation of an erroneous assessment. Lahnstein admitted this indirectly in the Bundestag. The repair of the rifts in European-U.S. relations will take time and strength.

'Reagan Tramples Free Trade'

DW240927 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 25 Jun 82 p 15

[Rudolf Herlt Commentary]

[Text] It will no longer be possible to take avowals at world economic summits so seriously. At the last summit in Versailles the heads of state and government from the seven most important states of the noncommunist world had agreed "to pursue vis-a-vis the USSR and Eastern Europe a reasonable and nuanced economic course of action in harmony with our political and security interests." Earlier they had renewed the solemn vow that they would "resist protectionist pressure and trade-distorting practice" so as to promote stability and jobs through trade and growth.

U.S. President Ronald Reagan had hardly returned home when his administration ordered compensation tariffs against European steel imports. But this was only the first move. The second followed directly in its wake. Without consulting Bonn the President decided to prohibit not only U.S.-supplier deliveries for the planned European-Soviet natural gas pipe deal but also such deliveries by foreign licenses of U.S. companies and by U.S. subsidiaries abroad.

Obviously he cannot foreget the idea of enforcing political good behaviour by Eastern rulers by punitive actions. The natural gas pipe deal is one of the standard topics of the members of the Washington government who demand hardness toward the Soviet Union. In a rather starry-eyed fashion they expect the Soviets to be unable to continue arming if they cease earning any Western foreign exchange.

The Federal Government sees advantages to both sides in this deal, because Western firms are supposed to supply all technical installations and the pipes while the Soviets will pay later with gas deliveries. Reagan considers the deal a transaction which will make the Soviets richer and the European gas consumers more dependent on the Soviets. Telefunken AEC-Corporation, which is struggling for survival, has received a order for 47 of the total of 120 gas turbines. Because of the U.S. sanctions at the beginning of the year, which applied solely to U.S. companies, the U.S. General Electric Corporation was unable to supply the rotors by which the pressure is produced in the Siberian-European natural gas pipeline.

The AEG corporation had stated even then that is has licenses that would allow it to produce the rotors on its own. Yet the licensee would be violating the contract if he failed to join the boycott by the Americans. If the licensee had already been obligated to join any boycott under the license contract, the intensification of the sanctions would have been unnecessary. But Reagan also intended to prevent European subsidiaries of U.S. trusts from carrying out the orders that had been banned for their parent enterprises and their licensees.

This is a blow to international division of labor. Without the mutual exchange of technical know-how this division of labor just cannot unfold its prosperity-creating forces. In the future any enterprise will take a very close look at U.S. license contracts. If they contain the commitment to join any boycott deemed necessary by the U.S. Government, European companies presumably will no longer sign such contracts. Such trade-distorting practices hit both sides, the licensees and the U.S. licensers -- but least of all the Soviets. Surely the American farmers will not regret this. They supply the Soviets with their excess grain, with Washington's blessing, first against cash and soon on credit.

Reagan tramples on free world trade. He thereby jeopardizes thousands of jobs. At best he can delay the deal, but he cannot stop it.

SCHMIDT, NORDIC LEADERS HOLD TALKS IN KIEL

[Excerpt] Kiel, 27 Jun (DPA) -- The heads of government of the five Nordic countries -- Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Finland and Iceland -- as well as Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt all described as extremely important, useful and rational the 2 days of talks which they held this weekend in Kiel. Following a 5-hour boat trip around Kiel, the chancellor today told journalists that he felt that this meeting "has surely consolidated" the friendship between the five Nordic countries and the Federal Republic of Germany. Talks of this type should be continued.

The Nordic heads of government, Anker Jorgensen (Denmark), Kaare Willoch (Norway), Thoroddsen (Iceland) had been invited to Kiel by the minister-president of Schleswig-Holstein, Gerhard Stoltenberg, to mark the centenary of Kiel week. Schmidt said that in their talks they touched on world economic and world trade issues as well as problems of disarmament and the current danger areas in the Near and Middle East. Afghanistan and the Namibia question were also discussed.

Neither Schmidt nor the Nordic heads of government gave any further details, but they all stressed their broad agreement. Denmark's head of government Anker Jorgensen emphasized the very good links between his country and the Federal Republic and announced on behalf of everyone that the Nordic Council is to discuss how and when the federal chancellor is to be invited to one of the Nordic countries to continue these contacts. Sweden's Prime Minister Falldin said he is gratified that it is possible to discuss the existing problems openly even "when differing security policy solutions have been found."

FOREIGN MINISTRY 'SURPRISED' AT HAIG RESIGNATION

LD261208 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] In Paris Minister of External Relations Claude Cheysson and his entourage say they are very surprised by the resignation of the U.S. secretary of state whose knowledge of European affairs was, I quote, of great value. Moreover, in Paris, the U.S. veto which has still prevented the adoption of the resolution on Lebanon is regretted. The Foreign Ministry emphasizes that the immediate objectives of the text of the proposal were avoiding the battle of Beirut and the destruction of the civilian population, and of restoring Lebanese sovereignty in Beirut. Bearing in mind the preliminary contacts between all the delegations, in particular with the American delegation, the Quai d'Orsay in Paris believed it could avoid the rejection of its text.

CHEYSSON-ATTRIBUTED REMARKS ON U.S. VETO DENIED

NC250948 Paris AFP in English 0923 GMT 25 Jun 82

[Text] Paris, Jun 25 (AFP) — Remarks attributed to French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson, according to which he expected the United States to veto France's demand that Israel respect the Lebanese ceasefire, were categorically denied by the Foreign Ministry here today.

French President Francois Mitterrand said yesterday the demand would be referred to the United Nations Security Council.

Mr Cheysson was quoted as having said at a parliamentary dinner last night, that he expected the U.S. to veto the French move. He was also reported, in (?personal) conversation, to have regretted the attitude of U.S. President Ronald Reagan, whom he described as "totally in the hands of the Israelis."

Today's Foreign Ministry statement said, "Mr Cheysson, who granted no interviews to journalists during the Thursday night reception...categorically denies the remarks attributed to him."

JOBERT COMMENTS ON TRADE RELATIONS WITH U.S.

[Telephone interview with French Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert at the Foreign Trade Ministry by unnamed radio correspondent — live]

[Excerpt] [Question] Minister, what do you think of this rapid worsening of trade relations between Europe and the United States, and how in your opinion can Europe react?

[Answer] You say we are witnessing a rapid worsening of trade relations. This is not quite so. We are now witnessing a rapid intensification [resserrement] of the U.S trade game in relation to Europe. That is slightly different. I mean that we are still in the preliminary, tactical stage: Everyone is knocking, I dare not say his enemy but let us say his partner, and trying to intimidate him, to divide him, wanting to measure his degree of cohesion. In this respect the United States has completely succeeded in its operation, though not in the way it wanted since European cohesion recently manifested itself on the issue of steel.

[Question] We will return to the two big problems, the two large issues which are the embargo of equipment intended for the European pipeline, and steel.

But, in general, in your opinion does the United States now take no account at all of what the Europeans and the French in particular are saying or may want? For we are seeing the dollar [word indistinct] at almost Fr7 we are seeing that the United States is becoming organized and taking protectionist measures. The Europeans are objecting and protesting greatly but in the end this has no effect.

[Answer] They would be quite wrong to take no account at all of what their European partners are telling them, and of the interests of their partners, since we are all in an alliance — the Atlantic alliance -- which is a military alliance, but also an economic, monetary and cultural one. It would certainly deal a serious blow to the spirit of the alliance, even to the practice of the alliance, and this is what is at stake. This could be the end of the road. We must therefore take this very seriously and they especially must realize that they are part of a community in which they are very important, but that it is not sufficient to be important in a community to be listened to, to win all the deals and to secure all the solutions, even outside the agreed regulations. The United States is showing itself to a world which is somewhat surprised, but which should have realized earlier that it is the most protectionist power in the world, and that it defends this protectionism which suits it by means which are right at the limitation of the commitments it has undertaken.

[Question] Yesterday, Minister, West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt got very angry with the Americans....

[Answer] He was not wrong....

[Question] Yes. Concerning this embargo on equipment intended for the construction of the pipeline between the Soviet Union and Europe. Is the French reaction the same? In other words, are you as angry as the Germans?

[Answer] Listen, the French reaction is already included in the decision adopted by the European council of the Ten last week, which states quite explicitly that the U.S. pretension to regulate through trade the use of processes which were exported by the United States, and on the soil of their partners is an exorbitant pretension under current international law. This was the opinion of the European council last week.

[Question] There is the war over equipment intended for the pipeline, and now the steel war has surfaced again with the American decision to control, if I understood correctly, to have better or more control over steel imports. Will you react to this issue and does this seem to you another attack on Europe?

[Answer] Yes, the procedure started by the United States will now develop over several months, and there is a possibility that the situation will become more tense or more relaxed. There is a very full dossier on relations between Europe and the United States concerning steel, textiles, and the common agricultural policy in which France and the French are especially concerned. Freedom of trade must also be arranged to everyone's benefit, not to the benefit of the most powerful, so that freedom is something which is perceived and not something for others.

SPADOLINI VIEWS MIDEAST, DETENTE, ECONOMY

FM251153 Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 23 Jun 82 p 3

[Eugenio Scalfari interview with Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini; date not given]

[Excerpt] Rome — [Question] Prime Minister, what has been your reaction to the Lebanese crisis?

[Answer] They have been terrible days for everyone. I would say even worse than the Falklands crisis. For two reasons. First, in Lebanon we have witnessed, and are witnessing, the tragedy of an entire people, the Palestinian people. Second, the interests and border areas of the two superpowers intersect in the Middle East. The threat to world peace was therefore visible and immediate.

[Question] You were in Versailles when the crisis started and in Bonn when the conflict was at its most dramatic. What is your appraisal of the events?

[Answer] First, there is a somewhat new aspect: the constant contact that there has been between the United States and the Soviet Union at top level during the days of the crisis. It seems to me that the USSR was depending on the United States to prevent Israel from going too far. I had confirmation of this action by the USSR partly from a lengthy conversation with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko in New York during the UN session. In certain circles of the U.S. administration there are people who maintain that the recent events in the Middle East constitute a defeat for the USSR. Frankly, this does not seem to me the essential aspect of the matter. What I would say is that both superpowers have realized the dangerous nature of the crisis and have acted to some extent in a coordinated manner.

The second aspect to be stressed is the recognition of Lebanon's importance by both the United States and Europe. That unfortunate country, occupied by foreign armies and subjected to mass killing and suffering, disintegrated some time ago as a political entity and the major powers seemed more or less resigned to such a fate. Now things have changed somewhat: If we are not mistaken, U.S. diplomacy is aiming at the restoration of a central Lebanese government, which must be effectively protected.

[Question] So has the United States rediscovered Lebanon?

[Answer] I really would say so. Not only the United States, but also the Saudis, Mubarak's Egypt and Jordan. And we Europeans too — especially France, for well-known historical reasons. It has been realized that, despite its fragility and the miracle of its multiethnic and multireligious coexistence, Lebanon is an important factor in the balance of the region.

The third issue that has emerged from this crisis is the impossibilty of UN control of local wars and armed conflicts. UN blue helmets were, and still are, present along the Lebanese border, but Israel's armored columns outflanked them, ignoring them completely. So the UN role must be reappraised. The Falklands crisis teaches us the same lesson.

[Question] If Lebanon has to be protected and the United Nations is unable to do so, to whom are we to resort?

[Answer] A multilateral force, similar to the one in Sinai, is being considered.

[Question] Do you believe that Israel will let itself be stopped by such a force, in view of the fact that it cares nothing for the UN flag?

[Answer] I do not know. If the multilateral force included U.S. contingents the deterrent would probably be more effective.

[Question] You have said nothing about Israel's action. Does that mean that we Europeans too have resigned ourselves to a "final solution" that will disperse and destroy the Palestinian nation as a political entity?

[Answer] Throughout the crisis the EEC has issued very harsh assessments regarding Israel. And Italy has certainly not concealed its profound censure, for humanitarian, ethical and political reasons. The EEC has never strayed from the decisions taken at the Venice summit: The Palestinians are entitled to a homeland and to political representation. I have heard that the PLO, so heavily provoked by the Israeli attack, is seeking contacts with Washington. It now even seems willing to recognize Israel. One thing is certain: The complexity of the problem cannot be resolved by annihilation. On the other hand, I would like to point out that nobody has ever believed that a Palestinian "homeland" could exist in Lebanon. There are no more than 400,000 refugees in Lebanon out of a total of about 4 million Palestinians.

[Question] Prime Minister, despite raging local crises and rising tension, it seems that the East-West dialogue on nuclear disarmament and coexistence between the two systems has resumed. What information does Italian diplomacy wave in this connection?

[Answer] The statesman most involved with this issue is Chancellor Schmidt, for obvious reasons. Well, in Versailles Schmidt was very satisfied with the way East-West negotiations were going, whereas only a year ago, at the Ottawa summit, he was very gloomy. But I myself and our foreign minister have had confirmation that the East-West dialogue is proceeding. We know this not only from U.S. sources but also from Gromyko. In this connection, Italy's stance is exactly the same as Germany's. The hope is that by the end of 1983 the conditions will have been created to avoid having to install the missile bases that NATO has decided to create in Europe to restore the nuclear balance.

[Question] Meanwhile, amid so many international vicissitudes, there has also been the currency crisis of the European Monetary System [EMS], the revaluation of the mark, the devaluation of the franc and, to a lesser extent, of the lira. Does the EMS still serve any purpose?

[Answer] In many respects it has been a disappointing experience. It has failed to prevent the various member countries' economic policies from conflicting. But politically it is still a European anchorage. Italy needs it more than ever.

[Question] Is it true that France is seriously considering leaving the EMS?

[Answer] I fear so, let us hope it does not happen. But France has different problems and a different structure from us.

[Question] Do you not believe that the time has come for us to seriously tackle the problem of the public deficit? Prime Minister, you have governed for a year but it seems to me that you have achieved very few successes in this field.

[Answer] There have been successes — and they are very apparent — in containing inflation. However, there has not been success in containing the deficit. I agree with you that the time has come to act without further delay. Today I will announce to parliament the fiscal and financial guidlines that the government intends to follow to restore the balance of the budget. I hoped that certain results would be freely forthcoming from the trade unions and the employers' federation. Since they have not materialized, the onus is now on the government, and in the most pressing manner.

COLOMBO WRITES HAIG OVER PIPELINE RESTRICTIONS

[Text] (ANSA) — Rome, June 25 — Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo today sent a letter to U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig, voicing serious concern and reservations over the recent decision of American President Ronald Reagan to toughen restrictions on exports toward the Soviet Union.

The letter was sent in relation to reports that these restrictions may be extended to European branches of American firms and to products made in Europe with American licensing. Colombo noted that such steps hampered trade ties dating back to a period prior to the events in Poland causing serious harm to Italian companies and employment levels.

In line with understandings reached at the recent summits in Versailles and Bonn, Colombo said it was opportune for the U.S. and the European states to make a careful study of the measure announced by Washington to see what their full impact on the economies of Western Europe would be.

Message on Lebanon

AU252003 Rome ANSA in English 1948 GMT 25 Jun 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, June 25 — In relationship to the dramatic events unfolding in Beirut and the growing concern manifested throughout the Arab world, including Arab moderates, with which the Italian Government is continuing intense contact, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo today sent a new message to U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig.

The message underscored the urgency with which a solution must be found which does not reward aggression and which ensures a prospect of peaceful existence for the Palestinian people, the Farnesina reported.

Italy is also closely following, through its ambassadors to Paris and to the United Nations, the evolution of a French move to convoke the Security Council.

FOREIGN MINISTER SAYS ISEAEL 'FOOLING ITSELF'

AU261914 Rome ANSA in English 1906 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, June 26 — Israel is "fooling itself" if it thinks it can guarantee its survival with policy of faits accomplis such as the invasion of Lebanon, Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo warned today.

In the prepublication text of an interview to be published tomorrow by the Milan weekly, DOMENICA DEL CORRIERE, he added that the "civil world cannot approve the use of force and do-it-yourself justice.

"The Palestinian people is seeking space, somewhere to live and organize itself", Colombo said. "It will not manage this by terrorism, but as long as its legitimate requests have not been satisfied, the Palestinian question will remain a weight on the world's conscience and a threat to world peace".

Colombo also argued that it was a mistake to accuse the United States or the United Nations with failing to prevent the Lebanese conflict or the Anglo-Argentine conflict over the Falklands.

"However powerful it is, the United States cannot order anyone to make war or peace", he said also claiming that the mediation of Secretary-of-State Alexander Haig and the U.N. over the Falklands crisis was the "most that diplomatic action today can try to achieve".

VATICAN DENIES PRAVDA REAGAN VISIT ALLEGATIONS

LD241526 Vatican City in Polish to Poland 1415 GMT 24 Jun 82

[Text] Following publication of an article last Saturday, 19 June, by the Soviet daily PRAVDA on the subject of the talk held 7 June between the holy father and U.S. President Reagan, particularly concerning the situation in Poland, the Holy See's press office issued the following explanation on Wednesday evening:

The stance of the U.S. Government on the situation in Poland was clearly expressed in a speech by the U.S. President in the presence of the holy father and other personalities taking part in the audience directly after a private talk. The speech was broadcast by television and extensively published by the press. Here is an excerpt of the speech in which President Reagan talks about the situation in Poland: [Words indistinct] Poland is a noble bulwark of faith and freedom [passage indistinct]. We shall demand an end to martial law, release of all political prisoners and the undertaking of a dialogue between the Polish Government, the church and the Solidarity movement which represents the overwhelming majority of Poles. [passage indistinct]

Having quoted this excerpt from the speech by President Reagan the press office of the Holy See makes it clear that both in the public speech and in the talk between the pope and the U.S. President the subject of the planned pastoral journey of the holy father to Poland was not mentioned.

In addition to the above statement of the Holy See's press office, let us recall that the Soviet daily PRAVDA on Saturday reported to its readers that allegedly President Reagan, during his visit to the Vatican, has persuaded the pope to go to Poland in August under the pretext of taking part in religious ceremonies and to this purpose to undertake official steps with the Polish authorities against the obvious difficulties connected with the realization of this visit at present.

The Soviet daily also states, according to AFP, that Reagan allegedly expressed his readiness to increase financial aid to the resistance centers in Poland, in particular through the church.

The answer to this invented and biased information of the Soviet daily PRAVDA is contained in the explanation of the Holy See's press office which, as we have reported makes it clear that in the talk between the pope and the U.S. President there was no mention of the journey of the holy father to Poland. The plan for the holy father to travel to the ceremonies of the 600th anniversary of the Jasna Gora image, as we all know, was formed many months before Reagan's visit to the Vatican and, let us add, many months before the introduction of martial law in Poland.

POPE JOHN PAUL DECRIES SITUATION IN LEBANON

[Text] (ANSA) — Vatican City, June 25 — Pope John Paul II emphasized the dramatic situation in Lebanon and the "shameful scourge" of refugees, in a message he read to UN Commissioner for Refugees Paul Hartling at the Vatican today.

The pope said that the growing number of refugees for political, religious or racist reasons is a "shameful scourge" of our time, "as if so many nations and so many governments were no longer able to offer just liberty and a decent place to all their citizens".

The pontiff evoked the tragedy of people fleeing, terrorized by violence and war, deprived of their natural environment. "Lebanon is once again the theater of this tragedy, violently and tragically, but it cannot make us forget the other refugees of the Middle East, the many Palestinian refugees, Afghan refugees, South-east Asian refugees, particularly the Cambodians and boat people who continue to escape in precarious conditions, nor the Somali refugees and those of the African continent, of Latin America and other areas".

14 MILLION PARTICIPATE IN NATIONWIDE STRIKE

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, June 25 -- Fourteen million Italian workers took part in a general strike today and over 400,000 from all over Italy rallied in Rome to protest the economic policies of the five-party coalition headed by Premier Giovanni Spadolini.

The one-day walk-out in all industrial sectors was called by the CGIL-CISL-UIL union federation. The line of workers marching through the capital shouting anti-government and anti-management slogans and carrying red flags and banners, stretched for kilometers.

The giant protest was triggered by the industrialists' association (Confindustria) decision to drop as of January 1, 1983, the automatic wage-price indexation system known as the "escalator" and to link contract renewal bargaining to reforms of labor costs.

Not all of the demonstrators managed to squeeze into Piazza del Popolo, the huge square in downtown Rome where union leaders addressed the strike rally. The key speakers were Luciano Lama for CGIL (Communist), Pierre Carniti for CISL (Catholic), and Giorgio Benevenuto for UIL (Socialist and Lay Democrats).

Although their emphasis and tone differed, the 3 labor leaders were unanimous in their criticism of the government's economic policies. The unions are fighting to safeguard the purchasing power of wages and to keep unemployment levels down. They are firmly opposed to the Confindustria rejection of the escalator.

Certain statements made by the union leaders were hotly contested by a segment of the demonstrating workers. Not for the first time in his career, Benvenuto was booed and hooted by irate workers who also threw rotten fruit and other objects at him.

A few fistfights also broke out but were quickly quelled by the security service set up by the unions. The service also had to move to keep order when marchers passed in front of the city's synagogue and started shouting "Begin, hangman".

In conjunction with the Rome demonstration, similar rallies were held in numerous other cities throughout the country.

The unitary union federation said that the protest was the largest in the history of Italy's labor movement.

PERTINI RECEIVES UN REFUGEE COMMISSIONER

AU252011 Rome ANSA in English 1937 GMT 25 Jun 82

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, June 25 -- The United Nations high commissioner on refugees, Paul Hartling, was received at the Quirinale Palace today by head of state Sandro Pertini.

Hartling, who has been in Rome for the past few days, met with Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo yesterday who announced that Italy would recognize refugee status for exiles from around the world and not only from Eastern Europe.

For the year 1982, Italy will give 3.2 billion lire (two-and-a-half million dollars) to the U.N. commission as a voluntary contribution. Another $250,000 will be put up by the Italian Government to help combat piracy in Southeast Asian seas.

FURTHER ITALIAN ALGERIAN GAS TALKS SCHEDULED

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, June 26 -- The third round of negotiations to supply Italy with Algerian methane gas will begin in Algiers on July 19 and both sides have pledged to seek an agreement that takes into account the best interests of the two countries.

This second round, which began here Wednesday, June 23, wound up here late last night. The Italian team was led by Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria and the Algerians were led by Energy Minister Belkacem Nabi.

A communique released at the end of their talks said that the negotiations had been conducted in a spirit of friendly cooperation and had consisted of an in-depth study of price, the indexation of the price eventually agreed upon, and how to periodically review the conditions under which the natural gas would be supplied to Italy.

"This second meeting was not without its uses", Nabi said in a departure statement at Rome's Fiumicino International Airport.

"We have resumed our contacts, we have continued talking, and we have clarified some points", he said. "But it cannot be denied that not all the problems have been solved."

He added that the next meeting would last from July 19-21, but he did not confirm that it would be held in Algiers.

"In the meantime", he said, "we shall each work on our own account to ensure that the third meeting will enable us to make substantial progress in solving the complex and important problems still facing us".

TRADE MINISTRY SAYS LIBYA RESUMING PAYMENTS

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, June 26 -- The Libyan Jamahiriyah has resumed making payments to Italian firms on credits that reached about 100 million dollars at the latest count, according to Foreign Trade Ministry sources here. The sources said the news was brought back to Rome by a delegation of officials from the ministry who were in Tripoli earlier this week for talks on the overall picture for Italian creditors currently working in the North African state.

A Foreign Trade Ministry statement pointed out that the question of the Italian credits was "faced and solved in political terms" when Miniser Nicola Capria and his Libyan counterpart, 'Umar al-Muntasir, met here last month.

Apart from resuming payments on the credits, the ministry reported that the Libyan Government is ready to give "prompt application" to the agreement in view of bringing bilateral trade back in line with trade in past years.

Italy is the North African state's major supplier.

PRESIDENT, FOREIGN MINISTER ON HAIG RESIGNATION

LD260150 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0001 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] When we sought comment from the presidency of the republic on Gen Alexander Haig's resignation we were told by the presidential spokesman that although President Ramalho Eanes did not wish to comment on a matter that pertained to the United States internal affairs, he did wish to pay tribute to Alexander Haig's intelligence, honesty and profound understanding of the world situation.

Portuguese Foreign Minister Vasco Futscher Pereira, for his part, regretted the U.S. secretary of state's resignation but added that it would in no way change relations between Portugal and the United States. The minister declined to make any further comment on the grounds that it was an internal U.S. affair. Minister Futscher Pereira was Portugal's ambassador to Washington until taking up the foreign affairs portfolio last month.

BALSEMAO COMMENTS ON TRIP TO MOZAMBIQUE

The 4-day visit is taking place at the invitation of President Samora Machel and is possible thanks to the relaxation of tension between the two countries which came about in 1980 when Francisco sa Carneiro wrote a personal letter to the Mozambican president closing the remaining contentious issues between the two countries.

Our reporter at Lisbon airport said the smiling prime minister read out a brief statement for the news media:

[Begin recording] This is intended as a working visit but it is also, obviously, one of state representation. In effect, the special relationship already established enables us to place it at the level of a state visit. At any rate we are going to Mozambique to work, jointly to seek to work out and elaborate new ways and means of going increasingly further together in a spirit of mutually respecting independent countries.

At the same time these visits will enable us to convey Portugal's real concern for the development of, and for the political situation in, the entire region and for the need to avoid situations that might bring about instability. This means the need to avoid viewing things merely in the context of East-West relations. Our stand on this matter was always that -- as I pointed out on my return from the Bonn summit -- there are four main points on the compass: east and west are two of them, but north and south are equally important. Sources close to the Palacio de Santa Cruz have said that the resignation would have no influence on the negotiations on the Spanish-U.S. treaty, given the fact that these are now at an advanced stage.

Concern Expressed

PA262245 Madrid EFE in Spanish 2153 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] Madrid, 26 Jun (EFE) -- Spanish diplomatic circles have expressed their concern over the resignation of Alexander Haig, U.S. secretary of state, because he was well-aware of European problems and very familiar with our country's situation.

Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca, Spanish foreign minister, talked to Haig by telephone last night and expressed his sympathy for his resignation as top U.S. foreign policy official.

Regarding the repercussions that Haig's resignation may have concerning the possible treaty between Spain and the United States, the same diplomatic sources deny that Haig's resignation will have any effect on the treaty negotiations, which are well-underway, awaiting only the resolution of some minor technicalities.

[Text] Kiel, 26 June (DPA) -- Norwegian Foreign Minister Svenn Stray has said regarding the resignation of his Washington counterpart, Alexander Haig, that he had greatly trusted him.

"He knew the European situation very well and our government worked together with him very well," Stray, who is visiting Schleswig-Holstein on occasion of Kiel week, said in answer to a DPA inquiry.

"The resignation surprised me and I regret it very much," the minister added. He did not expect a fundamental change in U.S. foreign policy.

OTHER COUNTRIES MUST AID UNIFIL EXPANSION

PM241159 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 23 Jun 82 p 5

[Arne H. Fjeldstad report]

[Text] "UN peace-keeping forces in Lebanon must be increased considerably if they are to play any significant role in a future 'buffer zone' between Israel and Lebanon. Manpower is already minimal and will be completely inadequate under worsened conditions," Under Secretary Eivinn Berg said at a press conference at the Foreign Ministry yesterday.

However, Under Secretary Berg was unwilling to promise any increase in Norwegian troops in connection with an expansion of the area of operations and an increase in manpower.

"It is unreasonable to expect Norway to increase its contingent in the UN Force in Lebanon. We are making considerable contributions to the peace-keeping force already and it would be natural for other nations also to contribute further troops."

Yesterday Eivinn Berg met the two Norwegian health workers, Steinar Berge and Oyvind Moller [recently released from Israeli custody after their arrest in Sidon] and Prof Josef Rom, who is a special envoy from the Israeli Government. Professor Rom is deputy chairman of the Knesset Foreign Affairs Committee, and he outlined the Israeli view of the conflict at a lengthy meeting at the Foreign Ministry. He said that the action in Lebanon has the objective of creating a 40-50 km wide zone to reduce the risk of artillery and rocket attacks on areas in Galilee and increase security in the area. Norway has stressed that it firmly dissociates itself from the Israeli attack and is worried about the destabilizing effect the attack has had on the situation in the Middle East.

"Continued UNIFIL involvement must be part of a larger process aimed at getting negotiations started among all the parties. There is also good reason to take another look at the deployment area in which UNIFIL will operate, since in the past it has proved possible to pass through the area without checks by the UN forces. It would also be natural for a possible new zone to stretch right up to the internationally recognized border between Lebanon and Israel. In the future the UNIFIL forces must also work on humanitarian and civilian in addition to their military tasks, as the Norwegian contingent has been doing for a considerable time already," Under Secretary Berg said.

KIPRIANOU ASSESSES RELATIONS WITH GREECE

NC272103 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 27 Jun 82

[Text] Mr Kiprianou, chairman of the Democratic Party and president of the republic, spoke at a ball organized by the leading members of the Democratic Party [DIKO] in London. He said the undermining of the republic through any anomalous development — whether it is called military coup or political coup — in our political life will not be permitted.

Concerning DIKO-AKEL cooperation, President Kiprianou said the agreement of democratic cooperation virtually provides for the safeguarding of the existing economic and political-social system, and it is a framework which may encompass any correct handling ipso facto as dictated by national interest.

About the presence of occupation troops, President Kiprianou said: Most certainly, their withdrawal is our basic and primary demand.

On Athens-Nicosia relations, he said that, while we are endeavoring to fully restore these relations, many quarters are striving to undermine them as much as they can in order to derive partisan benefits. Mr Kiprianou went on: In addition to the international support for our struggle, democratic Greece and Hellenism throughout the world are our main prop, and we truly appreciate the multifaceted efforts by Prime Minister Parandreou. He concluded: What is necessary is that various quarters must stop exploiting the question of Athens-Nicosia relations for partisan purposes, because they actually serve Turkish interests.

AKEL STATEMENTS ON COUP, TURKISH INVASION

[Text] An AKEL Central Committee statement on the anniversary of the coup and the Turkish invasion says the imperialist conspiracy against Cyprus is continuing and that the Cypriot people's struggle is anti-occupational, anti-imperialist and liberationist. The AKEL statement says that in order to deal with the imperialist plans and the implementation of the UN resolutions on Cyprus, it is imperative that all patriotic forces of the Cypriot people unite in order that they may wage an effective struggle to remove the Turkish and all other foreign troops from Cypriot territory and in order that the Cypriots themselves — both Greeks and Turks — may solve the domestic aspect of the Cyprus issue by themselves, and the international aspect in an international conference within the UN framework.

AKEL, in cooperation with popular organizations, is organizing district rallies for the two anniversaries on the evening of 14 July in Nicosia, Limassol, Larnaca and Paphos.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN ANSWERS OPPOSITION

[Text] In answer to criticism by democratic rally chairman Kiridhis of the manner in which President Kiprianou has faced various issues and particularly the question of Athens-Nicosia relations, the government spokesman made a new statement today.

The spokesman said: The Cyprus Government is well aware of the importance of having completely harmonious relations with the Athens government, and it is doing everything possible to bring about the full restoration of such relations.

The spokesman also said economic problems do exist but, taking into consideration the worldwide economic recession that borders on an economic crisis, the state of the Cypriot economy should be regarded as satisfactory. Concerning economic scandals, the spokesman said the government has not covered them up but has combatted them.

In conclusion, the government spokesman said the Cyprus Government bears no responsibility for the severance of diplomatic relations with Egypt.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS HELD IN NICOSIA 24 JUN

NC241917 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 24 Jun 82

[Text] A new meeting within the framework of the intercommunal talks was held at the Ledra Palace Hotel this afternoon during which the discussion on executive authority was continued.

In a statement before the session, Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, said that there is no change in the situation following the consultations in New York. Mr Gobbi said that there was a detailed and very useful exchange of views and a reassessment of the situation which, he added, is normal in the process of negotiations.

In reply to a question on the results of the reassessment, Mr Gobbi said that there cannot be definite results, because the discussion on all aspects of the Waldheim evaluations has not yet been exhausted. In the near future, he added, we will be in a position to give a clearer picture.

Greek Cypriot representative at the talks Mr Mavrommatis stated that at the completion of the discussion on the executive authority, the issues on the legal and judicial authority and on the territorial aspect will be discussed. Regarding the New York talks, Mr Mavrommatis said that an in-depth assessment of the situation took place and that the talks were very useful. In reply to a question if anything new has arisen from the talks, Mr Mavrommatis said that no one expected miracles or anything new because the aim of the talks was an assessment of what has already been discussed. Mr Mavrommatis added that a few more weeks are needed to discuss all issues.

Mr Onan, the Turkish Cypriot representative, stated that there is no reason why there should not be a positive influence on the intercommunal talks from the discussions with the UN secretary general in New York. He also said that the UN secretary general considers the fact that the talks are being continued as a great success. We will continue, he added, the dialogue to find a solution to our problem, which has been pending for a long time. Mr Onan stated that the talks will be interrupted for about 1 month during the summer.

A UN statement on today's talks said that the issues of the organs and authorities of the federated government were discussed. The next meeting is planned for next Tuesday afternoon.

It has become known that the talks will be interrupted around 10 July because Mr Mavrommatis has undertaken government obligations in Geneva.

LADHAS, HUNGARIAN PRESIDENT EXCHANGE GREETINGS

NC261829 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] Returning to his country from a visit to the Philippines, Hungarian President Losonczi made a 2-hour stopover in Cyprus. He was welcomed at Larnaca Airport by acting President Ladhas, who had a lengthy talk with him. In welcoming Mr Losonczi, Mr Ladhas said:

[Begin recording of Ladhas in English fading into Greek translation] It is always a pleasure to welcome in Cyprus good friends of the country, one of which is his excellency the president of the Hungarian People's Republic. The existing good relations between Hungary and the Republic of Cyprus are a reflection of President Kiprianou's visit to Hungary last year, where he was welcomed by the country's president. Had President Kiprianou been in Cyprus now, he would have been here to welcome the Hungarian president personally.

The existing Hungarian-Cypriot relations are very good, and the Hungarian Government is always on the side of Cyprus in the struggle for a reasonable solution to the Cyprus problem. It is a problem which, at last, should be solved in accordance with the principles of international law, the Makarios-Denktas and Kiprianou-Denktas summit agreements and UN resolutions. Having this as a goal, we hold talks with the other side, with the Turkish citizens of Cyprus, and we hope that sooner or later, we will reach a reasonable solution in these talks with the aid of our friends. Namely, we hope that we will find a solution according to which Cyprus will be an independent, federated and nonaligned state, a state where all its citizens will be equal, whether they are Greeks or Turks. With these few words I welcome your excellency in Cyprus, and I hope that the few hours that you will spend with us will be enjoyable. [end recording]

In reply Hungarian President Losonczi said:

[Begin recording of Losonczi in Hungarian fading into Greek translation] I thank you very much, Mr President, for your kind words. I visited your lovely country 1 and 1/2 years ago. We also had the opportunity to welcome your honorable president, Mr Kiprianou, in Hungary. The Hungarian people and our government always follow with great attention the Cypriot people's struggle for independence and the establishment of a free country. Hungary has never stopped supporting the independence, unity and nonaligned character of Cyprus. We are in favor of a life in Cyprus that will be free from foreign influences -- a peaceful life -- because this is in the interests both of the Cypriot people and of all peace-loving forces in the world. The present Middle East situation draws to our attention the fact that the world is facing a mass of unsolved problems and that one of these problems is the Cyprus issue. All forces who are interested in achieving peace must work for a Cyprus settlement. With this opportunity I would like to wish the Cypriot people happiness and success in the country's construction. [end recording]

Mr Losonczi was also welcomed at Larnaca Airport by Minister to the President Katsellis, Agriculture Minister Khristodhoulou, Hungarian Ambassador in Cyprus Dobos, deputies and other officials.

COMMUNIST YOUTHS LAUD BREZHNEV'S INITIATIVE

NC260716 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 26 Jun 82 p 8

[Text] The Central Council of the United Democratic Youths Organization, EDON, issued the following statement:

"With feelings of great satisfaction the democratic youths of Cyprus welcomed the statement by the general secretary of the Soviet Union Communist Party and chairman of the Supreme Soviet, L. Brezhnev, to the UN General Assembly on disarmament that the Soviet Union unilaterally accepts the obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons and the appeal to the United States and the other nuclear powers to do the same.

"This new initiative by the Soviet chairman once again confirms that the Soviet Union not only senses the true and terrible dangers inherent in a thermonuclear clash but is also the champion of the struggle for peace, detente and disarmament.

"The hasty rejection of the USSR's new peaceful proposal by the leaders of the United States is, by contrast, resounding proof that the warmongering leaders of U.S. imperialism are preparing an unbridled nuclear armaments race which leads, with mathematical exactitude, toward a nuclear clash, thus disregarding the very existence of humanity.

"Expressing the feelings of the democratic youths of Cyprus, who are victims of the imperialist's prowar policy, EDON salutes the peaceful policy of the Soviet Union and calls on the youths to unite and intensify the struggle to curb the warmongering plans of U.S. imperialism so that peace may prevail, for detente and disarmament."

PAPANDREOU COMMENTS ON HAIG'S RESIGNATION

NC261720 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1400 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou has described the resignation of U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig as a critical change in the structure of political rule in the United States. The prime minister was speaking to newsmen aboard the plane coming to Athens from Sofia, where he paid a 3-day official visit.

Specifically, the prime minister said: I believe it is a critical change in the structure of political rule in the United States. As you know, I do not attach great importance to historic persons; I attach significance to structures and to the correlation of forces, and if I say the change is critical, it is because I believe the correlation of forces has been upset.

Basically, there are two worlds in the United States: the world of the West and the world of the East. Historically, the world of the East ruled when the West did not. There was close cooperation and a balance between West and East. With Haig's resignation and his statements, it becomes clear that the policy is moving from what we can call the Reagan group, that is, the group which personifies the West.

I believe that the dimensions and repercussions cannot be correctly assessed but that they will undoubtedly be of huge importance for the course of European problems, West European-U.S. relations, West-East European relations and certainly for the entire course of armaments or restriction of armaments. We are at an intersection that has not been seen in the United States for decades. We will see where it leads. Let us be optimistic. Regardless of the optimism, however, we must analyze the new situation, and I believe on Monday and Tuesday -- at the EC summit -- the Greek problem will most probably be deferred, and the basic problem will be the repercussions of this change, in particular with regard to European-U.S.-Soviet relations.

It is clear that this crisis concerns two issues: one issue, of course, is the natural gas pipeline. However, I also believe that it means something for Lebanon. I believe that the policy on Lebanon will be hard and that the position of Israel will be fully (?supported) now that Haig is not secretary of state

The only thing I can say as a European, since the government is theirs and not ours, is that this is a very serious development, because Haig was aware of both European and our problems. This does not mean he took positions meeting with our satisfaction but, at least, it was not necessary to explain to him. I am afraid he has not had the opportunity to brief President Reagan, and I am afraid this is a loss. These are my appraisals. I believe we are passing through serious times. All Europeans, West and East, must sit down and reflect and see where are we going, because at the moment there is no compass.

PAPANDREOU ON MORATORIUM, DIALOGUE WITH TURKEY

NC262014 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] The observance of the moratorium constitutes the essential prerequisite for starting discussions on the framework in which the Greek-Turkish problems are placed. This statement was made by Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou to the political editors aboard the plane coming to Athens from Varna. The statement was in answer to a question on Zhivkov's indirect proposal for an Evren-Papandreou meeting.

The prime minister said the course charted by the Greek Government starts from a moratorium -- that is, a respite from provocative statements or actions -- the exact duration of which has not yet been determined. The prime minister went on: After the moratorium, if it has really been observed, there would be a meeting of foreign ministers to discuss the framework of problems. The dialogue, which would be a result of the moratorium, certainly could not begin at summit level, because in the event of a deadlock, there would not be a higher authority.

PRIME MINISTER ULUSU HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that no one has the right to doubt the basic principles of the constitution that is currently being prepared and noted: There is no doubt that there will be a transition in our country to a parliamentary order in accordance with western values and the concept of democracy and respect for human rights and freedoms. Ulusu stressed that Turkey has so far undergone various experiences and that it has a deep-rooted democratic tradition.

Ulusu held his seventh news conference today and explained his view regarding the policies pursued by the government over the past 21 months, its accomplishments and future plans, as well as domestic and world issues.

On the subject of economic issues, the prime minister explained that Law 657 on civil servants, which has been causing continuous grievances for years, is being amended in order to render it lasting and just. Pointing out that as a result of the current economic policy exports have reached 62.7 percent of total imports, Ulusu said that in the agricultural sector an additional revenue of 4 billion Turkish lira this year and 35 billion in 1987 will be generated in accordance with the project to reduce the fallow land and plant second crops.

Commenting on labor relations and social policy, Ulusu said that the linkage between the minimum wage and seniority compensation reduces the genuine objective of the minimum wage. He said: The general wage average of a great sector of workers is currently over the minimum wage level -- especially wage earners who are included in the collective bargaining system. If the connection between the minimum wage and seniority compensation is severed, it will be possible to discuss minimum wages before they are due to be taken up for discussion.

Later, the prime minister talked about legal arrangements and foreign policy. Noting that the law which authorizes the Council of Ministers to reorganize the public institutions and organizations is aimed at equipping the country with an organized and efficient administrative structure, Ulusu stated that during these adjustments, public personnel will not have to change posts or places en masse. He also said that there is no move underway to eliminate or merge certain ministries.

Referring to the problems of the private bankers, Ulusu gave assurances that the necessary measures have been taken to ensure that certificates of deposit and bonds are paid on time. He said: I would like to point out now that the state itself will pursue the rights of the citizens on this matter.

Referring to relations with Greece, Ulusu said that the issue of a moratorium was not discussed at the short meeting he held with Greek Prime Minister Papandreou in Bonn during the NATO summit meeting held there. He added: However, I would like to point out once more that we are ready to negotiate all the problems existing between Turkey and Greece, including the request for a moratorium. Actually, moratorium is not a goal in itself; it is a tool to help the parties solve their problems through negotiations. Therefore, the real aim is to reach an agreement on starting negotiations to resolve bilateral problems.

Ulusu said that certain West European countries continued their negative approach and attitude toward Turkey. Noting that various governments in the Council of Europe are carrying out activities aimed at bringing Turkey before the European Human Rights Committee, Ulusu added: Turkey wishes to continue its relations with the member countries of the Council of Europe and therefore with West Europe.

Turkey has more than fulfilled its duties on the issue. However, efforts on the part of Turkey alone cannot prevent these relations from being damaged in a way which cannot be ameliorated even after a return to democracy in Turkey. Attempts to bring Turkey before the European Human Rights Committee will inevitably affect these relations seriously and for a long time.

Ulusu said that Turkey was faced with intensive Armenian propaganda abroad. He added: This racist propaganda, which is based on imaginary claims and which aims at distorting historic realities and at spreading hatred against the Turks and Turkey in all fields, has prepared the ground for acts of terror against our state represented by our officials stationed abroad. This propaganda has even created this terror. Noting that it should be kept in mind that Armenian terrorism is part of the international terrorist movement, Ulusu said: Countries which either tolerate or support terrorism will sooner or later realize that terrorism also threatens their communities as well.

At the end of his news conference, Ulusu said the following: The aim of the 12 September administration is to establish a parliamentary democratic system in the country in the real sense and to take the necessary measures to ensure that it will not be disrupted again. We have made very important progress on the issue. The timetable announced by our honorable head of state is being carefully observed. No one has the right to doubt the strength of the great Turkish nation to keep alive the democratic regime in which the political rights as well as the social rights of citizens are guaranteed.

BAN ON POLITICAL DISCUSSIONS MAY BE LIFTED

NC261313 Paris AFP in English 1235 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] Ankara, June 26 (AFP) — The year-old military ban on political discussions in Turkey may be lifted sometime next month, the Constituent Assembly's Constitutional Committee Chairman Orhan Aldikacti today told the daily GUNES.

He said his committee had asked the ruling National Security Council to amend the ban to allow freer discussion of the new constitution, scheduled to be submitted to a referendum next November.

The June, 1981, ban forbade former politicians from "discussing Turkey's past and future political and legal structure."

A second decree in February allowed some former politicians to submit opinions in writing to the Constitutional Committee about the draft under preparation.

The aim of their recent attempt to have the military council modify its decrees was "to allow participation of everybody in discussions on the new constitution during deliberations at the Consultative Assembly from August 1 to September 30," Prof Aldikacti (?said).

Turkey's former Social Democrat Premier Bulent Ecevit was sentenced to and served a three-month prison term for violating the ban last year, and he faced two more trials — with possible sentences of three months to two years imprisonment — on similar charges.

PRIME MINISTER DENOUNCES ISRAELI INVASION

LD271632 Riyadh SPA in Arabic 1515 GMT 27 Jun 82

[Text] Jidda, 27 Jun (SPA) — Bulent Ulusu, Turkish prime minister, stressed that the Israeli aggression against the Palestinians in the south of Lebanon will increase the danger of the existing tension in the Middle East.

He said his country denounces this invasion and calls for the immediate implementation of the latest UN Security Council resolutions which stipulate the immediate withdrawal of the invading forces.

Mr Ulusu added in a statement to SPA that Turkey has denounced persistently the Israeli aggression and that it sees that the solution to the Middle East problem will not be realized only by the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the occupied Arab territories and by granting the Palestinian people its right to self determination.

Mr Ulusu stressed his country's support for the Arab peace plan in the Middle East put forward by the Kingdom. Turkey strongly supports the Arab and Islamic cause, assists its Arab and Muslim brothers and continuously wishes to increase its cooperation with its Muslim brothers, he said.

UN AMBASSADOR ON LEBANON, PALESTINIAN ISSUES

TA261805 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 26 Jun 82

[Text] Turkey's permanent representative at the United Nations, Ambassador Coskun Kirca, has said that the invasion and occupation of Lebanon can no longer be tolerated. He stressed that an end must be put to the policy of force pursued by Israel.

Speaking at the seventh extraordinary session of the UN General Assembly, Ambassador Kirca pointed out that the attack launched against Lebanon by Israel further increased tension in the Middle East. Stating that Israel clearly violated the UN Charter without any hesitation, Kirca stressed that the situation in Lebanon, and especially in Beirut, was intolerable.

The ambassador said that the restoration of Lebanon's political independence, sovereignty, unity and territorial integrity and the assurance of the permanence of the Arab Palestinians should be adopted as the two main goals. He added that the first condition to achieve these goals was the termination of all the clashes and the immediate withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanese territory without any conditions or reservations.

Kirca stated that the latest developments in Lebanon clearly showed that the essence of the Arab-Israeli conflict was the Palestinian issue, adding that a just and lasting solution could not be reached in the Middle East unless the Palestinian issue was solved.

Kirca then reiterated the Turkish Government's call for the recognition of the Palestinian's inalienable rights, including their right to establish their own state.

He pointed out that the PLO should be able to participate, under equal terms, in all the efforts being undertaken within the framework of the United Nations to resolve the Palestinian question. He added that Lebanon belonged only to the Lebanese and that only its own people could determine that country's fate.

Kirca then called for international aid to the Arab Palestinians and to Lebanese who had become victims of the Israeli attack.

OIL EXPLORATION IN ISKENDERUN -- The Italian firm "Saypim" which had drilled for oil in the Bay of Iskenderun last year, will resume drilling in July. An official for the firm said last year's drilling down to 1,200 meters had indicated there was oil under the bay, and they intended to go down to 2,000 meters or more this year. EEC SUMMIT STATEMENT VICTORY FOR MODERATES

[Text] Brussels, 29 Jun (AFP) -- Leaders of the European Economic Community concluded their two-day summit here today with a call for the immediate withdrawal of Israeli and Palestinian forces from Beirut.

Calling for maintenance "at all costs" of the fragile cease-fire in Lebanon, the summit statement was viewed, however, as a victory for EEC moderates. It neither proposed sanctions against Israel, as France had urged, nor called for a state structure for Palestinians, a clause included in an earlier draft.

The moderates, led by Britain, also prevailed in the summit's statement on trade policy issues currently dividing the Community and the United States. While the EEC called for urgent dialogue with Washington on these issues, notably the Siberian gas pipeline, the summit statement was considerably milder than the one adopted June 22 by the EEC foreign ministers in Luxembourg.

Hammered out with difficulty in two days of talks on international issues which largely eclipsed the Community's internal problems, the statement on Lebanon cited "the legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people, who should have the opportunity to exercise their right to self-determination."

But despite urging from France, Greece and Ireland for a harder line against Israel and in favor of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the statement made no mention of seeking an "honorable solution" to the conflict in Lebanon. "The Ten maintain their vigorous condemnation of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon," the four-point statement said. It notably called for:

-- Preservation of the cease-fire accompanied by the immediate withdrawal of Israeli and Palestinian forces.

-- "The departure of all foreign forces except those which may be authorized by a legitimate and broadly representative government of Lebanon".

-- Continued relief activity to assist the Lebanese population.

-- Negotiations for lasting restoration of peace and security in the region.

The statement stressed that security could be obtained only if all parties concerned "accept one another's existence", citing both Israel and the PLO. "The position of the Ten remains that the PLO should be associated with the negotiations," the statement concluded.

While sanctions against Israel were not included in the text, EEC Council President Wilfried Martens said after the summit that the Community had decided to suspend the next EEC-Israeli ministerial level cooperation meeting as well as the signature of a second financial cooperation protocol with Israel.

Mr Martens, Belgium's prime minister, also noted that although there was no mention of an EEC arms embargo against Israel, no sales of military material from an EEC country were currently in progress.

On trade relations with the United States, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher received support from West Germany, Denmark and the Netherlands in her bid to avoid direct accusation of the United States.

But the statement expressed the EEC view "that the maintenance of the open world trade system will be seriously jeopardised by unilateral and retroactive decisions on international trade, attempts to exercise extraterritorial legal powers and measures which prevent the fulfillment of existing trade contracts."

Warning that recent developments -- U.S. decisions on steel markets, the gas pipeline and common agricultural policy -- "could have adverse consequences" on EEC relations with the United States, the statement called for "genuine and effective dialogue" to be "instituted as a matter of urgency."

On other world issues, the Ten approved the new anti-Vietnamese coalition on Cambodia, offered assistance in working out a solution to the Iran-Iraq conflict and reaffirmed their strong interest in developing relations with Latin America. The only strictly EEC issue to be broached at the summit was the future membership in the Community of Spain and Portugal. The council requested that an inventory of outstanding issues be drawn up, a move seen as likely to delay the entry of the two Iberian nations, tentatively scheduled for January 1984.

PRESIDENT THORN CRITICIZES PIPELINE EMBARGO

DW300815 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 29 Jun 82

[Text] [Question] What can you and the European Community do to convince the Americans that the pipeline embargo must be given up?

[Answer] We hope to be able to convince our American friends first, that it is actually not worth it to impose this embargo and that the matter will not work; second, that it is a political mistake; and third, its irritating effect is too great. It is a great handicap for political as well as economic relations between the United States and the other powers who were represented at the Versailles summit. I hope that our American friends will realize that it was really a mistake and that they will slowly give in.

ATTEMPT TO RESTORE L. AMERICAN RELATIONS BEGINS

[Text] A major initiative to restore tattered Common Market relations with Latin America in the wake of Britain's Falklands victory was launched today. EEC leaders meeting in Brussels agreed to take immediate steps to increase cooperation between the Community and central and southern America, in an obvious attempt to repair the damage caused by the South Atlantic crisis.

Foreign Secretary Francis Pym said this afternoon at the end of the two-day summit: "We in Britain like every other country, want to further our relationships and attach more importance to that part of the world which has perhaps an increased role to play now." But he emphasised that the summit talks on Latin America had not involved the question of British sovereignty over the Falklands, or the UK's relations with Argentina. Although Britain alone is maintaining trade sanctions against Argentina, both Mr Pym and Mrs Thatcher were anxious to assure their EEC partners that they want to restore normal relations with the Latin American countries.

West Germany, which has the largest trade balance with Latin America of all the Community countries, recently led moves to drop sanctions against Argentina because of fears over the long-term commercial and diplomatic effects. The British victory in the South Atlantic has now cleared the way for a serious bridge-building exercise to begin.

This afternoon's EEC statement on the situation between the Community and Latin America referred to the "lively interest" attached by the Community to developing relations with the peoples of that part of the world. It mentioned the many links between Europe and Latin America, which it urged to play an expanding role on the world stage. Common Market leaders have also urged the EEC Commission to speed up progress on a study of the problems of aid to Central America, and EEC governments have pledged themselves to help reduce tension and promote peace in the area.

SCHMIDT VIEWS EMBARGO; REJECTS TRADE WAR

[Interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt by reporter Beckert; date and place not given — recorded]

[Text] [Question] What means does the European Community have to at least soften up the pipeline embargo or eliminate it? It was demonstrated at the last summit meeting that merely mutual talks did not make much sense and were unsuccessful.

[Answer] You cannot put it that way. The embargo which was extended by the United States after the summit meeting, was not discussed at all at the summit meeting. That was one of the main reasons why the European governments were shocked. If you are asking now for concrete means or countermeasures, I will maintain most careful restraint with my answer.

I am against being forced into some sort of trade war with the United States. We cannot have that [the embargo] with regard to the Soviet Union. We lifted the embargo vis-a-vis Argentina the moment Port Stanley had fallen. I do not think well of pursuing world policy with the help of embargoes and trade-policy measures which will just weaken our national economies.

[Question] How long can the European Community afford to react only diplomatically? The French president has already demanded that countermeasures be taken.

[Answer] Yes, I know it and it is quite understandable. My concern and that of the British prime minister is certainly no less than that of the French president. But you could also ask it the other way round: How long can the United States afford it? Neither side can afford harming the economy for political reasons.

Pipeline Agreement Initialed

[Excerpts] Moscow, 30 Jun (DPA) — The financial framework agreement on the gas pipeline deal with the Soviet Union was initialled in Moscow on 29 June. By this move, the German firms want "to signal" that they will keep their word regardless of the stepped-up U.S. embargo. This was stated by Hans Friderichs, board spokesman of Dresdner Bank, in Moscow. The agreement is expected to be signed in the middle of July.

According to Friderichs, who visited Moscow for banking talks and was also received on 29 June by Soviet Premier Nikolay Tikhonov, the Soviets are determined to construct the pipeline from Urengoy in Western Siberia "in any event." The gas pipeline deal is not only of economic importance for the Soviets, "but that in itself is very great," Friderichs told German correspondents.

Friderichs expressed pessimism regarding a change in U.S. attitude during the coming months. Friderichs told the Soviet premier that a clear sign of an improvement in the Polish situation could possibly lead to a reversal of U.S. policy. As an example, Friderichs mentioned the release of "Solidarity" trade union leader Lech Walesa.

The representatives of the Dresdner Bank said they were "embittered" at the U.S. embargo. The application of economic sanctions to a deal already concluded violates the most elementary principles of law, it was stated. Friderichs added that a "successful" embargo against the deal with the Soviet Union should have started with the gas and not with the equipment for the pipeline.

MITTERRAND REPROACHES U.S. ON SUMMIT COMMITMENTS

[Text] Francois Mitterrand, who returns to Paris this afternoon, will receive the Egyptian foreign minister, who is carrying a message from President Mubarak.

During a press conference held after the EEC summit, Mitterrand severely accused the United States. He reproached them for not having kept their commitment made in Versailles. The latest measures taken by the United States as regards Europe are coercive, vexatious, unjust and dangerous, said the French president. They create a real protectionism in disguise.

EGYPT'S BUTRUS GHALI MEETS PRESIDENT MITTERRAND

OW291950 Paris AFP in English 1800 GMT 29 Jun 82

[Text] Paris, 29 Jun (AFP) -- Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butrus Ghali stressed after meeting President Francois Mitterrand here today the need that the Palestine Liberation Organization continue to exist "in the interest of peace and a peaceful solution to the Middle East crisis.

Mr Ghali, who arrived here today with a message from Egyptian President Husni Mubarak, said after a 30-minute meeting with Mr Mitterrand that he was "unaware" of a reported Franco-Egyptian plan for an "honorable" transfer of Palestinians out of Lebanon. Egypt's number two diplomatic official, Mr Ghali said a solution to the Lebanese crisis must include preservation of the PLO and "the immediate withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon."

Describing his visit as a bid to "strengthen diplomatic and political cooperation" in the context of the Middle East situation, he said his talks focused both on the political crisis in Lebanon and "the Israeli aggression against the Palestinian people." Mr Ghali added that he planned to discuss "all the elements which could contribute to a partial solution to the crisis" when he meets French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson later today.

Earlier today, Lebanese ambassador to France Butrus Dib conveyed a message from Lebanese President Ilyas Sarkis to President Mitterrand's office.

Talks With Cheysson

[Text] Paris, 29 Jun (AFP) -- Egyptian Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butrus Ghali said here today he and French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson have looked at "different possibilities" to resolve the crisis in Lebanon. He said the discussions, following a meeting with President Francois Mitterrand, aimed to extend the cease-fire and obtain an Israeli and Palestinian withdrawal from West Beirut.

Mr Ghali, who will continue talks with Mr Cheysson tomorrow, said the one-hour meeting also focussed on how to protect the Palestinians. "We are not at the point where it is a question of the Palestinians leaving Lebanon," he said. He said the two discussed "different scenarios which might be adopted in a United Nations context ... to reach a very quick solution to the problem" in Lebanon.

"There can only be a solution to the Middle East crisis beginning with the Palestinian people's right to self-determination," he said, adding that the Palestinians must decide whether they want a state or not. Mr Ghali arrived here today to discuss possible Lebanese peace initiatives.

ISLAMIC CONFERENCE LEADER MEETS WITH CHEYSSON

LD292042 Riyadh Domestic Service in Arabic 2000 GMT 29 Jun 82

[Text] Habib Chatti, secretary general of the Islamic Conference, met in Paris this evening with French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson. After the meeting, Chatti told SPA that he had reviewed with Cheysson the situation in Lebanon in light of the Brussels EEC meeting which ended today.

Chatti said that the French minister stressed the determination of the EEC to contribute to putting an end to the tragedy in Lebanon. He hoped that the statement by the Brussels EEC meeting on Lebanon and consequent measures will lead to ending bloodshed in Lebanon and to embarking on a path to search for a solution for the Palestinian problem.

Chatti pointed out that the EEC statement on Lebanon contains positive elements which are in line with the viewpoints of the Muslim countries and which can form a starting base for halting the fighting in Lebanon and for embarking on the searching for a solution to the Palestinian issue. He stressed that the success of the European efforts depends to a large extent on the U.S. reaction and the degree of its response to it since Washington bears the biggest responsibility for finding a way out of the current dilemma in Lebanon.

MITTERRAND MAKES MINOR CABINET CHANGES

[Text] Paris, 29 Jun (AFP) -- Industry Minister Pierre Dreyfus has resigned in a minor government reshuffle announced here tonight. Officials said Mr Dreyfus, aged 74, stepped down at his own request. The industry portfolio is taken over by the minister of state for science and technology, 43-year-old Jean-Pierre Chevenement. Mr Dreyfus returns to his post as a member of President Francois Mitterrand's "brain trust."

Another resignation is National Solidarity (welfare) Minister Nicole Questiaux. Elysee Secretary-General (top presidential aide) Pierre Bergovoy takes over from her in a ministry strengthened by Labor Minister Jean Auroux as his deputy. Mme Questiaux had been under heavy fire recently from the opposition, which accused her of "collusion" with France's biggest trade union, the communist Confederation Generale du Travail (CGT).

The prime minister's secretary of state for nationalization, Jean le Garrec, becomes the prime minister's deputy minister for employment. Mr le Garrec's former post is eliminated, following the pledged nationalizing of a number of industrial groups and banks.

The reshuffle is seen here as reflecting the anti-inflation "austerity" plan announced earlier this month by Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy. The plan involves a four-month wage and price freeze. The welfare sector is considerably widened and so it that of employment, cutting down on the jobless being the government's priority. Not only has a ministry been established to deal exclusively with the problem, but also an industrial "super-ministry," one of whose aims is to promote economic revival.

It is the second government reshuffle since the Socialist victory in the May 1981 elections.

SPADOLINI VIEWS LEBANON, TRADE WAR WITH U.S.

The head of the Rome government also remarked on the decision taken by the European Council in relation to recent economic measures by the Reagan administration, noting that "the Europeans want to avoid a trade war with the United States". The Europeans are considering two types of actions toward the United States, Spadolini said. The first will be in the context of the EEC, with the forthcoming meeting between the president of the executive commission, Gaston Thorn, and the EEC American ambassador.

According to Spadolini, this is a bilateral action in which Italy will do everything necessary, together with its partners.

"The greatest concern of the Italian Government" he added, "is that undebated acts or gestures indicative of a trade war. [sentence as received] A limitation of free exchange or incipient protectionism could profoundly disturb relations between Western Europe and the United States, upon which are founded the entire system of Western defense".

In the context of the Lebanese tragedy, Spadolini said that "alongside the theme of European-United States relations, the Lebanese question dominated our discussions".

The Italian premier revealed that three objectives were proposed in the declaration released at the conclusion of the two-day session. The first he said was the establishment of a cease-fire accompanied by an immediate withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the area around Beirut and a withdrawal of Palestinian forces from west Beirut under the control of the Lebanese Army and, on the basis of an accord with Beirut, of United Nations observers or forces.

The second and third objectives are the withdrawal of all foreign forces present in Lebanon, and the opening of negotiations to solve the Palestinian problem through the exercise of the right of self-determination in the context of definitively defeating the logic of annihilation, and founded on the principles of security and justice for all states and peoples.

Only this context, Spadolini affirmed, will it be possible to restore Lebanon to its full territorial integrity, independence and sovereignty, through the creation of a government authority credible on both the internal and international levels. This will also permit the assurance of security in the frontier zone with Israel, a zone which cannot remain exposed to threats and war-like actions, Spadolini concluded.

BRITAIN'S THATCHER TO VISIT ROME 7 JULY

A communique released here today said that the visit was part of regular bilateral consultations between the two countries.

Also taking part in the talks will be the British foreign secretary and chancellor of the Exchequer, and on the Italian side, the foreign, treasury, budget and finance ministers.

USSR REDUCES TELEPHONE LINKS WITH COUNTRY

LD291304 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 29 Jun 82

[Text] The Soviet Union has announced that it will reduce the total number of telephone links with Finland from the beginning of July. The number of outgoing lines from Finland to the Soviet Union will decrease from 24 to 21 and the number of incoming lines from 24 to 16. The Soviet Ministry of Communications says the reductions are for technical reasons, it is said by the Foreign Affairs Office of the General Directorate of Posts and Telecommunications.

The restrictions on telephone traffic announced by the Soviet Union apply to several Western countries, including Austria, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Britain and the United States. In the correspondence between the Finnish and Soviet telecommunications administrations, Finland has said it does not desire such reductions. On the contrary, Finland would need to increase the number of telephone lines to at least 31, according to the General Directorate of Posts and Telecommunications.

NORWAY

ISRAEL INVITES PARTY LEADERS TO VISIT LEBANON

PM281417 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 22 Jun 82 p 4

[Excerpts] Yesterday the Israeli Embassy in Oslo sent telegrams to the parliamentary leaders of the Labor, Conservative and Christian People's Parties, inviting the three Norwegian politicians to travel to the areas of fighting in southern Lebanon as the Israeli Government's guests. Gro Harlem Brundtland told AFTENPOSTEN that she found this request strange and unusual. Yesterday evening she declined the invitation from the Israeli ambassador.

Israeli Embassy Counsellor Eitan Margalit told AFTENPOSTEN that the invitation had been extended to the three Norwegian politicians after the embassy had noted the effect the war in southern Lebanon had had on public opinion and the political parties in Norway.

"We felt that reaction in Norway was very tough, and have therefore invited the three politicians to visit the area and experience the situation so that they, as the people's elected representatives, can come back and say what they have seen," Margalit said.

[Conservative parliamentary leader] Jo Benkow said that he had informed the Foreign Ministry of the invitation, and that he thinks it would be correct to reach a decision in the matter in consultation with the two other party leaders and the foreign minister.

[Christian People's Party parliamentary leader] Kjell Magne Bondevik is in New York at present, and Christian People's Party Storting Group Deputy Chairman Asbjorn Haugstvedt said that he would be in touch with Bondevik today to discuss the invitation.

"Personally, I would not be opposed to a Norwegian delegation visiting this area which has been so much in the news recently," Haugstvedt said. However, he added that the value of such a Norwegian parliamentary delegation would be seriously weakened if the Labor Party -- as the country's biggest party -- did not take part.

BEIRUT EMBASSY CLOSES 'WITHOUT WARNING'

[John Bulloch dispatch]

[Text] Beirut -- Britain's Embassy in West Beirut closed last night without any warning to the Britons trapped in the Lebanese capital. The ambassador, Mr David Roberts, spent the morning in East Beirut, near the Israeli-occupied part of the Lebanese capital. His wife and the few remaining embassy staff still in the city spent the day at the sea front embassy building. Then shortly before a new Israeli leaflet raid giving a "final warning" to people to get out of Beirut or risk death, the embassy staff left in a convoy of cars.

As usual, the Israeli planes swooped low out of the setting sun to confuse anti-aircraft defences. And as usual, they released heat flares to baffle the surface-to-air missiles with which the Palestinians are armed, and which lock on to a source of heat.

The shower of blue leaflets, written in Arabic, repeated in even stronger terms the message contained in the previous day's leaflets. It said: "Thousands of your brothers have taken the opportunity given them and have left Beirut and are now living in peace and safety.

"You who are still present in Beirut today: Remember that time is running out. The later you leave it, the more you expose your life and the lives of your loved ones to danger."

TELEPHONE LINES WITH USSR TO BE REDUCED

[Nigel Wade dispatch]

[Text] Moscow -- Moscow is cutting by two-thirds telephone lines between Russia and Britain. Plugs are also to be pulled on other links with the West. The reason given is "technical work" which the Russians say will last until 1984 but Western diplomats suspect that the Kremlin's true intention is to reduce the growing number of direct-dial facilities. These have enabled Russian emigres to maintain close contact with relatives and friends. At the same time Western lobbyists, newspaper men and public interest groups have been able to speak directly to Russians in their homes.

According to sources British Telecom has been informed of deep cuts in telephone links from July. Lines to Britain will be reduced from 46 to 14 while those to Russia will be cut from 42 to 14 until the end of 1984.

The Soviet authorities have promised further explanations of the work they say is necessary. But it is not known when such explanations will be given. Telephone lines with Austria are also being slashed, from 24 to four it is believed. The Austrian case is particularly suggestive of Soviet motives because there are thousands of Russian emigres in Vienna.

British officials say there have been no moves so far by London to raise the phone lines issue with the Russians. Other reports indicate that lines are also to be cut with France and West Germany. American diplomats have heard nothing officially about a reduction of lines.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS HELD ON EXECUTIVE AUTHORITY

[Text] A new meeting within the framework of the intercommunal talks was held this afternoon at the Ledra Palace Hotel. Discussion on the executive authority question was continued.

In response to a question as to whether there are similarities in the positions of the two sides, Mavrommatis, the representative of the Greek Cypriot side at the intercommunal talks, said there are many differences, adding that the interlocutors have not yet started discussing the details of the issue.

Mavrommatis stated the previous meeting was a good one and that the general approach of the two sides to the question of the executive authority had been presented. He added that he expected discussion on the details of the issue to start today.

The representative of the Turkish Cypriot side, Onan, stated that sufficient ground has been covered. He expressed the hope that discussion of the question of the executive authority would be concluded with a few weeks.

A UN statement mentions that discussion on the organs and authorities of the federal government was continued and that the next meeting will be held the afternoon of 1 July.

TURKISH, ARMENIAN TERRORISTS ARRIVE FROM LEBANON

NC300616 Nicosia BOZKURT in Turkish 29 Jun 82 p 1

[Text] Lefkosa [Nicosia] -- According to various news agency reports and disclosures made by the Israeli authorities, many Turkish and Armenian terrorists have been captured during the Israeli occupation of Lebanon. Meanwhile, HURRIYET provides this information from Nicosia: Top leaders of the terrorist and criminal Armenian network known as the Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia [ASALA] have arrived at Larnaca aboard two ships carrying citizens of the United States and the British Commonwealth who were trapped in Beirut. Following talks with the Israelis, who have cut off Beirut from the sea as well, the U.S. and British Commonwealth citizens set out from Juniyah port on board the two ships the other day. Despite stringent Israeli controls, a great number of Armenian terrorists managed to mingle among the passengers with false identity documents and leave Lebanon.

Meanwhile, reports that many Turkish and Armenian terrorists have been captured by the Israelis during the raid on Lebanon have been confirmed. The Israeli authorities have subjected these terrorists to stringent interrogations and tried to unravel all the militant acts perpetrated so far. When these investigations are completed, a detailed report will be channeled to the national intelligence organization through Mossad, the Israeli secret police.

According to reports reaching Nicosia, the PLO camps where the separatists, the Armenian terrorists and militant members of other secret organizations which created anarchy and terror in Turkey before 12 September were being trained collectively have been disbanded by Israel.

FRIENDSHIP SOCIETY VIEWS USSR NUCLEAR PROPOSALS

[Text] The Cyprus-Soviet Friendship Society has issued the following statement:

"The rash and frenzied arms race is pushing mankind to the danger of a dreadful military conflict that would certainly result in total destruction. This danger becomes even greater with the addition of new weapons of mass extermination to the arsenal of war machinery as well as by the adventurous policy of the Western warmongering circles who create hotbeds of unrest and local wars throughout the world that threaten to develop into a broader or worldwide conflagration. All the world's people are facing this possibility with agony.

"Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's message to the special UN General Assembly session on disarmament, that the Soviet Union undertakes the obligation not to use nuclear weapons first, is a most significant peaceful message and a hopeful answer to the agony of peace-loving mankind. This message responds to the agonizing demands by all the people that practical measures be taken toward the defusion of the international situation, detente and disarmament. It is a courageous step which, if also taken by the other side, would create the necessary prerequisites that would remove the danger of nuclear annihilation.

"Unfortunately, the United States of America hastened to reject this peace-loving message by persisting in its dangerous policy of showing strength and acquiring military supremacy which will lead the world to the brink of war.

"The Cypriot people -- who are tragic victims of this imperialist policy which, in order to serve its strategic interests, does not hesitate to incite or even organize fascist coups and bloody aggressions -- welcome Brezhnev's message and unite their voice with that of all the peace-loving people in the world who demand a ban on all nuclear and other weapons of mass extermination so that a climate of detente may be created and nuclear destruction may be averted."

KHARAVYI REACTS TO HAIG LETTER TO ROLANDHIS

[Excerpts] Mr Alexander Haig, the resigned secretary of state, has sent Nikos Rolandhis a letter which is not only strange but also insulting to our people and mankind as a whole. The letter refers to his decision to resign as secretary.

The strange thing is that a resigned secretary extolls the policy of a president and an administration from which he resigned because he disagreed with its policy. And how can he give assurances of the continuing policy of an administration to which he does not belong?

The insult is the impudent allegation that Cyprus and the United States have...joint interests and that the U.S. policy promotes...peace. Is it in the interest of Cyprus that the United States continue to support and back the Turkish invasion in Cyprus? Or is it in the interest of peace that the planned barbarous Haig-Sha'ron genocide is taking place in Lebanon?

KIPRIANOU ARRIVES FROM LONDON, MAKES STATEMENT

[Text] Cypriot President Kiprianou arrived in Athens at 1800 today from London. He was welcomed at Ellinikon Airport by Minister to the Prime Minister Agamemnon Koutsoyiorgas, Deputy Foreign Minister Ioannis Kapsis, Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikos Rolandhis, who has been in Athens since this morning, as well as by Greek Ambassador in Nicosia Zakharakis and Cypriot Ambassador in Athens Khatzimiltis.

Upon his arrival, Mr Kiprianou stated that he had talks in New York with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar and that he will brief Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, with whom he will meet tomorrow morning, and his associates on those talks. They will also exchange views on the present phase of the Cyprus issue.

Answering relevant questions, the Cypriot president said that in Athens he will discuss the further handling of the Cyprus issue, adding that things have not changed in any way.

PAPANDREOU ENCOURAGED BY BRUSSELS SUMMIT

[Text] Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou has described the Brussels conference as the most significant summit he has attended. This was because of the climate of unity with which the huge problems of West Europe were faced.

Mr Papandreou returned from Brussels at 1900 today. He made the above statement aboard the plane during a conversation with newsmen who accompanied him on his trip.

Mr Papandreou also said that during the conference there was an identity of political views on all three basic topics discussed: European, U.S. and Soviet relations; the Palestinian issue; and the common economic policy to be followed by West Europe.

At its session today, the summit discussed mainly the question of the special arrangements requested by Greece.

Comments on Memorandum

[Text] Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, in describing the EEC summit in Brussels as one of the most significant and crucial ones, particularly stressed the climate of unity with which the summit dealt with West Europe's enormous problems. The leaders of the ten EEC members examined the dramatic developments in Lebanon, EEC-U.S. economic and trade relations and the Greek memorandum. By way of intervention, Mr Papandreou presented to the session the particular problems that Greece faces within the Common Market framework. Mr Papandreou has made it clear that the Community's ultimate assessment of the Greek memorandum for special arrangements will play an effective role as to whether it is truly possible for the Greek economy to develop within the EEC framework.

KKE GROUP DEMONSTRATES AGAINST ISRAEL, U.S.

[Excerpts] Through mass demonstrations to be held today and tomorrow, the people of Athens are escalating their militant solidarity with the Palestinian and Lebanese people — new victims of U.S. imperialists, who are stigmatized with the blood of many people, and their savage protege the Begin clique. The City Committee [EP] of the KKE Athens party organization [KOA] is today organizing a gathering and march to the U.S. Embassy and the Israeli Mission.

On this occasion, the EP bureau of KOA of the KKE has addressed the following appeal to the people of Athens:

"The Israelis are proceeding with their criminal plans under the multifaceted support and guidance of the U.S. imperialists, and are prepared to occupy Beirut. Their targets are the total extermination of the Palestinian people and progressive forces of Lebanon as well as the country's partition. In this state of affairs, it appears necessary once again to demonstrate in the most resolute manner solidarity as well as material and moral support for the Palestinian and Lebanese fighting patriots.

"For this purpose, the EP bureau of KOA of the KKE calls upon all Communists, every democrat and patriot to take part today, Tuesday, 29 June, in a gathering and protest march to the U.S. Embassy and Israeli Mission. The march will start at 2000 today from the town hall square [Kotzias Square].

" — Forward, to demand an end to the genocide of Palestinian and Lebanese patriots. The Israeli aggressors must withdraw unconditionally. Forward, to demand that the American murderers of people leave our country."

Artists will stage a big gathering in support for Palestinian children to be held at 2000 tomorrow, Wednesday, in the stadium [Panathinaikon].

TA291910 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 29 Jun 82

[Text] A Turkish Cypriot parliamentary delegation arrived in Turkey today as the official guests of Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu. In a statement before leaving the Ercan State Airport, Turkish Cypriot Legislative Assembly Speaker Nejat Konuk said that he was convinced that efforts to be made during their visit in Turkey in talks with officials would be beneficial in the promotion of relations as well as in finding ways through discussions to solve existing problems. Konuk recalled that as a result of the recent visit paid by Ulusu to the TFSC, a new stage was reached in relations with Turkey, adding that the visit of the Turkish Cypriot parliamentary delegation would bring a new meaning and perspective to these relations. The visit of the Turkish Cypriot parliamentary delegation, which will also be received by head of state Kenan Evren, will conclude on Monday, 5 July.

Ulusu Hosts Dinner

TA300706 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0415 GMT 30 Jun 82

[Text] Turkish Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that, as in the past, Turkey is determined to contribute through every sacrifice to the efforts to ensure a desirable level of future prosperity, happiness and security for the Turkish existence in Cyprus.

Ulusu gave a dinner last night in honor of the parliamentary delegation headed by Legislative Assembly Speaker Nejat Konuk that is currently visiting Ankara. In a statement at the dinner, Ulusu said that after long and difficult years filled with numerous examples of the struggle for freedom, the current point reached by the Turkish Cypriot community through their courage, determination and endurance is important for the political stability and the realization of peace in our region as well as for the success of the efforts to consolidate the future of the Turkish Cypriot community and for securing the balance of power on the island.

Ulusu noted that the close cooperation between Turkey and the TFSC conducted in a spirit of togetherness for the success of the national cause will be further developed. He added: The attitude of good faith that was and will be displayed by the TFSC and Turkey toward the efforts to resolve the Cyprus question in a peaceful manner constitutes a proud and exemplary reflection of the harmony based on understanding, commonsense and mutual love and respect in their own relations.

In his speech, Konuk pointed out that the Turkish Cypriot community is an indivisible and inseparable part of the great Turkish nation, adding that the Turkish Cypriot community attained its present state because it is a community based on Ataturk's principles. Noting that the Turkish Cypriot community was able to become a state as a result of the close interest and support demonstrated by the motherland, Konuk said that civilian population, including women and children, were killed during the last quarter of the 20th century because the Palestinian people lacked a motherland.

Konuk stated that we will overcome all our problems as the motherland is by our side and supporting us, noting that we owe our tranquil life to the motherland. He pointed out that our solution lies with Ankara and added that the Turkish Cypriot community will certainly conclude its chief cause in a positive manner in unity and solidarity and that whenever possible it will contribute to peace in the Middle East together with (?Turkey).

The parliamentary delegation will visit and lay a wreath at the Ataturk mausoleum at 0930 this morning. At 1030 it will meet with Ulusu and at 1130 with State and Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Baykara. The delegation will attend a briefing by the state planning organization and the Foreign Ministry at the Council of Ministers Hall at 1500. Baykara will host the members in a dinner tonight.

FOREIGN MINISTRY ISSUES STATEMENT ON MBFR TALKS

[Text] Bonn, 8 Jul (DPA) -- According to the Foreign Ministry, the Federal Government is hoping a breakthrough will at last be achieved in the MBFR talks in Vienna on a reduction in the number of East and West troops. A Foreign Ministry statement published in Bonn today says Bonn expects the "Eastern negotiating partner to show the required readiness for cooperation."

The Foreign Ministry refers to a joint Western proposal for an MBFR agreement offered by the Federal Government in Vienna today. The draft envisages agreed maximum strengths in the East and West of 700,000 men for ground forces and 900,000 for ground and air forces combined. The Foreign Ministry statement says this overall concept submitted by the West underscores the seriousness of the will to negotiate. The draft is based on a proposal made by the U.S. administration.

The Foreign Ministry says the fact must not be overlooked that an imbalance of conventional forces in Europe could lead to a new danger. The target which the MBFR talks is aiming at must be supplemented by the Madrid CSCE follow-up meeting which, it is hoped, will reach agreement on a European disarmament conference, the Foreign Ministry statement says.

Following the resumption of the Madrid conference in November it is hoped agreement will be reached on confidence-building measures reaching from the Atlantic to the Urals.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON BUNDESWEHR STRENGTH

[Text] Bonn, 7 Jul (DPA) -- Following the Cabinet's adoption of the 1983 defense budget of DM46 billion Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel said he regards the Bundeswehr as being fully ready for action. On German television this evening he said that the conventional deterrent was thus guaranteed. The Bundeswehr remains one of the best armies in the West. Next year the number of soldiers on longer terms of service will increase from the present 251,000 to an annual average of 253,000.

Apel opposed any structural changes in the Bundeswehr, but said that in 1986, as a result of the years with a low birth rate, military service would probably have to be extended to 18 months. On no account, however, will 16-year-olds be taken into the Bundeswehr; the entry age will remain at 18. The question of conscripting foreigners who live in the Federal Republic has been deferred. It is also necessary to check whether it is permissable under the constitution to accept women volunteers.

Apel endorsed the preservation of forward defense. He said the figure of 495,000 soldiers could not be reduced arbitrarily. He made it clear that the new weapons system must last into the next millennium.

ISRAELI ENVOY: PEACE DEPENDS ON PLO WITHDRAWAL

[Text] Hamburg, 8 Jul (DPA) -- Israeli Ambassador in Bonn Yitzhaq Ben-Ari has said there will be peace in Lebanon only "when the PLO withdraws completely, down to the last man." In an interview in today's BILD-ZEITUNG he said his country will also not tolerate a PLO information office in Beirut that would be a "terrorist cell against Israel and a base for international terrorism."

Ben-Ari stressed that the Israeli Army will "not remain an hour longer in Lebanon than is necessary for Israel's security." A condition for this, however, is an international force to safeguard peace in a buffer zone about 40 km wide in southern Lebanon. Assertions that Israeli troops have also attacked the civilian population and have tortured prisoners are PLO lies. The overwhelming majority of the Israeli population stands "clearly behind the government's aims," the ambassador said. The text of the interview was prereleased to DPA.

GENSCHER WRITES TO IRANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER

LD081816 Tehran Domestic Service in Persian 1630 GMT 8 Jul 82

Your excellency, A number of issues, problems and misunderstandings have occurred between our two countries which have prompted me to write this letter addressed to you personally.

As I explained to you during your visit to Bonn last February I attach special importance to my country's relations with the Islamic Republic of Iran. Therefore, I would like to explain to you the issues which have arisen and try, with your assistance and cooperation, to settle them.

I learned with deep regret that the Iranian Foreign Ministry has decided to temporarily suspend the activities of its missions to the Federal Republic of Germany. However, the decision is viewed as a restriction of the presence and activities of the Islamic Republic of Iran in our country which will have negative effects on our numerous ties.

The Foreign Ministry of the Islamic Republic of Iran has criticized the action taken by the officials of the alien department of the State of Rhineland-Palatinate against a number of Iranian youths.

In another part, the letter said: In this connection we would like to point out that a number of Iranians who used force against the Iranian establishments in our country last year are being prosecuted.

The letter ends: I am writing to you personally becuase I am looking at the future problems in our mutual relations and at the many grounds which link us together. We enjoy foundations for very fruitful cooperation. You are aware that during our talks last February I explained to you that the Federal Republic of Germany respects the political and social changes that your country's new regime has brought about in the Islamic Republic of Iran.

I sincerely hope that relations between the countries of the world will be based and expanded on the principles of mutual respect for each other's internal system and their laws. Whenever issues arise somewhere they can be dealt with on these principles.

I am certain that these aims can be achieved.

CHEYSSON'S SPEECH TO NATIONAL ASSEMBLY 6 JUL

AB081545 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 1105 GMT 8 Jul 82

[Minister of External Relations Cheysson's address to the National Assembly on 6 July]

[Text] Mr President, ladies and gentlemen, the government first wants to thank the Assembly for allowing it to take part in this debate on foreign policy.

Since we began running the affairs of government 13 months ago, we have only had one opportunity to hold a debate on the government's foreign policy. That debate came when parliament examined the budget. In fact, the latest debate on foreign policy dates back to April 1980. Indeed, there have been a large number of thorough and very interesting discussions of foreign policy at the level of the commission on foreign affairs. Such discussions have been of considerable help to the government because of the parliamentary control they imply. But I wish to express the desire that in the future our foreign policy be more frequently explained to the assemblymen and submitted to parliament. We would be happy about it.

Three months ago parliament was asked to approve Spain's admission into the Atlantic alliance. Questions were then put from various quarters. A number of members of the National Assembly and senators wanted to know the role of that alliance, its relations with the countries of Eastern Europe and the consequences of the existence of the Atlantic alliance within the Western group itself.

The government then proposed a debate on the balance of power and on war and peace -- problems in which the Atlantic alliance is a party but which are much more far-reaching.

My proposal is therefore to center my explanation on this topic: war and peace and the balance of power. Of course, after the debate, I will answer any question on other aspects of our foreign policy. But right now, I am making it a point to examine this major problem. And I have suggested the minister of defense speak after me in order to clearly show the harmony in our policy on what I will describe as areas of the state's external sovereignty.

It is more important than ever to discuss the issue of war and peace, because we know that anxiety has been awoken. It is publicly displayed both in the hearts and in the minds of the vast majority of the French. Even those who do not display any anxiety have questions.

We hear only of the din of war and the news of violence, brutality and the disregard of law in various parts of the world. There has been war in the Falkland Islands. An Argentine act of aggression on 2 April brought about a full-scale operation. The Security Council made an attempt to check the conflict, to bring it under control right from the start, through Resolution 502, which was ignored. The war took on wider proportions: 800 to 1,000 dead, considerable damage, confusion and significant difficulties in relations between Latin American countries and European and North American countries. France, in a show of solidarity with its ally -- France and its European partners, who were eager to defend the law and support the implementation of the Security Council resolution -- had to adopt sanctions. These have now been lifted as British rule has been restored over the Falkland Islands. We hope the cause of that war -- the disregard of law, the rejection of negotiations called for by the Security Council, the rejection of the involvement of the UN secretary general and the organization's bodies -- will now belong to the past and that problems can be solved through negotiations, in particular the issue of sovereignty. You are aware that France has never committed itself on the issue of sovereignty over the Falklands. Let us try to restore the state of law.

The bloodiest war in the past few months, in the past few years, is the one in which Iran opposed Iraq: 120,000, perhaps 130,000, dead; hundreds of thousands of refugees; horrible damage; and likely to be still more serious consequences if that war develops into one between two cultures or a religious war, particularly if it spreads much farther. This war broke out because in this case, too, the law was disregarded. We should restore the law. The boundary was established through the Algiers accords in 1975. It must be respected. Negotiations must therefore begin. Regional institutions or those common to both countries are probably the appropriate bodies to intervene: the Islamic Conference or the Nonaligned Movement. France will support any efforts at negotiation, particularly if -- as we hope -- the Security Council or the UN secretary general are to play a role in activating and coordinating efforts made in different quarters. In this case, too, commitment to restore peace through negotiations and to respect the law must be shown again at all cost.

Another country which is particularly close to us has just experienced and is still experiencing the consequences of the disregard of law: Lebanon. That country is a victim of all conflicts in that region. In a way, it is an echo chamber of every tension, every conflict and every difficulty which may crop up between different religions, different confessions, different political factions or different nationalities. The victim is always Lebanon, our longstanding friend and associate. Beirut is the martyred city of our era: perhaps 10,000 dead, or 12,000 as reported in Lebanon, in a few weeks as a result of foreign invasion. Remember the pictures shown on television. They are unbearable.

Our first duty was -- and still is -- therefore, to ensure that relief items reach the victims. France has undertaken a direct action within the community in coordinating the actions of nongovernment organizations. It has not relented in its appeal. In the Security Council it has ensured that decisions are made to prevent obstacles to the distribution of relief items. The prime minister himself went to Lebanon to show our country's solidarity with the Lebanese people. Our solidarity is unreserved.

Let us, however, think of Lebanon as a nation, as a state whose independence, integrity, unity and sovereignty are sacred to us and must be defended and supported whatever happens. As far back as 9 June, 4 days after the foreign invasion began, the president of the republic himself stated that France was ready to respond to any appeal from the legitimate Lebanese Government. And France will do so. That is normal; that is elementary.

We have therefore condemned Israel's aggression. We joined those who have demanded its immediate withdrawal with two resolutions within the Security Council. Within the European Community we have joined in the condemnation -- also categorical -- of the invasion.

But we are thinking of the future. Lebanon must one day once again be free from all foreign military presence. This does not only mean the withdrawal -- which is being demanded -- of the Israeli troops, but a return to the old Lebanon. This is what the president of the republic first said on 17 June in his talks with the Austrian chancellor.

And when we review the problem in its entirety we come back to the four principles which have constantly guided French policy, which I have already had the honor of presenting to this Assembly. The first of these principles is the right of states to live in peace and security within their recognized borders. This is Israel's right. We will not cease saying this, repeating this. We are prepared to defend it if necessary.

How can this be achieved? On 24 June, the European Council wrote that Israel would not obtain the security, to which it is entitled, by the use of force and by faits accomplis. And this is the second of our principles. It is through negotiation, and not through force and faits accomplis, that solutions that are acceptable to all can be reached.

But the European Council also feels that Israel would find this security if the legitimate aspirations of the Palestinian people, who should have the possibility of exercising their right to self-determination with all that it implies, are met.

Our fourth [as received] principle is the right to justice for all peoples: for the Palestinian people as well as for the Israeli people. This involves self-determination. You know that as far as the French Government is concerned this also implies the right to form a state.

Be that as it may, it is through negotiation that Israel should obtain its security while respecting the rights of the Palestinian people. The European Council declared that the Palestinian people should be able to make a commitment and should therefore be represented. This means that for their claims to be put forward through political channels it would be appropriate to associate the PLO with these negotiations.

These principles of the French Government were outlined a long time ago and were recently reaffirmed at the European level. You now have all the factors that prompted France to launch the highly intensive diplomatic action it has taken -- with the Lebanese, the PLO, the Israelis -- and even beyond that in the Middle East, and further yet, in Washington.

In compliance with what I have just said, our main concern was to prevent the attack on and destruction of Beirut since, as the president of the republic said, this would jeopardize the future of the country and peace in the entire region. The grip had to be loosened. The Lebanese Government and authorities must be given territory over which they alone can exercise sovereignty. A first step must be taken toward a truce, toward the transformation of the nature of the Palestinian presence from an armed force into a political force.

This is why, as early as 24 June, the French Government submitted to the Security Council a resolution calling for the disengagement of troops, the withdrawal of lightly-armed Palestinian forces to outside Beirut, the exclusive control of the city by the Lebanese authorities, and positioning of Lebanese troops, possibly backed by international forces, between the two sides. Unfortunately, this resolution was blocked by an American veto.

We have therefore decided to relaunch our action, this time by taking up the entire problem, if you will allow me to say so, on the basis of the principles which have since been outlined in a particularly moving and impressive manner by Messrs Klutznick and Mendes-France.

The document which is now before the Security Council, and which will be transformed into a draft resolution within the next few hours or days, therefore restates the disengagement proposals that we made initially and that were blocked by the veto. The principles, as stipulated by the European Council and which have just recalled are added to it.

These principles involve the preparation at the technical level of logistic elements which would make it possible to give this disengagement its full value and to control it thanks to backing given to the Lebanese authorities in the form of a UN force, or a force outside the United Nations but launched and guided by it, or a multinational, bilateral or trilateral force.

On this latter draft resolution which is taking shape, the French position has the characteristic of being co-sponsored by the Egyptians. This great Arab nation has indeed resumed its authority among the Arab countries, especially among those of the region. It has embarked upon a peace process with Israel and it is particularly fortunate that it should be able to express itself both as a great Arab nation and as a great nation which has already entered into negotiations with Israel.

Our joint representation has in fact received the unanimous support of the Arab countries, collectively with in the Arab League and individually. We have had confirmation of this through the mission of the envoy, sent by the president of the republic, who has returned today from the Middle East.

Regarding the PLO, I can confirm here before this Assembly that it has agreed to shift from an armed to a political force. What is now involved is to put it into practice. We cannot be content with statements. The main point is to reach the stage where there is mutual acceptance between Israel and the PLO, where Israel and an entity representing the Palestinians can work toward establishing peace. We have not reached that point today, but from this podium allow me to launch an appeal to both sides to work in this direction in respect for the great principles which I mentioned earlier and in respect for law and justice.

In fact, the three wars which led to bloodshed, and which dashed certain hopes or dampened them immensely, were caused by contempt for law and justice. The three wars have another characteristic: the fact that they took place in the Third World.

We note, in fact, not without concern, that all the wars and all the conflicts that have occurred since World War II have taken place in the South. Since 1945, 130 conflicts have been recorded, be they foreign or civil wars, wars of repression or of violent occupation, the victims have been in the South. Besides those I have mentioned let me recall the Afghans, Cambodians, Namibians, Saharans, Salvadorans, Chadians and so many more. They are all from the South. And what a heavy responsibility it is for these countries to arm and defend themselves.

What answer can we give to these countries of the South in this debate of war and peace?

Their disarmament? Certainly not. They have the right to ensure their defense. The problem is to make a certain degree of disarmament possible. This is to permit these peoples to devote themselves and all their human and financial resources to development, without, for that matter, having their territorial integrity and independence threatened.

As I have already had the honor to assert on behalf of the French Government before the UN session, we think that, primarily, the aggravation of each and every conflict or tension and its subsequent degeneration into part of the great rivalry between the East and the West should be avoided.

These conflicts and tensions exist. They result from secular rivalries or racial struggles that are the outcome of uprisings against injustice: injustices in the distribution of revenues, injustice in land matters, injustices inherited from the colonial period. Let us avoid making these regional conflicts part and parcel of the East-West conflict and tension. Let us leave each country to chart its own destiny. This is a fundamental principle of our policy, which is very closely linked with this analysis of peace and war. Yes, we are in favor of true nonalignment of the countries of the South. Let us encourage them constructively to search for regional and collective security. Let us see how we can contribute to creating areas of solidarity and independence. Already this has been done among us in Europe. In fact, our civil wars were particularly more severe, longer and more bloody and they have ever been in the Third World. We came to agreement and understood ourselves. Let us encourage them to act in the same way.

Through regional cooperation, let us hope they manage to week out the tensions and establish confidence. They must meet, hold discussions, check the facts, watch and check themselves. They must agree on armament limitations and on the control of these limitations. We must make progress toward regional agreements, supported by networks of regional observers. We must work toward mutual actions without interference, without external interference, and without our ending up transferring responsibility for every conflict onto the two superpowers through the extension of the cold war.

This method of approach can, by extension, be applied, and let us hope it happens some day, to achieve areas of nuclear disarmament in areas that are devoid of any nuclear presence. France is in favor of this in all parts of the world where nuclear dissuasion does not result in bringing balance. [France y est favorable dans toutes les parties du monde ou lequilibre ne resulte pas de la dissuasion nucleaire.]

The international community can and must contribute to this effort, not only by replacing those who should make decisions but also by providing them with the necessary means of information, control and surveillance.

Let us think about the use of satellites and all the technical means that can be provided without interference by foreign powers. It will happen that we, the French, will be able to join these denuclearized zones not only by pledging to respect the nuclear void so created, but also by contributing to the efforts made. We would like all Latin American countries to ratify the Tlatelolco Treaty, which stipulates the denuclearization of Latin America, so that we can participate as we have pledged. And why can't we have a similar situation in Africa?

Let us go still further and see how technological means can be placed at the disposal of those who accept cooperation among themselves. In the nuclear field, for instance, why not agree that where there is cooperation and agreement between the countries of a region, regional research centers and eventually regional enrichment and processing centers could be encouraged?

But let us come back, Mr Speaker, to the cold war. Until now, I have spoken about disarmament and the search for peace, or more limited wars, in the South.

As I have said, for some few months now we have noticed the reappearance of an agony which has been dormant for some years — that of war. Our peoples are hoping for peace and they are right. In the face of their genuine anxiety, they should, however, be warned against two errors: To confuse pacifism and the desire for peace with that of the spread of fear.

It is not by arousing and exploiting the war psychosis that we shall serve the cause of peace, nor could we do so by repeatedly making unilateral, spectacular and vague proposals aimed at abusing public opinion. The route to disarmament passes through an objective and realistic analysis of the factors which increase the risks of a general military confrontation.

A first truth which should clearly be emphasized is that the process of disarmament is not autonomous. Between the levels of arms and the behavior of states toward one another, there is a permament correlation: Arms contribute to creating tension, but they are often the consequence. The factors are inseparably connected: nuclear overarmament by the superpowers, the risk of strategic destabilization resulting from the military use of new technologies, conventional imbalance and the threat of a surprise attack.

To identify what puts world peace into danger, we should first of all remember what has been preserving it for 36 years: the certainty, known by all, that any conflict in Europe, any crisis which deeply and fundamentally affects the vital interests of the two superpowers, would lead to a nuclear apocalypse. Yes, it should be said... nuclear deterrent has been the arm for peace; for we can easily imagine the consequences of a frightening imbalance in conventional weapons that Europe has been experiencing at a time when democratic countries are devoting their major resources to rebuilding and improving the economic and social conditions of their societies.

For some years now, however, the race for nuclear arms, both in quality and quantity, has created two major threats — that of a first general nuclear strike, or more probably, limited to Europe by one superpower which thereby hopes to prevent such an attack from the other superpower, and that of a conventional attack in Europe initiated by a superpower which is sure that the level of its nuclear force protects it from any great nuclear riposts.

In the face of these dangers a miracle solution has been advanced for some months now: the unilateral commitment not to be the first to use nuclear force. I recall that the solemn commitment made in the UN Charter is not to resort to force in any form. But I would above all stress that this approach is dangerous, as long as a great conventional imbalance and political disagreement exist in Europe.

The development which has prevented -- and still prevents -- war is currently nuclear power. Forbidding oneself to resort to nuclear response would considerably -- even inordinately -- increase the threat from the other side of a conventional attack, and henceforth the threat of domination or war.

After brushing aside that demagogic solution, let us examine the priorities which must be recognized and defended by all those who really want peace: fighting nuclear over-armament, eradicating factors of technological destabilization, reducing the imbalance of conventional forces and restoring trust.

In the nuclear arms race bewtween the two superpowers, France supports the talks between the United States and Soviet Union on strategic nuclear forces and on medium-range arms. Those talks are an extremely positive factor. As a matter of fact, these superpowers have stockpiled superabundant nuclear forces of destruction. On the other hand, the arms race has become very disquietening in view of the quality of weapons because of the deployment or the projected deployment of more powerful and accurate ballistic arms.

In view of these threats, it is essential that the balance between the East and West should be brought to a lower and more stable level. Lower means that we expect the Geneva talks to result in a significant reduction in the nuclear forces of the two superpowers. More stable level means that as a matter of priority, the most destablising weapons must be eliminated.

In such a context, France does not plan to participate directly or indirectly in those negotiations, which must therefore remain at a bilateral level. That too must be said unambiguously, as it has been said for many years now.

Mere commonsense accounts for that position. While maintaining its full independence, France will escape forces far superior to its own only through nuclear deterrent. But now, France's nuclear deterrent is limited to the strict minimum necessary to deter anyone from dominating us. There is a possibility of reduction in the redundant, superfluous capacities of the superpowers. As for France, it cannot reduce its forces below the credibility level without jeopardizing its security and independence.

The situation would be different if three conditions were fulfilled: Reduction of the superpowers' armaments down to such a level that one can consider that the nature of imbalance between the two has changed; a quantitative and qualitative limitation of their defensive strategic system capable of some day neutralizing the French nuclear deterrent; lastly, a significant reduction in the imbalance of conventional forces in Europe and the elimination of any threat of chemical weapons.

Technological progress can offer new opportunities for the control of disarmament, which is essential; particularly with the use of satellites. That accounts for the clear proposal made by France as early as 1978, which was reiterated this year at the UN extraordinary session and which calls for the setting-up of an international satellite monitoring agency.

But unfortunately we cannot forget that technological progress can also be used for terrible military purposes, either in the form of new arms to offset deterrent arms, or new weapons of terror. France therefore supports the negotiations for international conventions on the prohibitation of antimissile and antisatellite weapons and of the production and stockpiling of chemical weapons. Of course, measures must be devised to ensure an efficient control, without which agreements on disarmament are meaningless.

Lastly, with regard to the third possible threat against the balance of power between the East and West being posed by the stockpiling of conventional weapons on our old continent, France, at the Madrid security conference, proposed the holding of a conference on disarmament in Europe. In fact, measures must be designed to restore trust, to reduce the threat of a surprise attack and, lastly, to correct the imbalance in offensive forces. The measures must fit the only geographic framework that has some sense in terms of conventional security; the whole European Continent, from the Atlantic to the Urals.

The French delegation will make efforts to this end. When the negotiations resume in Madrid, it will ensure that the deliberations are successfully brought to a conclusion in the fall.

I have spoken at length of three conflicts, wars and disputes in the South and of balance of power in the North. Throughout my statement the subject has been the future of our nations, of our peoples, of our men. Therefore can we ever place enough emphasis on the need to inform these people and these men and to associate them in the reflection and decision-making process as well as to mobilize them?

When we say mobilization, we think of war: It is high time we mobilized people for peace. But each citizen, aware of the situation, must appraise the problems in their proper dimension -- the problems of others too -- and in their true perspective. Every major world conflict -- we must never forget this -- was prepared and launched through failure to recognize and understand what was really the opinion or determination of the opponent. We should bear this in mind at all times.

Those who in France and elsewhere desire peace and have indicated this, are not prepared to accept enslavement. It would be dangerous for anyone to make a mistake about this. On the other hand, it would be fortunate and useful if this fundamental demand for peace were expressed in concrete terms, in a desire to find balance or control, in the demonstration of independence and in a genuine determination to achieve a better world order. This would mean making true progress toward peace.

We must therefore discuss it, we do not talk about it enough. Defense and security are too often considered secret or forbidden subjects. In this respect, this parliament, and parliaments in general, have a fundamental role to play. The other day, on behalf of the French Government, I went to speak before the European Parliament, not because we feel this body has any considerable future role, but because it is an elected assembly -- elected by secondary elections. This elected assembly has the authority to deal with the problems that must be discussed among the elected. A public debate is necessary. In this connection the United Nations has a decisive role to play. In this regard, the UN special session is excellent. These various institutions, the disarmament committee, the UNIDR [expansion unknown] or others have a duty: They must provide more information and promote more debates. The great minds should take a stand on these problems, but the press, the media should promote discussions.

The same desire for peace should also exist in other areas. Who can doubt that it exists among the members of the Warsaw Pact? Well, it should be possible to talk there about war and peace, about the real facts which will ensure either one or the other. The same possibility of expression and manifestation should be given there. Why should we not even assume that we can have a contradictory debate there thanks to the most sophisticated media?

I repeat, parliaments have a fundamental role to play in this mobilization. This is why I have focussed this debate on defense, war and peace. It is for the governments to take the appropriate measures but it is up to those elected by the people to demonstrate their desire for peace and to do so in concrete situations without aggravating the risks resulting from the proliferation of conflicts.

MAUROY QUESTIONED ON U.S. PIPELINE EMBARGO

[Text] [Question] French companies will also suffer from the intensified trade embargo against the Soviet Union. What do you think may come of this? Some people are afraid that a trade war will result. Do you still see any room for negotiations with the Americans? After all, U.S. quarters have hinted that they might be prepared to talk about loosening requirements for licenses provided the Europeans are prepared to make concessions regarding credit restrictions on the East bloc.

[Answer] I would say that we have to suffer together -- France just as the Federal Republic, and ultimately all of Europe. To me the policy pursued over there is simply nonsensical, and it needs to be firmly criticized. We have come out against it very firmly, and we have noted the same steadfastness on the part of your chancellor and your government.

As for whether this spells the end or if there is some room left, I would say that the room for negotiations is very small and is growing smaller each day.

I was present at the Versailles summit and took part in various dinners where heads of state and government chatted in a relaxed manner. We gained the impression that the U.S. head of state was gradually becoming aware that things just cannot continue as they are. Subsequently he voiced his commitment in the statement, which you know very well.

However, following his return home, he began a policy which is quite at odds with the commitments undertaken in Versailles. The word is that advisers around the President do not believe as much in Europe, and so on. In any event, this policy cannot be accepted, and we must come out energetically against it. We must make it clear to the Americans that it is intolerable to allow a trade war to develop among political allies. This does not of course, stop us from undertaking harsh competition even though we are political allies. After all, each country must look after its own interests. However, in this, I would say egoistic conduct of policy, this is not possible since the Americans are exploiting their position as a great power. They are misusing this position to change the rules of the game.

In this particular matter, after all, the United Snates has the option of withdrawing whereas the Europeans may well be confronted with the greatest difficulties. That simply is impossible to bear. Nor do I see any indications of a change for the better in this situation in the months ahead. This should make France and the Federal Republic stand even closer together in this matter so as to force the United States to change its course.

I believe that each country issues its own instructions to industry and its subsidiaries. As far as we are concerned, we are fully engaged in a struggle of the Europeans. The same is true for the Federal Republic. We would like Great Britain to join us. In any event, we strongly advocate extending the peaceful combat front in this matter.

GREATER GOVERNMENT ROLE IN LEBANON CRISIS URGED

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, July 8 -- A motion committing the Italian Government to working for military disengagement in west Beirut was approved by the Rome lower house Wednesday evening.

One section of the motion passed by a massive majority required the government to contribute "with solicitude and firm determination to seeking to forestall an Israeli attack on Beirut. The wording (?said this would mean) "new massacres" among the population and the "physical elimination" of the Palestinian combatants.

The wording also said the government should warn Israel against deciding on a move which would cause a "catastrophe" and "compromise Lebanon's future and peace for the whole Mideastern region".

The vote on these dispositions was 402 in favor and 36 against, but the second part of the motion, which Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo said he did not support, scraped through with 220 ayes and 217 noes.

The wording said the government should "work for military disengagement of the forces in the field and for the neutralization of west Beirut guaranteed by the Lebanese Army and contingents from the United Nations".

Meanwhile, a majority of the M.P.s in the lower house signed a petition to Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini urging immediate recognition of the Palestine Liberation Organization as the Palestinian people's legitimate representative.

The petition has culled 350 names so far from Christian Democrats, Communists, Socialists, Radicals, the Proletarian Unity Party, and leftwing independents.

A communique pointed out that this was the first time that either of the two houses of parliament had found an all-party absolute majority of such "ample and decisive" dimensions in voicing a stance to the government and public opinion.

The signatories included the entire parliamentary caucuses of the Communists, the Radicals, the Proletarian Unity Party and the leftwing independents.

But, more significantly for the wide base of the appeal, it was supported by 91 Christian Democrats, including former Party Secretary Benigno Zaccagnini, and 36 Socialists, including former Secretary Francesco de Martino and veteran Riccardo Lombardi. These two parties are in the present government.

The motivation for recognizing the PLO pointed to the "inadmissible Israeli aggression" in Lebanon and the "consummation of a grave act of genocide against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples".

The petition also called on other "democratic" M.P.s -- that is excluding the extreme rightists -- to join the initiative as a "duty-bound contribution in favor of the Palestinian people's just cause and for a peaceful and negotiated solution to the Mideastern conflict".

POPE ISSUES NEW APPEAL FOR PEACE IN LEBANON

[Text] (ANSA) -- Vatican City, Jul 8 -- Pope John Paul II issed a new appeal for peace in Lebanon at his weekly general audience in St Peter's Square, Wednesday evening, telling an estimated 25,000 persons that negotiations to lift the Israeli siege of Beirut must be speeded up.

Describing the situation in the Lebanese capital, he pointed out that hundreds of thousands of persons are short of food, water, and medicine while house-by-house fighting could rage through the streets if the negotiations are not brought to a successful conclusion. "Every hour that passes is a new weight and a new threat of still harsher suffering for the defenseless population", he warned.

His prayers were directed to the "victims of the war, their relations, the refugees, and the homeless". In the pope's view, God should intervene to inspire those in charge to achieve the following objectives:

Renewed unity and independence for Lebanon.

The conclusion of a rapid agreement safeguarding the safety of civilians and combatants alike.

The same agreement should take account of the Palestinians' aspirations for justice and the aspirations for security and peace of all the peoples involved.

PSI SECRETARIAT STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT CRISIS

PM081319 Rome AVANTI in Italian 4-5 Jul 82 p 1

[Text] The PSI Secretariat has issued the following communique on the situation that has come about following Wednesday's [30 June] Council of Ministers meeting: "The split that has occurred within the Council of Ministers has a clear political significance. The repetition of paralyzing contrapositions within the government seems all the more serious at a difficult time for the nation's economy, within a context of a sharper social conflict demanding unity, consistency and constancy of approach and action. The split confirms the existence of a substantial disagreement with the CDC and with those who represent its policy within the government concerning the remedies for reducing inflation, defending employment and the measures needed to remedy the public deficit.

"Together with and apart from the errors of assessment and administration that have emerged in the government's activity, the policy of the Treasury Ministry and the DC seems increasingly characterized by the attempt to unilaterally modify the agreed line and approaches, in view of an attitude in which there is a confusion between rigorousness and recession and in which its own pointers are set against the collegial ones of the government, thus obstructing the development of government initiatives with respect to the social partners consistent with its original program stance.

"The PSI Secretariat has decided to convene the party Directorate to examine the situation as a whole and to assess the consequences deriving from the repeated introduction of factors of disunity and of crisis in government cooperation."

AVANTI: DC HAS FORSAKEN SPIRIT OF COOPERATION

FMO81401 Rome AVANTI in Italian 29 Jun 82 pp 1, 3

[Editorial: "Spirit of Cooperation"]

[Text] On the morrow of the DC congress we managed to avoid sudden decisions taken in the wake of a legitimate polemical reaction. Since then we have committed ourselves to a particularly prudent line and have deliberately opted for a period of observation. Indeed, everyone will recall the proceedings at the congress of the government coalition's largest party, which were dominated by a hostility, as marked as it was unjustified, against the Socialist Party, though the conclusions did not immediately appear open to converging interpretations on their various possible influences on the general political situation.

Nevertheless, amid the indeterminacy and contradictoriness of the motivations and impulses, one thing certainly seemed clear to everyone and above everything else — a simple, basic brutal and sincere point. Turned in on itself, as if wounded by the characteristics assumed by the current political evolution and by its concurrent change of balances, the DC, having settled its internal political and personal accounts by means of a reorganization of its factions, had expressed a strong, widespread and prevalent desire to restore the factors of its strength, its primacy and, along the same line, its rule and hegemony. This was not a reversal of alliances, desired perhaps only by some limited sector within the DC, but certainly a significant change of political relations.

For that matter, this is in line with the crude theories of the "two bakers" and the value judgments about the two mainstays of Italian democracy, the PCI and the DC, with the rest relegated to acting as an entourage in well-defined future alternatives. Toward the PCI, though held at a respectful distance, wary adulations were addressed which met with varying responses. At least some of them contained anything but discouraging messages, if read carefully between the lines and against the light. With respect to the secular parties a number of steps were taken aimed at dismantling a process of increasing convergence among the various different forces of secular and socialist democracy, along a line whose first aim is intended to be the restoration of a substantial hegemony over the whole or part of this political area. Only in the light of such general political considerations, not of superficial and peripheral irritations, is it in fact possible to explain the manifestations of hostility toward the Socialists, the envenomed assessments and the acrimonious or irrational analyses of the Socialist "new course" and the provocative initiatives that have occurred and are still occurring both within and outside the government.

All this could not fail to have even more negative repercussions on a state of relations that over the past year had already suffered a major and progressive deterioration. The spirit of cooperation has thus been reduced to an absolute minimum. A necessary nourishment for any coalition, the spirit of cooperation itself requires exceptional nourishment, especially when objective difficulties are rapidly multiplying and when, amid a climate of major tensions and social conflicts, every decision becomes laborious, contested and even very risky. Exactly the opposite has happened, however.

It is the realization of the progressive decline of the spirit of cooperation, overtaken by a spirit of revenge, protest and ill-concealed impatience with the policy of the allies themselves and particularly with us, that has prompted us in recent weeks to adopt a cautious line of conduct and to make a careful analysis of the possible and realistic ways of resolving and emerging from a situation that in the meantime seemed and seems increasingly crushed under the weight of difficulties, of conflicting intentions and undeniable errors of assessment and management.

It is true that we previously urged a verification of the coalition's political programs and wishes and that subsequently we deliberately did not press for it to be held as soon as possible.

But 6 months had gone by since we made our first request for a verification. Much precious time had been lost since then and we had had to await the effects of calculations, dates and mistrusts other than our own. Thus we have witnessed an inevitable process of the progressive weakening and erosion of the ties of solidarity within the coalition. In the meantime everything was sliding and deteriorating: The budget and the finance bill were allowed to slide, public spending was racing away out of hand, the recession was having an impact on inflation but also very much so on unemployment, the conflict between the two sides of industry was becoming more obstinate and clashes, satisfaction and mistrust among the political forces were increasing. Matters had been driven to such a point that a verification amid an atmosphere pervaded by a rarefied spirit of cooperation would have been doomed to certain failure. At a time when solidarity among the political forces shouldering shared government responsibilities seemed closest and most necessary, a deliberate thrust was given to a line of conflict, of which Minister Andreatta's attitudes and initiatives in the difficult field of economic policy are simply an extraordinary reflection. In view of the gravity of the economic and social problems, this line is now donning the guise of a supposed rigorousness as opposed to an alleged laxity, a supposed decisionmaking capacity and will set against an alleged indecisiveness and uncertainty, or the guise of a supposed sense of responsibility and correctness on the part of unyielding and misunderstood statemen vis-a-vis an alleged lack of comprehension, decisiveness and determination on the part of amateurs in government. In short, nobody can fail to see the substance and form being assumed by the "grit" promised to us by the previous DC secretary.

If developed, this attitude could prove incompatible not only with cooperation with us but with any kind of cooperation designed to maintain the criteria of stability and mutually supportive sharing of responsibility. If anyone, whether as an individual or as a party, has a new kind of grit to submit, then let him do so: He is fully entitled to do so. But it should be added that whoever desires this will inevitably be reminded of his duty to address the voters, first and foremost, to explain and to seek a judgement on and support for his new line, his new policy, his new grit.

Having said this, we will specify without any possibility of misunderstandings our stances and our willingness for a policy of rigorousness, reform and justice -- objectives and values that cannot be artificially separated or negatively contraposed.

The state of political relations within the government and Parliament says a great deal about the degree of deterioration that we have now reached. It is now primarily up to others to take initiatives and decisions likely to restore the political conditions and the spirit of cooperation needed to tackle the pressing crisis and to answer the expectations of the country, of the struggling labor world and of the production forces willing to reason in accordance with an outlook sympathetic toward the general interests. We will play our part. We merely note, as everybody should note, that this is not the time for futile maneuvers and polemics. The leeway has been consumed and the political problem has now been reduced to its essentials.

CALVO-SOTELO: COALITION POSSIBLE AFTER ELECTIONS

[Text] Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo has said the magic word: "Coalition." This is the word the prime minister has refused to utter throughout his 1 and 1/2 years at the Moncloa Palace. In order to govern effectively, said Calvo-Sotelo last night, a majority government will be necessary after the elections and only a coalition will achieve this. So coalition is the key word, which for some time has been on the lips of Fraga, Carrillo and Felipe Gonzalez; this left only the prime minister and now he has uttered it: a coalition government after the elections, but not a coalition with just anybody.

During the closing ceremony to the debates of the foundation for progress and democracy the prime mini ter said that due to the electoral system it is very difficult to achieve a majority in elections and therefore a coalition government becomes necessary. Calvo-Sotelo rejected the possibility of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] entering into an alliance with the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party [PSOE].

Observers now see the prime minister as being closer to the "natural majority" advocated by Manuel Fraga. Calvo-Sotelo said that in a modern state not everything can be encompassed by populism and he announced that the 'baton' of politics will soon be passed to other people. On the crisis in the UCD he said that he has done everything he can to strengthen party unity and that he will never belong to any centrist faction.

The position set out last night by Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo takes on its full meaning as the UCD now awaits tomorrow's meeting of the Executive Committee which in principle should bring the centrist crisis to an end with the acceptance of Landelino Lavilla as party president. But nothing is certain yet and all the options are still open.

LE MATIN INTERVIEWS PRIME MINISTER CALVO-SOTELO

PM081429 Paris LE MATIN in French 22 Jun 82 p 12

[Jean-Louis Arnaud interview with Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo -- date and place not given]

[Excerpt] Calvo-Sotelo speaks about French-Spanish relations with more passion than might be expected from him. He has always wanted to see them improve and thinks about a historic reconciliation between France and Spain which could become in the eighties the equivalent of the French-German reconciliation in the sixties. This is what he told LE MATIN's special representative.

Calvo-Sotelo: A diagnosis? I cannot say that our relations with Mitterrand are worse than the relations we had with Giscard. It would be unfair. I gained the impression in Paris, in June 1981, that they could be improved. And they probably have improved. However, no decisive step has been taken. There are so many connections between our two neighboring countries, which are important because of both their populations and their economies, that relations between them can never be of no consequence. Public opinion sees them as either good or bad. I believe that they should be privileged. My government is willing to do anything necessary to ensure that they are. And I presume that this is also the attitude on Mr Mitterrand's side.

LE MATIN: In the Spanish press especially, two problems are to the fore -- the Basque problem and Spain's membership of the Common Market. Is there nothing else in the relations between France and Spain?

Calvo-Sotelo: At present, these are the two main difficulties. But seeing French-Spanish cooperation merely in terms of the struggle against terrorism and Spain's entry into the Community is an oversimplification. There are spheres in which our cooperation can improve without great difficulties — the cultural sphere, for instance, as well as foreign policy, Latin America and relations with African countries, especially North Africa states. In the commercial and industrial spheres there is scope for improvement. However, the two main issues are indeed France's cooperation in the struggle against terrorism, which public opinion deems insufficient, and our membership in the Community toward which Spanish opinion believes France to be unsympathetic. President Giscard openly put a brake on the spring 1980 negotiations. Similar checks, less spectacular but equally effective, have been imposed during the deliberations of various Brussels committees.

Le Matin: Why do you dwell on public opinion, and what are you referring to?

Calvo-Sotelo: I am simply referring to the general opinion of the Spanish people which is reflected in the press. But the government also has its own reasons. I know what I am talking about because I was a negotiator in Brussels for 2 and 1/2 years. I know that in addition to institutional difficulties there are specifically French-created difficulties. Whenever we were faced with an especially serious problem or a particularly long delay, France was behind it. This is the so-called prerequisite technique -- there is always a condition that must be fulfilled before the next step is taken. And once that condition is fulfilled, another one is advanced. . . . Three years and three months have elapsed since the negotiations began; five years since we applied for membership. These delays have been extended unduly.

As for terrorism, we do not want to shirk our own responsibility or say that only France is to be blamed for lack of progress. However, we do intend to make it clear that, despite the French Government's efforts, terrorist groups have continued to use French territory as a base for their operations in Spain. The necessary effort to prevent this has not yet been made. And I am deliberately not mentioning the problem of extraditions, since in that sphere reasons of principle have forced the French Government to take a decision which has hit us very hard.

Le Matin: Do you accept these reasons?

Calvo-Sotelo: I cannot accept them. I do not believe that the expression "France -- land of refuge" is applicable to common criminals found guilty of odious crimes by the French courts themselves. Since Spain has become a democracy, nothing can justify the use of arms or terror to champion anyone's opinions.

Le Matin: But some people come to France and in fact ask for asylum because, they say, they have problems with the Spanish police and they talk of torture.

Calvo-Sotelo: All these arguments are misleading. No one is persecuted in Spain for opinions freely and peacefully expressed. However, I do not want to get upset about extraditions. There is a sphere where cooperation could be closer -- I refer to placing people accused of such crimes under house arrest. First they were sent to an island, later, under pressure from public opinion, they were taken back to the mainland and, finally, they escaped from police custody. . . . This is not effective cooperation.

Le Matin: Some people also escape in Spain. . . .

Calvo-Sotelo: Maybe the Spanish police are occasionally ineffective, but the French police certainly are. What I want to see is the fulfillment of the promise that persons found guilty of common crimes by the French courts will be detained. Furthermore, people known to the French police for their connections with terrorist activities could be kept away from the border. This is a tricky problem which I intend to discuss at length with President Mitterrand. It is in France's interest not only for reasons of principle but also for political reasons that an end be put to Spanish terrorism.

LE MATIN: Have you any misgivings about this?

Calvo-Sotelo: No, but I have doubts about the effectiveness of the measures taken.

LE MATIN: Governments cannot be held responsible for everything which is either done or prepared on their territory.

Calvo-Sotelo: All right, but cooperation should be as effective as possible. We have not achieved this. However, I do not rule out the possibility of achieving it, and I hope that Mitterrand's visit will provide an opportunity for achieving progress.

LE MATIN: Do you associate yourself with the Spanish press?

Calvo-Sotelo: I do not have to associate myself with a free press in which opinions of all kinds, some of which may seem overstated, are expressed. But rest assured that even if some overstatements are made, they contain something which is intrinsically true and which Spanish opinion believes to be true. Why should we not establish -- maybe we will be able to do this during President Mitterrand's visit -- unreserved and wholehearted cooperation? Couldn't France really help this young democracy which deserves help? The French say that they admire the political transition which has occurred in Spain. Do they not sometimes confine themselves to aesthetic admiration, and shouldn't it be transformed into effective cooperation?

LE MATIN: What do you suggest?

Calvo-Sotelo: That France cease to create difficulties and delays in negotiations with the Community and that, while upholding its own principles, it effectively contributes to the suppression of terrorism.

LE MATIN: If it did, would a great reconciliation take place?

Calvo-Sotelo: It is the French-German reconciliation that I have in mind. Were there not in France and Germany at one time two people who stubbornly sought to resolve old problems? And they were resolved. To a large extent, Europe has been built on good French-German relations. Well, it is necessary to make a similar effort to resolve old French-Spanish problems and do away with the historical prejudices sustaining them. It is a matter of importance for Europe's progress to ensure that mental reservations between Paris and Madrid disappear as they have disappeared between Paris and Bonn.

LE MATIN: What method do you suggest? The step-by-step method?

Calvo-Sotelo: Certainly, but based on a clear declaration of intent which President Mitterrand can make. Personally, I see no objection to this. If the political will is clear and is expressed with conviction, gradual progress will follow. I realize that problems cannot be resolved at a stroke. I realize that the EC is faced with problems unconnected with France which render our negotiations difficult but I also know, bearing the example of France and Germany in mind, what political will can achieve.

LE MATIN: This is tantamount to admitting that problems are likely to remain and that we must learn to live with them.

Calvo-Sotelo: There will always be problems between neighbor countries. But once you have taken the first step and have the political will to resolve them, those common problems of life are bound to become residual in nature. Any problem which is in the process of being resolved always becomes much less serious.

SCANDINAVIANS TO ESTABLISH TIES WITH VATICAN

PM081027 [Editorial Report] Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 23 Jun 82 carries on page 1 a Christian Brondum report of a Danish Government decision to establish diplomatic relations with the Vatican, a move "taking place in coordination with the Norwegian and Swedish Governments, which are expected to take similar decisions within the next few weeks." Brondum reports that the Danish Foreign Ministry had no explanation to offer for the timing of the decision.

Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 24 Jun 82 carries a page 1 unattributed report of a Swedish Government decision to open diplomatic relations with the Vatican. The report states that the decision comes as a result of "pressure from the Riksdag and most recently after a call from the Riksdag Foreign Affairs Committee that the possibilities of establishing diplomatic relations be investigated."

[Text] Yesterday the new defense legislation, born amid great political difficulties in the spring, came into force. It will remain in force until 1984 and it will mean rationalization, cuts, the closure of barracks, the loss of civilian jobs and dismissals within the defense forces' own ranks. The politicians describe the whole thing as "improving efficiency." However, Defense Chief Gen Knud Jorgensen, is not particularly happy about the trend now set in motion.

"By 1984 we will have lost a large number of personnel," the general told RITZAUS BUREAU. "In real terms there will be 31,000 men in our fighting forces and we will be down to 80 aircraft. By then we will also need new ships, first and foremost submarines."

General Jorgensen: "Today our defense forces are very good. But if we continue with the present policy of cuts the defense forces will in real terms be eaten up in 15 or 16 years."

The political negotiations leading to the defesne legislation which came into force yesterday were principally about the possible percentage increase in the defense budget, but General Jorgensen considers this unfortunate. He hopes that when the politicians begin discussion of the 1984 legislation they will give priority to the tasks the defense forces have to carry out and to the threats there may be to Denmark, rather than to how much money they are willing to spend.

Defense high command in Vedbaek has already begun to tackle the problem of planning for the future. It is working on drawing up five different models for future Danish defenses up to 2000. They will all be defined in a number of 10-year plans. These plans will be presented to the politicians in 1983.

Parallel to the five models the defense high command is also working on alternative models using "fashionable" defense forms -- nonviolent defenses and a defense force based on arming the population or a militia. The defense chief also told RITZAUS BUREAU that people should not imagine that defenses in Denmark -- or anywhere else for that matter -- will all be controlled by computer after 2000.

FOREIGN MINISTER VIEWS EEC CHAIRMANSHIP PLANS

PM071603 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 25 Jun 82 p 5

[Lars Th. Kjolbye report]

[Text] Denmark will give the highest priority to combating unemployment when it is chairman of the EEC. Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen repeated this position yesterday, only one week before he takes over as chairman of the EEC Council of Ministers. At numerous EEC summits the Danish Government has demanded that unemployment in the EEC, which now totals 10-11 million people, be given priority, and at a meeting arranged by the Publicist Club in Copenhagen on Thursday [24 June] Olesen said that he saw the other EEC nations' acceptance of Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen's position at the last EEC summit in March as a good omen for the summit this coming weekend.

It will also be the Danish Government which will turn the decisions of this last summit under Belgian chairmanship into practical action. In the economic field Denmark as chairman will in addition attach importance to combating inflation, to which other EEC nations have given absolute top priority.

Olesen also expressed fears that the EEC area is falling behind in the technological race with the United States and Japan. He said that the problem is due to the outdated structure of industry and called for greater investment in both training projects and in adapting European industry, which Olesen said is characterized by outdated organization in decisive sectors such as the automobile and steel industries.

Greenland's connections with the EEC will also be dealt with under Danish chairmanship, and here -- addressing his remarks to Greenlanders -- Olesen said that "we will stand by your side." He added that Denmark would strive to secure for Greenland the most advantageous arrangement possible when negotiations on its withdrawal finally begin. Denmark has also decided that Greenland Prime Minister Jonathan Motzfeldt will accompany him when he briefs the EEC Parliament at the beginning of July on the Danish initiatives which are to be expected under Danish chairmanship.

However, in one area in particular Olesen takes a pessimistic view of developments in the next 6 months. The negotiations for Spanish and Portuguese admission are going badly, and Olesen said candidly that the French attitude to these negotiations is "most regrettable." In Madrid on Wednesday [23 June] French President Francois Mitterrand described Spanish membership as a "disaster." Olesen said that he could see protectionist elements in the French attitude and expressed his regret "if further progress in the admission negotiations is made impossible."

Olesen also commented on the cool atmosphere between Washington and the Danish Government and the continued lack of an invitation to Jorgensen to visit Washington as EEC chairman, as is the custom. Olesen said that he had noted how the press was treating the matter and without going into details said that the matter had been "exaggerated."

PORTUGUESE WEEKLY INTERVIEWS FRANCIS PYM

PM081413 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 26 Jun 82 pp 1-2

[Benjamin Formigo 25 June interview with Foreign Secretary Francis Pym -- place not given]

[Text] "Real peace for Israel is inextricably linked to the restoration of the Palestinian's fundamental rights," British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym told EXPRESSO in an exclusive interview yesterday. "The invasion of Lebanon has made the resolution of the conflict more difficult."

Britain has joined in the condemnation of the invasion of Lebanon, which it regards as "a considerable setback for the restoration of peace in the Middle East, where the situation is potentially dangerous to world stability."

"I have been shocked by the severity of the fighting and the high number of people affected," Francis Pym told us. "Israel cannot achieve security for its borders in this way. We demand the immediate withdrawal of Israeli troops."

Aligning himself with what has been the U.S. stance, the minister expressed the hope that the recent events will not prevent the setting up of a stable government in Lebanon which can maintain peace in the territory.

Menahem Begin has been justifying the invasion as an act of self-defence -- something which has not been accepted by most countries. Although he states that he understands Israel's interest in "ensuring that it will not remain the target for terrorist attacks," and that he recognizes "that Israel has been experiencing an atmosphere of violence over the last few years," Francis Pym rejects the Israeli justifications for the invasion of Lebanon. "It is quite unrealistic to believe that the Palestine problem, which is the core of this conflict, can be simplified [words illegible in newspaper] political organization of the PLO. Peace for Israel is inextricably linked to the restoration of the Palestinians' fundamental rights."

Palestinian State

Aligning itself with the EEC, Britain also believes that the Palestinians have the right to choose their future for themselves within the framework of a peace agreement. However, the British foreign secretary acknowledges that international guarantees are perhaps necessary for the two sides to trust each other.

Previously, former Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington declared himself prepared to meet Yasir 'Arafat to discuss the Palestinian issue.

"Like Lord Carrington," the minister stated, "I am prepared to meet Mr 'Arafat if that could contribute to the cause of peace. We have explained to the PLO that we believe that it should make quite clear its readiness to recognize Israel's right to live in peace and security, provided that Israel, for its part, accepted Palestinian rights. We regret that the PLO has so far not taken such a crucial step as this, which is becoming urgent in view of the most recent events, but I hope that they are prepared to do so soon."

Since 1966 there has been a certain agreement on the prices of agricultural produce in the EEC. The Community recently approved an increase in those prices against Britain's wishes. At the time, the London press considered that the greatest crisis in the Community since Britain's entry had begun. Francis Pym, while denying, not without a certain amount of irony, his responsibility for what the British press was saying, acknowledged that the 18 May decision to approve the agricultural prices, despite the objections of three member states, created an extremely grave situation. Hence the moves which led the foreign ministers of the Ten in Brussels on 20 June to discuss the procedures for making decisions.

"Four member states supported our viewpoint. Decisions should not be taken by a majority when one of the states believes that its national interests could be at stake. I believe that at this meeting the conditions were created which make it possible to safeguard important national interests of the member states. Now we will have to see how the agreements reached will work in practice."

The fact that Britain agreed to increase its contribution to the EEC budget this year, within the context of an agreement valid only until the end of 1982, at the very moment when some people were suggesting that the Community would not renew the economic sanctions imposed on Argentina following the invasion of the Falkland Islands, was interpreted as a concession by London to secure the maintenance of those sanctions as long as the conflict lasted.

"We never attempted to link any Community issues, such as, for instance, the budgetary issue, with the EEC's support for our stance during the Falklands crisis. For us, it was a matter of totally separate issues, and I believe that it was also so for our partners. The 30 May 1980 agreement envisaged that solution for 1982 if the Community did not achieve consensus on a long-term solution. That was, unfortunately, the case, and for that reason we will have an agreement lasting 1 year, which will give the EEC time to consider the long term, which I deem essential for the interests of all member states."

Now that the Argentine invasion is over, the Falkland Islands remain on the agenda, both because they were the immediate cause of the fall of the Buenos Aires military junta and because the international and British press has referred repeatedly to the costs of maintaining a military garrison on the islands.

According to what the British foreign secretary told us, some of the estimates which have been disseminated are exaggerated. According to him, the costs of the military operations are not significant in relation to the government budget, and the 2.4 billion-pound contingency fund is more than sufficient to cover matters of this kind.

"The garrison now necessary in the Falkland Islands is considerably smaller than the task force," Francis Pym told us. "The British economy was not really affected by the crisis: The pound recently reached its highest exchange rate in the last 14 months, and inflation reached the lowest level in 3 years."

However, Britain does not intend to remain in the archipelago in the long term.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has already stated that agreements could be reached with other countries, some of them in Latin America -- specifically, Brazil -- to secure stability in the islands, perhaps through setting up a peacekeeping force with the participation of Brazil and the United States. But to what extent will Brazil, which recognized Argentine sovereignty over the islands 150 years ago, and the United States, which is attempting to repair its relations with Latin America, be prepared to take part in that force?

"The immediate responsibility for the security of the Falkland Islands must be ours, and we accept it," the minister stated. "But it is possible that in the future other countries wil agree to take part in some way. All the countries in the region also benefit from the return of peace and stability to the South Atlantic." "As far as the United States is concerned," Francis Pym continued, "it supported us in an important manner during the crisis and it must, of course, take into account its relations with its Latin American neighbors, but that does not prevent it from recognizing the most important principles involved: the Argentine aggression must not be successful, and the right of the residents and inhabitants to self-determination must be guaranteed. We are certain that the U.S. Government will continue to uphold the right of the residents to free choice, and we hope that it will help us to guarantee those aims. On the other hand, it is true that the Falklands crisis has significantly affected our traditional good relations with South American countries, but I can see no reason for the diplomatic problems existing today to persist. They have realized already that we have no aggressive intentions against any part of Latin America."

In many people's opinion, the matter of the extent to which it will be possible to remain in the islands in the long term, without agreements of a political nature being signed with Buenos Aires, remains open. Let it be recalled that Argentina has not so far formally declared the hostilities in the South Atlantic ended. At worst, it could be supposed that Britain, responsible for the archipelago's fate and security, might face constant conflict with that country such as now happens in the Middle East. However, London trusts that Argentina, when the disturbed period which it is now experiencing is over, will acknowledge that it was a mistake to open hostilities in the South Atlantic and agree to formalize the end of hostilities.

NATO Commands Will Be Object of Consensus

Spain's joining NATO and its plan for setting up a military area under its command, including the strategic arc from the Balearics to the Canary Islands via Gibraltar and another area covering the bay of Biscay -- part of which is under British command today -- are raising new issues. But Francis Pym deems it premature to express any stance on reports which have not been discussed within the Atlantic alliance framework and which will have to be handled in accordance with the interests of the member states involved in any changes.

The fact that Spain was the only NATO country with a stance favorable to Argentina in the Falklands conflict is not regarded by the British as a factor which could intensify or cause any friction within the alliance, which "has already proved that it is sufficiently strong" and has "the flexibility necessary to contain different viewpoints within it."

A meeting between London and Madrid foreign ministers on Gibraltar should have taken place in Sintra this weekend. In view of the recent events in the Falklands, Madrid believed this was not the best occasion for discussing the issue. For its part, the Foreign Office agreed that this was so, and the negotiations were postponed indefinitely. Both sides apparently wish to allow public opinion in their respective countries to cool down.

There remains one question which we put to Francis Pym: How are London's statements, according to which Gibraltar's destiny depends on its inhabitants' wishes, and the sovereignty claimed by Spain to be reconciled?

"We have indeed given the people of Gibraltar guarantees that we will never accept any agreement on sovereignty which runs counter to their freely and democratically expressed wishes. The key to a solution -- and we have made this clear to our Spanish friends who, I believe, understand our position -- lies in the people of Gibraltar themselves. Opening the border and a policy of rapprochement between the two sides would build mutual understanding and make possible practical cooperation. I greatly regret, although I understand the reasons, that the Spanish Government has not been prepared to open the borders and the negotiations, as was envisaged by the 10 April 1980 Lisbon agreement. But, as you know, the Spanish minister and I are determined to keep alive the process begun in that agreement. We remain in touch, and I sincerely hope that it will be possible very soon to set a new date for a meeting."

Portuguese View on Namibia

One of the most important international issues broached with the Portuguese leaders has been that of Namibia. A member of the "contact group," Britain has discussed some issues with Portugal in this connection. "Your knowledge of that area could be very useful to us for rapidly reaching a solution, and there are recent signs from Angola, from the South-West Africa People's Organization and from South Africa that some steps forward could be taken."

PRESENCE OF U.S. FORCES ON UK BASES CRITICIZED

NC081033 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 8 Jul 82 p 5

[From the "Positions" column: "The Bases Are Springboards"]

[Text] While the heroic defenders of Beirut are being blockaded by the barbarous neo-Nazi Isarelis and are holding the banner of human dignity high, unprecedented movements are being observed at the Akrotiri British base. The U.S. presence, in the form of F-16 squadrons and U.S. Marines in a state of full alert, has been observed over the last few days.

Cypriot territory is openly being used by the enemies of the interests of the struggling people in the area. These enemies are supporting the barbarian aggressors. The use of the British bases, which were forced on Cyprus by neocolonialism, is illegal. The Republic of Cyprus should immediately react. The presence of the British bases in Cyprus, which was imposed by force, provides that they not be used for aggressive purposes. Help offered by Cyprus to the struggling Palestinians is still inadequate. It is a tragic irony, therefore, when Cypriot territory is not being used as a friendly area in active support of burning Lebanon but as a hostile springboard.

We expect the government of partnership to immediately denounce the U.S. presence in Cyprus. We expect the British to be faced with their responsibilities because they are provoking the feelings of the Cypriot people when they make the bases available to U.S. expansionism.

Britain is a guarantor of the independence of the Republic of Cyprus. Let Britain therefore stop violating even further the sovereignty of a Cyprus already half occupied by Turkey. Let it become aware that the ceding of rights -- that is already imposed on Cypriot territory by force -- will not be tolerated. Cyprus cannot be used for stabbing its traditional friends in the back because the British and Americans wish to do so.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS HELD ON GOVERNMENT POWERS

[Text] The discussion on the organs and powers of the federal government was completed at today's meeting of the intercommunal talks. In statements prior to today's meeting, the last prior to the adjournment of the talks for about 1 month, Gobbi, the special envoy of the UN secretary general in Cyprus, stated that discussion on the question of the organs and powers of the federal government was constructive. There was a comprehensive exchange of views and a mutual understanding of the views on either side. Naturally, Gobbi added, there are certain differences.

Gobbi described the completion of the discussion on the organs and powers of the federal government as constructive, adding that it was a difficult subject. Gobbi stated that if a central government with sufficient powers does emerge, then there will be federation.

Answering a question on whether with the term completion of the subject he also meant achievement of some sort of an agreement, Gobbi replied: We have done what I can describe as a first comparative reading of the evaluation, a first analysis of the entire issue. One cannot complete in four meetings the discussion on all the authorities which make up the central government. There was only a first rapprochement, and both sides presented their views.

Answering another question Gobbi said he has certain ideas on a timetable for the talks, adding that these ideas can be altered. He mentioned that both sides understand that the timetable assists the talks.

Mavrommatis, the Greek Cypriot representative at the intercommunal talks, stated that a recapitulation of the discussion on the organs and powers of the federal government would be undertaken at today's meeting. He added that with the resumption of the talks on 5 August, a start would be made on the question of the legislative authority. Replying to a question, Mavrommatis stated he was not aware of a timetable for the talks. He did add, however, that such a timetable would be helpful. A timetable would give more order to the discussions, he said.

Onan, the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, stated that no timetable has been set for the talks. He added that the evaluation document is being followed for the discussions. I do not think it necessary, he added, to define any timetable, unless, if you wish, you want to resort to the General Assembly. Even if this is the case, I do not think that a timetable could help you or anyone else in any manner.

A UN statement on the meeting states that the discussion of the question of the organs and authorities of the federal government was completed. The statement adds that the next meeting will take place on the afternoon of 5 August.

ONAN STATEMENT ON UN RECOURSE 'THREATENS' TALKS

NC081120 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 8 Jul 82 p 5

[From the "Positions" column: "Suspicious Threats"]

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot representative came with threats to the intercommunal talks session held the day before yesterday. He more or less told us that if we take recourse to the UN General Assembly, the Turkish side will leave the negotiating table and the result will be interruption of the talks.

The extortionate way in which the Turkish side and Mr Onan approach things reveals their true intentions toward the dialogue and in particular its framework on the basis of which it is being conducted. Recourse by us to the United Nations is not contrary to the talks process nor is it, naturally, contrary to what the United Nations decided on the Cyprus issue and which constitutes the basis of the talks that are being conducted.

We understand that the threats expressed by Mr Onan on the possibility of our taking recourse to the United Nations serve as an excuse to support the Turkish side's intransigent stand and to justify the continuation of its negativeness in accepting a just and lasting solution for the Cyprus issue. We draw attention to this fact and we call on the United Nations and particularly the UN secretary general to advise Turkey and Denktas to behave in a more constructive way. The continuation of the negative stand of the Turkish side will only result in deadlocked UN efforts to find a just and agreeable solution within the framework of the intercommunal talks.

AVEROF CRITICIZES PAPANDREOU CABINET ADDRESS

[Text] New Democracy Chairman Evangelos Averof, who chaired today's meeting of his party's Administrative Committee, referred to the address Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou made to the first meeting of the present Council of Ministers. Mr Averof said that New Democracy had truly implemented a responsible multidimensional foreign policy which PASOK has done its best to weaken. He also said that the PASOK government took over a Greece without political animosities and with a mild political climate, but that it has succeeded in elevating intolerance and cultivating class passions and is risking enforcement of the worst kind of division.

The facts and words, Mr Averof asserted, confirm that the greatest failure is in the economic field. The results of [words indistinct] show that inflation will exceed 25 percent, the deficit will reach 3 billion dollars, unemployment will affect 250,000 working people and investments will be zero. The New Democracy chairman also criticized the law on the universities and in general the government's legislative work. He added that the bearer of the sins of PASOK's prior and post-election history is the new government, with its 52 members, the composition of which is proof of the lack of capable men since 14 of its ministers and deputy ministers do not come from the ranks of parliament.

New Democracy Parliamentary Secretary General Palaiokrassas also spoke at the meeting and referred to the work carried out by the deputies. Many deputies also spoke.

ELEVTHEROTIPIA CITES U.S.-TURKISH PLANS FOR BASES

NC011511 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 1 Jul 82 p 14

[Text] The United States intends to use Cyprus (as well as Israel and Turkey) as an attack base for the "Rapid Deployment Force" within its plans for burning the Middle East and the Persian Gulf.

This is revealed in a special report of the Congressional Research Service and is shown on an official U.S. map published in the New York Greek language newspaper PROINI.

According to information, which PROINI describes as "verified," the newspaper maintains that the Evren junta has already proposed that the United States establish its bases in the occupied section of Cyprus -- in the areas of Karpas and Famagusta.

The same newspaper also attributes to State Department sources an impressive "document" which presents, in a stronger manner, the existing threat and the expansionist Turkish aims in the Aegean: The Turkish junta demanded (and probably succeeded) that the U.S. base at Cigli, just north of Smirna and exactly opposite Khios and Lesvos -- in other words completely facing Greece -- be placed under absolute Turkish control.

According to the State Department sources:

--During the 5 years between 1975 and 1980, the United States spent $6,300,000 on the Cigli base.

--The Turkish demand that the base be placed under Turkish control and that it be maintained only by the United States was the subject of months of U.S.-Turkish negotiations that ended on 8 May 1981 in a final agreement -- the content of which is secret.

TURKMEN, KHARALAMBOPOULOS TO MEET IN FALL 1983

WC070858 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 1 Jul 82 pp 1, 3

[Report by Ozgen Acar from Athens]

[Excerpts] It has been learned that Turkish foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen and his Greek counterpart, Ioannis Kharalambopoulos, will meet in New York either at the end of September or at the beginning of October "to resume the dialogue which has been disrupted between the two countries."

Diplomatic sources have stated that a summit between Evren and Papandreou cannot be thought of from a protocol point of view, but that a high-level meeting could be possible between Ulusu and Papandreou.

On his return from the EEC summit in Brussels, Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou told journalists on his plane: "There appear to be some developments on the subject of the moratorium with Turkey. Since there is some progress toward positive developments, I do not want to talk about Turkish-Greek relations."

Recalling that both the Bulgarian and the Romanain Governments have made certain initiatives in this direction, Papandreou said: "We can't hold a meeting at the Evren-Papandreou level to resolve all the issues that have accumulated since 1974. A deadlock at this level would block the way to any other efforts."

Romanian head of state Ceausescu advanced some suggestions during Papandreou's visit to Romania, and he sent Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei to Ankara on a special mission. In addition, during Papandreou's recent visit to Bulgaria Todor Zhivkov offered to act as host to a summit conference between Ankara and Athens when he said: "We have some nice tables for talks."

Meanwhile, quoting a report originating from the Greek lobby in the United States, the ATHENS NEWS AGENCY correspondent in New York has reported: "The new U.S. secretary of state, George Shultz, is described as a new secretary of state with a soft character which will not make Turkey regret the loss of his predecessor, Alexander Haig, as far as military aid to Turkey is concerned."

VOTCP: ECEVIT ARREST LINKED TO CONSTITUTION VOTE

TA081156 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 8 Jul 82

[Text] One of these days the junta will disclose the reactionary constitution it has prepared behind closed doors. Then the junta and its servants will beg for votes in favor of that constitution. The junta has not yet completed its preparations, however. What are these preparations? First, they must step up their brute force in order to scare and suppress the forces that will not say yes to such a constitution. They want to either put behind bars or scare into silence those influential people who will oppose the constitution. They must also release the experienced fascists who are behind bars so that they can struggle for the reactionary constitution with all their might and contribute to the junta's brute force with their past experience.

Those are the preparations the junta is now trying to complete.

The former leader of the now defunct RPP, Bulent Ecevit, has once again been given a prison term. He will be thrown into the dungeon once again and he may be given another sentence before he completes this one.

The junta will beg for votes from the people for its reactionary constitution. Ecevit will not be able to warn the people and the RPP supporters about the constitution. He will not be able to express his views. The entire reactionary press will shout, "Yes to oppression, cruelty and exploitation." However, the progressive forces which fill the prisons will not be able to say no to the consitution. They will not be able to say no to the junta.

Ecevit's recent arrest and his sentence are a clear threat to the forces that plan to say no to the constitution.

Yet, despite all its efforts, the junta is not confident about the results of the referendum on the constitution. While trying to scare and suppress the people and the progressive patriotic forces on the one hand, the junta is releasing the experienced fascists and enemies of the people from prison on the other. It is taking them under the wings of its antipeople front. That is another one of the ways it is getting ready for the referendum. Now, archmurderers Yasar Okuyan and Sadi Somuncuoglu [two officials of the defunct NAP] who were released from prison the day Ecevit was sentenced will prepare the fresh forces of civilian brute force while the junta chiefs beg for votes.

Will the junta's plans succeed? This depends entirely on the attitude of the progressive patriotic forces. It depends on their preparations, in unity, for the constitutional referendum.

The junta arrested Ecevit in order to silence him. It is threatening the people. It is threatening those who are getting ready to say no to the constitution. This will not help. The people will not be afraid. On the contrary, these efforts will show the futility of the dreams of certain circles which hope that Turkey is returning to democracy. But, in order to win, it is necessary to struggle in unity. The duty awaiting us all is to act in unison, to strike a powerful blow to the junta and to oppose the antipeople front the junta is trying to establish with the Justice Party and NAP officials -- to oppose it with the front of the popular, democratic forces. This duty cannot be postponed. It cannot be deviated from. No one should cherish the dream that he can struggle on his own and win on his own.

SCHMIDT ARRIVES IN THE HAGUE FOR 2-DAY VISIT

[Excerpt] The Hague, 8 Jul (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt arrived in The Hague today on a 2-day visit to the Netherlands. He and his wife, Hannelore, were met at Valkenburg Military Airfield by Prime Minister Andreas van Agt who accompanied them to Huis Ten Bosch Castle, where Queen Beatrix and Prince Klaus are giving a luncheon for them. The talks between the two heads of government and their delegations will begin this afternoon.

Meets With Van Agt

[Text] The Hague, 8 Jul (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the prime minister of the Netherlands, Andreas van Agt, on Thursday agreed on as close a harmonization and joint consultation in trade and alliance policy as possible. After a 3-hour working session at the start of the 2-day official visit by the chancellor to the Netherlands, FRG Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl said: "German-Netherlands relations are of very great importance to the Federal Government. The Netherlands is for us an irreplaceable partner in European and Atlantic politics." It was obvious, Ruehl went on, that the close harmonization agreed on is not meant to be a "formation of a splinter group" within the Western community. It is to be in line with the consultations with other friendly countries.

This agreement is to be operative, above all, in international financial and trade bodies where the freedom of movement of capital and goods is concerned. Both heads of government reaffirmed that whatever happens, they want to maintain the principle of free movement and reject every form of protectionism. Also, both governments want to speak in favor of speedy negotiations on the entry of Spain into the EEC, irrespective of how long the transition period should last. Also discussed was the issue of the preliminary participation of Spain in political cooperation within the EEC.

On the question of the construction of a harbor near Emden, which has been the subject of debate for 4 years, both sides agreed to set up a commission to investigate how the environmental problems, which were raised primarily by the Netherlands, could be overcome. In this connection the chancellor pointed to the high structural unemployment in East Friesland. Schmidt also consented to an investigation of Netherlands doubts in connection with the dissolution of the Estel Steel Consortium, but pointed out that the Federal Government could not direct matters.

The two heads of government spoke for an hour in a very small circle of people about security questions. The still-open question of whether the Netherlands should accept the siting of the 48 modern medium-range weapons earmarked for it by NATO and thus implement the dual decision in full will probably also be discussed on Friday when Schmidt meets with the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Netherlands parliament.

SCHMIDT HOPES FOR CONTINUING DIALOGUE WITH U.S.

[Excerpt] Bonn, 12 Jul (DPA) -- Nine days before his trip to the United States, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is determined to work "with all his might towards surmounting the irritations" in German-American relations. Government Spokesman Klaus Boelling vigorously repudiated quotes in the news magazine DER SPIEGEL on Monday, according to which Schmidt has lost confidence in the "71-year-old gentleman in the White House" and compared him with Brezhnev, who only reads from bits of paper from his advisers.

These comparisons attributed to the chancellor "are pure inventions," said Boelling. Schmidt had at no time used such a characterization. This is not typical of the chancellor's speech or thoughts. At each meeting Schmidt had come to know a real real partner in Ronald Reagan with whom even controversial subjects could be discussed in an open and friendly manner in every talk.

The chancellor hopes for a continuation of the dialogue which had hitherto characterized German-American relations. The irritations which the chancellor had spoken of on Friday in The Hague became more intense after the extension of the embargo on the gas pipeline deal. Against a background of virtually unanimous criticism by the West European allies [of the embargo] German Government circles point out the European-American character of the necessary dialogue.

USSR CREDIT AGREEMENT ON PIPELINE TO BE SIGNED

[Text] Leningrad, 12 Jul (DPA) -- Leading bankers from the Soviet Union and the Federal Republic have expressed their concern over the possible effects of the intensified U.S. sanctions against the gas pipeline deal.

At the beginning of the second session of the German-Soviet banking commission, the head of the USSR's bank for foreign trade, Yuriy Ivanov, said [words indistinct] that the U.S. policy of confrontation must unfortunately have negative consequences for (?German-Soviet) trade relations. Ivanov made no mention of the specific consequences he had in mind.

For the German side, the spokesman for the board of the Deutsche Bank AG, Friedrich W. Christians, expressed (?grave concern) over the effects of the U.S. embargo policy. At the commission's meeting, which is above all concerned with credit and financial issues between the USSR and the Federal Republic, a credit agreement for DM4 billion for the gas pipeline from Siberia to the western border of the USSR is to be signed on Tuesday in Leningrad.

This illegally distributed strategy paper calls for armed struggle by the leftists.

NICARAGUA'S DANIEL ORTEGA ARRIVES IN PARIS

PA121445 [Editorial Report] Managua Radio Sandino Network in Spanish at 1200 GMT on 12 July broadcasts a special live report by Voz de Nicaragua via satellite from Paris on Daniel Ortega's visit to France. The Radio Sandino announcer explains that the report will be made by Carlos Jose Guadamuz, director general of Voz de Nicaragua, Manuel Espinoza, press director of the Government House, and (Willian Grigsby), of the AGENCIA NUEVA NICARAGUA, ANN.

Guadamuz begins his report by stating that Commander of the Revolution Daniel Ortega Saavedra, coordinator of the Junta of the National Reconstruction Government arrived in Paris at 1120, 0320 Nicaraguan time, and that he is right now meeting with French President Francois Mitterrand.

Manuel Espinoza stresses that Ortega was accorded the honors of a chief of state at the airport and that the meeting with Mitterrand was scheduled for 30 minutes but lasted 50 minutes. He reports that the working luncheon taking place right now is scheduled to last 90 minutes and is being attended by Commander Ortega, President Mitterrand and about 10 representatives of the Nicaraguan delegation. He adds that the luncheon is considered an important part of Ortega's 36-hour visit to France.

(Gribsby) reports details of Ortega's agenda today, saying that after the luncheon Ortega will meet with Charles Fiterman, French minister of state for transportation, and that tonight he will attend a dinner in his honor given by Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson. He adds that tomorrow's agenda includes a press conference which will be attended by about 100 newsmen.

Cheysson Comments

PA121715 Paris AFP in English 1415 GMT 12 Jul 82

[Text] Paris, July 12 (AFP) -- President Francois Mitterrand met for nearly three hours here today with Daniel Ortega Saavedra, coordinator of the Nicaraguan military junta.

At a luncheon later Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson said that Commander Ortega Saavedra's visit showed "the extent to which we support [word indistinct] independence policy by a Third-World country." He continued, "Every country has the right to choose its destiny, its regime, and its political line. Nicaragua has chosen a different line from Costa Rica's, and that is its right.

"We do not accept that countries, because they are neighbours, because they are more powerful, or because they are worried, should decide to impose their viewpoint."

Asked about the agreement signed last December for the delivery of French arms to Nicaragua, Mr Cheysson replied: "This contract is in the process of implementation and I have never stopped saying the same thing. It so happens that the first deliveries are taking place at this moment and they will follow a normal pace."

FRANCE-INTER INTERVIEWS DEFENSE MINISTER HERNU

[Interview with Defense Minister Charles Hernu, conducted by France-Inter Radio journalists -- live or recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] Good evening, Minister. You have just returned from the Landes missile test ground, which you visited today. Some time ago you were in Cherbourg with the prime minister for the launching of the Inflexible, the sixth missile-launching nuclear submarine of the strategic oceanic force. Awaiting the seventh, the president of the republic in his latest press conference stated that France is almost ready to produce the neutron bomb. The first question, Mr Hernu: Can you define French defence strategy and is there development in this area?

[Answer] There are continuity and development at the same time. The continuity: It is clear that the French deterrent force is one of the weak against the strong, and we are pursuing this in the search of a balance between efficiency and cost. It may sound a little strange when talking about nuclear deterrent, but I mean that, unlike the big two -- the United States and the Soviet Union -- France does not seek to be overarmed, to have more megatons than any country, but to have what it takes to effectively deter any country from attacking us. This is the effort we are pursuing.

If you will allow me to correct your first question: Contrary to what you have said, the president of the republic has never said he was willing to accept what you call the neutron bomb, which is not a bomb but a special kind of weapon. It has nothing to do with a bomb; it is enhanced radiation. He merely said that the study continues, that tests are being conducted and a decision will be made. The decision to produce and deploy it has not been made.

[Question] Let us dwell on deterrent force and conventional weapons. In this double action, what share does the deterrent force have and what is the role of the conventional forces? As regards the costs -- and this is important because money counts even in national defense -- do you allocate more money to the deterrent force or to conventional weapons?

[Answer] The choices which the president of the republic, head of the army, myself as defense minister and the government are making are not related to costs but to strategic needs depending on geographic factors. France's nuclear deterrent is a first strike deterrent, a deterrent used to ensure that we are not attacked. In other words it is a deterrent for the homeland. However, France has other concerns as well and you are right to ask the question. Our destiny as a big power -- and I am glad to have the opportunity, rare enough, to say this -- is that it is not merely a question of the homeland. I have been listening to news about the overseas territories and I was surprised by certain reactions. We have 18,000 men in our overseas departments and territories and it is quite obvious that it is out of the question to abandon them and their status. We also have agreements with African countries, French-speaking countries and even English-speaking countries. We even have military cooperation and assistance agreements that we are going to honor and are honoring and for this we need conventional forces. Your question is so sensible that I have decided to ask the parliament when it reconvenes and I present my budget to act so that the French conventional forces should be multifunctional; that is, equipped and trained in such a way that they could serve, if asked -- and I shall tell you in what circumstances -- in Africa as well as on a Central European front, if such a misfortune were to occur. The forces should be mutlifunctional. For France it is a question not of interference in African affairs but of a French presence if desired and requested -- and the African countries are well aware of this.

[Question] Will this be done through previously signed treaties?

[Answer] We have agreements and treaties of cooperation with a number of countries, some concluded by the previous government during the previous 7 years.

France's word must remain credible and therefore the treaties signed by those preceding us should be honored. That is why they sometimes say, thinking they might shock me, that I am a minister of continuity. That I am not. On the contrary, I am a minister of development of the military service, of a change in practices.

[Question] So, could the French nuclear weapon be engaged in a conflict breaking out in or concerning Germany, and from what threshold?

[Answer] [Words indistinct] if I were to answer you, I would fully enlighten our expected opponents.

[Question] Try, in any case, Mr Minister.

[Answer] I hope not, I hope not. [sentence indistinct] It is the degree of uncertainty that the president of the republic must maintain. To put it clearly, we could ask is it the French nuclear deterrent that protects France and its vital interests? Or would France press the button as soon as a red helmet appeared at the eastern border? If we were to answer this question in advance we would destroy the credibility of the nuclear deterrent because we would drag the president of the republic into an automatic response which would destroy the uncertainty about the French decision.

It is understood that when I say "uncertainty," there is no question of any uncertainty about the president's determination to indeed make use of the nuclear deterrent to protect France. But to give an answer to the forward battle theory, which in any case is not a new theory -- Mr Schlesinger, with whom I am well acquainted, had already written a great deal about this when he was defense secretary at least 12 [as heard] years ago. We are not required to make any reply on this because it would destroy the concept of the nuclear deterrent. Nuclear deterrence was made for France.

This having been said: Are we indifferent to the fate of Germany? (?Not at all.) We have 55,000 men in our French forces in the Federal Republic of Germany. We have our best troops there. We have an army corps. We have a presence and we occupy an entire sector in the Federal Republic of Germany. It is therefore a fact that we consider ourselves engaged by this sector, and we are engaged in it by conventional agreement.

[Question] The French find it hard to distinguish between strategy and tactics and they are even less inclined to do so when they are told of the Pluton, which is also a nuclear weapon, but which is a tactical weapon. Well, the super-Pluton is to be upgraded to 350-km range. Is it still a tactical weapon when it has been upgraded to 350 km or does it fall instead within the deterrent category?

[Answer] I appreciate your question because we are not used to hearing this sort of question. [words indistinct] You say that French people do not see clearly the difference between the strategic and the tactical. I do not know what basis you have for saying that, but if that is the case, they are quite right, because there is none. That is my point of view. I know full well that all those listening to me do not agree. We consider that a tactical weapon or a strategic weapon, when it is nuclear, is primarily nuclear; and that the decision to use it is a political one.

[Question] You seem to be saying that there is no difference in kind between the pluton and the neutron bomb. So why not adopt the neutron bomb for the Pluton warhead, because it seems that the military are clamoring for it.

[Answer] Well, listen, if the military are clamoring for it, they are wrong, because as long as they are in the forces, they are not supposed to air their opinions. It is the minister who speaks for them. There has been no change in this respect. This must be remembered.

But regarding your question on the enhanced radiation weapon, what you call the neutron bomb; it is true that the security of France makes it mandatory for the responsible political leaders not to neglect any possible form of defense. We must not do anything that would prevent our improving our defenses to the point that they are comparable to and capable of replying to an opponent who has made progress. From that point of view, I cannot deny that the enhanced radiation weapon -- the neutron bomb -- is a modern, new, technical means; that it is a low-power nuclear weapon; that it can consequently be compared to a tactical weapon -- you are entirely right -- and that it could even be used to equip Pluton and (?Hades) missiles. It would be possible.

What stops me is this: It necessitates a political study, because I would not want the technical nature of the weapon to be such that through the concept of its use we were to change strategy. The strategy of France -- I do not know whether I am making myself clear -- being that of the deterrence provided by the weak against the strong, I would not want this weapon to be adopted before being certain that the concept of use would not drag us automatically into the forward battle.

That is why the decision concerning the manufacture and deployment of the batteries is one that concerns the president of the republic, the minister of defense, the premier and a few others. Such is the true reason. I think that this is the first time I have said so.

[Question] Mr Minister, precisely with regard to political will, there is what is called European defense. There is also a phantom as it were, in the shape of the EDC [European Defense Community]. It frightens, sickens people, or conversely, it inspires them. What is your policy on European defense? Could it ever come about through the political will of the president of the republic and the ministers? And you, a politician -- you are defense minister but you are also and perhaps primarily a politician -- could it be said now that the American umbrella, as some would have it, is riddled with holes?

[Answer] No, I don't think the American umbrella is riddled with holes. Certainly, the Soviet Union has an absolute conventional superiority. In what is called ABM's, or medium-range missiles, the Soviets have a superiority, particularly with their SS-20's. Even if they are placed beyond the Urals, these SS-20's have a range that reaches to Lisbon, Madrid, Rome and so, France. There are 300 of them and what's more they're mobile. There the Soviets are in the lead.

Where strategic arms are concerned, meaning those that pass over the Atlantic and Europe, the two major sanctuaries, the sides are still equal. But we know -- you have asked the question and I'm telling you everything -- that toward the mid-1980's we shall be reaching what is called the window of vulnerability and that the United States may indeed find itself acting as a leaky umbrella, as you put it; I would say, in a position of weakness. That is, the reason the president said that a balance must be reestablished by installing Pershings is that imbalance is what leads to crisis and tension. I was just listening to your news bulletin on France-Inter, and you have forgotten one of the statements by President Mitterrand in your quotes. That is to say, you did not forget it, but you did not cite it. But there isn't time to say everything. He said, as I recall word for word, in Budapest a short time ago: We are faithful allies to our allies, but honest partners for our partners. I think the sentence was very well put. On that basis, then, we think it would be preferable to restore the balance.

You were talking about a European defense. I will put it very clearly: When I dream and think about the future -- and I am speaking on my own behalf now without committing the government -- I am tired of seeing the two blocs make decisions on our behalf. I believe that they behave like adversaries and then like partners and sometimes buddies. The role of the French deterrent is in fact to create a zone of freedom. Germany and other countries do not have it, and that is what breeds the pacifist, neutralist movements, some of which I may be so bold as to call secondarily nationalist movements, although this goes unnoticed.

Thus Europe is an objective necessity for the future. Are we moving toward it? Well, see for yourself. Even in the European Parliament you can't be sure. Is there a European government? No.

Well, I feel we shouldn't put the cart before the horse and make the mistake of the EDC again by attempting to build a military power merely because there is no military power; otherwise you have fascism. The armed forces are an instrument, an arm, that preferably serves a civilian political power. Is there a European authority or government? No, there isn't. I would add that were there to be an enemy nuclear attack, that enemy's missiles would take between 12 and 14 minutes to land on the Europeans' heads. There should even be a European president, but there isn't one. The day there is a European political authority, we could think about a European defense force. To me, that is still desirable, but my job isn't to dream, unfortunately, it is to be defense minister . . .

[Question -- interrupts] And what's the point of NATO?

[Answer] And that means seeing things clearly. France has left NATO, which means that we are still members of the Atlantic alliance, but we have left the integrated military structure because General de Gaulle took an extraordinary risk, which appeared hopeless at the time. But, well, I see that he succeeded and that France has gained that little piece of extra freedom. That implies -- the question is excellent but you're forcing me to digress -- that we, the French, have that zone of freedom, which means that we can choose whether to be involved in a conflict. I mean -- you were just talking to me about conventional forces, but you are asking so many questions that I feel I am at a disadvantage . . .

[Question] We've a lot of things to ask you about.

[Answer] I mean that there is another reason for having sound conventional forces. I refer you to an article in the weekly concerned. Thanks to nuclear deterrence, Europe has been at peace for 36 years, for 36 years. The first time ever. And it's the first time that France has not had any immediate enemy -- none at all -- at its borders, and that's very important. But over those 36 years there have been at least 127 or 136 major conflicts. Even in the last few days, well, you were just talking about Lebanon. Then there's Iraq-Iran, the Falklands and so on. Now all these conflicts have been subnuclear, below the threshold of nuclear use. That should give us food for thought: It shows that regardless of the nuclear deterrent we possess, we must have what is needed for subnuclear security. Am I making myself clear?

[Question] Completely. Now, Mr Minister, we'd like to talk to you about armaments. Luc Evrard was just talking about your trip to Brest with the premier for the lauching of the nuclear submarine. In that connection, how many nuclear submarines will France need in the next few years to keep the deterrent really effective? Should we keep the missiles on the Plateau d'Albion; should the aircraft of the strategic air force go? That's the first question on the armaments problem.

[Answer] Listen, we have to keep everything. We have to keep everything. When the two big powers have tackled the real question -- I don't mean their disarmament, they aren't even talking about it. They must put an end to their overarmamment and after that they can talk about disarmament. The real questions that should be asked are: How many missiles? Or what kind of supervision? When the superpowers get to the disarmament stage, France will be able to join in and give up one or the other of the arms you have mentioned. But I don't see why we should: Nature is said to abhor a vacuum, and if France could not . . . As the president of the republic has said, pacifism is a postulate of which peace is not the result. That is food for thought. And so, how many submarines do we need? Let's get back to your question. Well, we've decided to build the seventh. Then if we can afford it and have the opportunity, I would not be against building an eighth.

You see, the chief thing is to know things that have never been said. For example, I think I shall not be giving away national defense secrets if I tell you that the Inflexible, which the premier launched, has or rather will have 16 M-4 missiles. Each of these missiles will have six warheads. That means that it alone is more powerful than the entire fleet of missile-carrying nuclear submarines. As we are going to put M-4's on the others too, the French fleet of missile-carrying nuclear submarines will be an extremely powerful force. You know that the Inflexible will be operational in, I think, 1985, and that the new generation submarine that the president has decided on will come out in 1994. These are facts. At the navy review to be held at Toulon on 14 July, the townspeople and anyone else who happens to be on the Mourillon coast will be able to see the new nuclear attack submarine, the Rubis, since Toulon will be its home port. We are going to build five of them. So we are making a big effort in this area.

As regards the aircraft carrier, although no political decision has yet been made, as defense minister I have taken the precaution of committing the funds needed for studies, research and even a little more for the nuclear reactor, so that I shall not be caught short if the decision is made.

PCI LEADERS WELCOME LEBANESE LEFT'S MURUWAH

PM121531 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 4 Jul 82 p 22

[Text] Rome -- PCI Secretary General Comrade Enrico Berlinguer has received Comrade Karim Muruwah, member of the Directorate of the Lebanese National Movement.

During the cordial conversation, which was also attended by PCI Directorate member and international section chief Comrade Gian Carlo Pajetta and PCI foreign section aide Comrade Remo Salati, Comrade Karim Muruwah first expressed gratitude to the Italian people and then provided an extensive briefing on the tragic situation that has been created in Lebanon, following the Israeli invasion.

Comrade Enrico Berlinguer, having first reasserted the PCI's stance in this connection, explained the initiatives being conducted in Italy by the party and by a broad alignment of democratic political forces in Parliament and throughout the country to ensure that Italy contributes, with its own initiatives and in all international forums, to a political solution of the Arab-Israeli conflict -- to a solution that respects Lebanon's territorial integrity and full sovereignty and that recognizes the Palestinian people's national rights and self-determination.

Comrade Berlinguer also stressed the need for the Italian Government's prompt recognition of the PLO.

PERTINI INTERVIEWED ON EUROPEAN RELATIONS

PM121331 Paris LE MONDE in French 6 Jul 82 pp 1, 6

[Jacques Nobecourt, Philippe Pons undated interview in Rome with Italian President Sandro Pertini: "Nationalist Interests Obstructing European Unity"]

[Excerpt] [Question] What is your view of French-Italian relations? Have they any specific substance?

[Answer] Like all fraternal countries, since they have the same origins they sometimes argue. The problems exist -- the wine issue, food products -- but our ties must become closer and closer. Italy needs France but France also needs Italy. A real political and economic solidarity must continue to develop between us.

Moreover, in view of their Latin traditions, the two countries can help to strengthen Europe's unity.

[Answer] In this connection, I am thinking of the nations which share the same heritage and whose absence means that Europe is not yet united. Why exclude Spain and Portugal from Europe?

Spain recently emerged from 40 years of fascism. If it belonged to the EC we could help it consolidate its democracy. We have every reason to do so. I, who am an old republican, have become a personal friend of the young King Juan Carlos, who has been responsible for guiding the transition from dictatorship to democracy. How can that country be left outside the EC? If a dictatorship were to be established in Spain we too would pay the price.

[Question] How do you view Europe at this century's end?

[Answer] I have always been in favor of real European unity. But in fact, the Europe that has been created within the EEC is not really united. There are still major nationalist conflicts.

People talk about a united Europe, but let us be clear about it: for instance, when Afghanistan was invaded, France's top leader went to Warsaw to meet Mr Brezhnev and Germany's top leader went to Moscow, not to discuss Afghanistan but purely on a courtesy visit. Frankly, I did not associate myself with such demarches; I resolutely defended the Afgan people.

Nationalist interests are obstructing Europe's unity. The European Parliament is an empty forum, whose debates are heeded neither in Europe nor in the rest of the world.

As far as I am concerned, real love of one's homeland implies a love of other people's homelands. For instance, I immediately opposed Israel's action in Lebanon: that country must have its independence and security. Israel, which obtained its own territory and homeland after centuries, must respect other people's territories and homelands.

I am proud to be an Italian citizen, but I also consider myself a world citizen.

Nationalism is self-centered and egotistical. It was the natural begetter of fascism and nazism. This is why I deplore the nationalism that cuases wars. A real united Europe, divorced from nationalisms and with a parliament that really functioned and made its will felt within the various European governments, could, with its cultural, technological and human potential, influence the two superpowers and mediate.

The two superpowers are keeping Europe divided, and their confrontation still manifests itself in relation to the European theater.

SPADOLINI DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH LATIN AMERICA

PM121357 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 3 Jul 82 p 15

[Carlos Nadal and Jose Luis Martinez 2 July interview in Barcelona with Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini: "Italy and Spain must intensify relations"]

[Excerpts] [Question] You want to strengthen the Rome-Madrid axis to impart a thrust to Europe's relations with Latin America. How do you believe this can be achieved?

[Answer] There is only one way: to seek every opportunity for dialogue and rapprochement, stressing that which unites us and taking advantage of such a rich history of ties with the Latin American peoples. Following the wounds inflicted by the recent conflict in the South Atlantic, an initiative must be taken which is aimed at restoring the broken threads of relations between Europe and South America.

[Question] How can the damage caused to relations between the Common Market and Latin America by the Malvinas war be remedied?

[Answer] During the Falklands conflict Italy did not adhere to the policy of trade sanctions adopted against Argentina, though it did maintain the embargo on arms supplies to the Buenos Aires military regime and resolutely condemned the aggression carried out in contempt of the laws governing international coexistence. This stance was determined not only by skepticism about the effectiveness of the measures of economic reprisal but also by the belief that relations as a whole between Europe and South America were at stake.

The danter of a progressive inclination of the Latin American continent toward the orbit of Soviet influence as a result of humiliated national pride is not unreal, if one considers the benefit drawn by Castroist influence from a bloodthirsty conflict between two countries belonging to the same Western world.

Italy and Spain are particularly well equipped to restore a climate of understanding and cooperation. We will examine with [Spanish prime minister] Calvo-Sotelo how an initiative in this direction can be carried out.

[Question] What is Italy's position regarding the controversy between Europe and the United States over the Soviet gas pipeline and commercial credits to Eastern bloc countries?

[Answer] The Italian Government has always been committed to promoting relations based on mutual understanding and shared interests. Unilateral solutions create dangerous ruptures in the framework of solidarity. We are always seeking an increase in cooperation between the EEC and the United States. But we are unwilling to simply accept political stances which we do not share.

PCI'S BOFFA DISCUSSES EUROPE-U.S. RELATIONS

PM121221 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 7 Jul 82 pp 1, 16

[Giuseppe Boffa article: "Italy, Europe and the U.S. Ally"]

[Text] Pertini is in France, Spadolini is in Spain and Mrs Thatcher will soon be visiting Rome: We are witnessing a certain degree of Italian diplomatic activity within the European context. But what will its significance be, over and above mere relations between countries? For Europe as a whole -- and Italy certainly cannot set itself apart from it if it wants to give any meaning at all to its innumerable proclamantions of Europeanism -- the principal problem is constituted precisely by its U.S. ally. With the Reagan administration, as it has taken shape with the passage of time, Europe finds itself confronted with the most systematically anti-Soviet, but at the same time the most resolutely anti-European, U.S. administration of the entire postwar period: Like it or not, this had to be acknowledged by the ten EEC government leaders at their meeting in Brussels last week, albeit expressing themselves with excessive timidity (for which Spadolini bears part of the blame).

There is now a broad convergence of opinion regarding Washington's stance vis-a-vis the USSR. London's THE TIMES speaks of a "concerted campaign to use economic pressure with the aim of destroying the Soviet system." Marshall Shulman, one of the top U.S. experts and advisers of the previous administration, perceives "a provocative and warlike crusade to bring down the Soviet system." Chancellor Schmidt uses expressions such as "cold war" and "economic warfare." This being so, there would be reason enough to wonder why on earth Europe should support such a policy, which would isolate it from its Eastern bloc counterparts, stifle its economy and restore it to the frontline of tensions and conflicts -- which could even prove fatal -- rendered inevitable by such a stance.

But that is not all. The new cold war, like the old one, itself demands a reappraisal of Europe or at least the maximum limitation of its margins of autonomy. The dispute over the gas pipeline reveals this ambivalence of the U.S. pressures. We have seen a president issuing orders to European firms, or at least firms based in Europe and therefore subject to the laws and regulations of the European countries, as if they were subject to U.S. sovereignty. Despite all the hopes raised by the false unanimity of the Versailles summit in June, the past weeks have also seen the explosion of the economic attacks on Europe, of which we have all learned over the past few days. It is all very well for the Europeans to say that they do not want "trade wars," but it takes two not to want such things.

Some European governments are more exposed than others and are reacting more energetically. This is the case with Bonn's Germany and France. The latter's experience is eloquent. Understandably worried by the Reagan administration's preconceived "ideological" hostility toward him, President Mitterrand has tried, whenever it seemed to him possible to do so, to demonstrate comprehension with regard to Washington's policy. In return he has received a not inconsiderable number of foul blows, both economic and political. It would be very dangerous if the other European governments believed that these problems need to be considered only by the French (or, as far as they affect them, by the German Social Democrats).

In the Middle East too France is now the most active country in the quest for a solution. Mitterrand has already paid very high prices in the past for this reason -- to the extent of agreeing with the Camp David accords, visiting Israel and thus jeopardizing France's old Arab friendships. But in the Middle East too, his policy is coming up against obvious U.S. hostility. His mediation move, backed by full presidential authority, was vetoed by the United States in the United Nations. President Mitterrand's envoys were literally shown the door in Tel Aviv and told to clear out and not to hinder the U.S. administration.

In all these instances the interests at stake are too important for any compliance to prove profitable. We know that some will now accuse us of being "anti-American." This is fatuous demagoguery. There is politics and politics even in the United States; the Americans themselves are the first to say so and it is certainly no demonstration of friendship toward them to blindly approve of their worst policy (harmful for Europe, at least). With Haig's resignation, international issues have already been behind the first serious political crisis in the Reagan camp only 18 months after Reagan's accession to power. So much for the clash between "hawks" and "doves." Few "doves" fly around this White House. It is the "hawks" that are now inflicting lethal pecks on each other.

Any hint of bipartite support for Reagan's foreign policy has disappeared too. The recent Democratic Party conference espoused the arms freeze proposals as a prelude to a drastic reduction. The opposition party has thus heeded a suggestion "from below," stemming from an unprecedented profound movement within U.S. society. Something similar is happening with the abandonment of "first use" of nuclear weapons.

There is something that we greatly admire in the United States. Even in the United States today, we feel sincere admiration for the extent and seriousness of the arguments, the sense of responsibility, the large-scale involvement and spontaneous initiative of the people and the multiplicity of innovative forms that characterize the major debate on nuclear armaments. We recognize in it some of the country's finest traditions. We wish the same merits were always shown in Europe, and especially in Italy, where discussions on these awesome matters are too often limited to the mindless repetition of the propagandist data and arguments put forward by the Pentagon.

The great U.S. antinuclear movement challenges many of the commonplaces of international relations in recent decades. It embraces not only the masses of ordinary citizens whom we saw gather in New York in June. It also includes many of the most famous names of the U.S. establishment itself -- names which many of our politicians and journalists used to cite as oracles. A Europe aware of its own interests can therefore find interlocutors across the Atlantic -- that is, if it wants to.

L'UNITA WRITES ON IMPLICATIONS OF PIPELINE BAN

[Vera Vegetti commentary: "Economic Boomerang for Europe"]

[Text] The U.S. embargo on supplies of technology to European companies working under U.S. license on the construction of the Siberian gas pipeline raises issues that extend beyond the economic consequences of Washington's decision -- consequences which, for that matter, threaten to be very damaging for the four European companies concerned and, more generally, for West Europe's entire energy strategy, which is based on the diversification of supply sources as against the absolute predominance of oil.

But even though the U.S. sanctions will not halt the construction of the gas pipeline, as both the West Europeans and the Soviets assert, the burning aspect of the issue raised by Washington's decision is political -- and in more than one respect.

First, a clear conflict of interests and of political approach emerges (not for the first time) between Europe and the United States on the use of economic sanctions as a method of exerting international pressure. This conflict has arisen (and subsequently regularly been surmounted) every time, in recent years, that the U.S. administration has responded to a situation of tension or crisis with reprisals in the field of trade, forcing its European allies to follow suit: This is what happened with Iran, with the Soviet Union over Afghanistan and with Argentina over the Falklands.

The fact is that the Europeans' difficulty with regard to using economic sanctions as a political weapon derives from their very position vis-a-vis international problems and the other areas of the world.

Europe is by nature an area of trade and its economies depend on not only commercial but also technological and scientific relations and relations of cooperation with the other regions of the world. In order for its strategy and policy to find a place within the interplay between the superpowers, they must (this is a recent discovery, but now sufficiently recognized by the more aware diplomacies) keep channels of communication with the Eastern bloc open even -- and especially -- at moments of crisis. The U.S. conception and practice is different -- a conception based on economic, military and strategic might, that makes possible autarkic hermetism and recurrent hegemonic temptations in international relations. The policy of sanctions is simply an expression of this conception of leadership in international relations -- perhaps the most openly arrogant and authoritarian -- but is also the greatest sign of weakness and political impotence.

The second aspect of the sensational issue raised by the U.S. embargo on supplies for the gas pipeline is that of the use of technology as an instrument of dependence -- a use which threatens to explode the entire argument about cooperation in research and science and their practical applications and thus to cause an irreparable regression in recent gains that seemed to form the basis of any prospects of progress. The principle whereby scientific and technological research should proceed via close cooperation not only between Europe and the United States but also between East and West and between North and South, as a fundamental element of integration, seemed to be necessitated by the very level now reached by research and technology on the threshold of the year 2000.

But when technology is used -- as is now happening with the embargo -- as a weapon to impose a burdensome political dependence on one's own allies, when the withdrawal of licenses is used to force governments of sovereign countries to fall in line with a policy of rigid contraposition toward the Eastern bloc, then the questions about the possibility of cooperation and the integration of technologies become weighty and pressing. Bonn's finance minister predicted the other day that the ultimate result of the U.S. embargo will be "a tendency (among the European enterprises) to become independent of U.S. licenses," in other words, to provide themselves with the technological means that they now receive from the other side of the Atlantic.

Having for years observed and denounced Europe's energy "dependence" on the oil countries, people are now discovering with bitterness its technological dependence on the major Western ally. The question is whether this time Europe will at last be spurred toward independence, not so much to take an impossible road to autarky, but to force Washington to respect its autonomy and its options.

PORTUGAL RADIO INTERVIEWS PCP LEADER CUNHAL

[Excerpt] In a lengthy interview with the country's main radio station, Alvaro Cunhal, the secretary general of the PCP, defined his party's stand on the question of the revision of the constitution. He emphasized the fact that it is not the revision itself that his party is worried about, but rather the implications of certain changes that other political forces seek to introduce in the country's fundamental law. Such as, for example, the matter of winding up the Council of the Revolution.

[Begin Cunhal recording] We take the view that the Council of the Revolution is a temporary organ of sovereignty, for a temporary stage in Portuguese democracy. We all know -- all the Portuguese know -- that the creation of the Council of the Revolution stemmed from a very specific process of the democratization of national life, in which the military played a very important role with their intervention on 25 April 1974. So the Council of the Revolution appeared as the military's guarantee that democracy would be defended. But it is a temporary body pending the further consolidation of the democratic regime.

In our opinion the democratic regime has not been sufficiently consolidated. The very revision of the constitution currently being carried out by the Assembly of the Republic, with all the dangers it entails, is emphatic proof that democracy has not been consolidated. For this reason the Communist Party has voiced no opposition to the continuation of the Council of the Revolution. We have put forward no proposal for its continuation since the Council of the Revolution is a constitutional organ of sovereignty, but we have also not proposed its termination.

Furthermore, if the Council of the Revolution is ended what would follow the revision of the constitution eliminating it from the ranks of the organs of sovereignty? In our opinion a vacuum might thus be created, a vacuum with dangerous implications. If you eliminate an organ of sovereignty with jurisdiction over certain matters -- important matters at that -- and do not create another organ of sovereignty to take jurisdiction, it obviously follows that a vacuum would be created, and this might easily pave the way for very serious irregularities.

Take the supervision of the constitutionality of the laws. This falls under the jurisdiction of the Council of the Revolution. If the council ceases to exist without another body having been set up to rule on the constitutionality of the legislation passed, it follows that unconstitutional legislation might be passed in the absence of supervision by a body checking its constitutionality.

We take the view that in no circumstances -- with or without a decision by parliament on the matter -- can the Council of the Revolution cease to exist without the establishment of a body having the functions that currently belong to the council. It would be absurd to think that the Council of the Revolution's role could be played by any other organ of sovereignty or department in the state machine than one specifically set up for this purpose by a revision of the constitution. [end recording]

The PCP secretary general remains a controversial figure. Intransigent in his attitudes and inflexible on the course he pursues, Alvaro Cunhal is equally persistent as far as his goals are concerned. The Communists' recent appeal to the Socialist members of parliament asking them to defy the party whip raised some eyebrows and gave rise to some indignant criticism. Asked about this, Alvaro Cunhal stood by the appeal:

[Begin recording] In light of the Communist Party's belief that the revision as planned is very dangerous to the democratic regime and raises serious and immediate threats to the democratic regime, it would be altogether strange for us to ask the Socialist Party deputies to vote in favor of the revision. Parliamentary party discipline, following the party whip, is a matter for each party to take care of. We can answer for ours -- let the Socialists ensure theirs. They should not ask the Communist Party to demand that the Socialist deputies vote in favor of a constitutional revision that goes against the interests of democracy. [end recording]

Alvaro Cunhal's latest speech, at the closing rally of the festival of the AVANTE newspaper, inevitably cropped up in the interview. In it the PCP secretary general said that if the president of the republic did not dismiss the Democratic Alliance [AD] government, then the AD would end up dismissing the president of the republic. The question was simple and straightforward: How could the AD dismiss the president of the republic?

[Begin recording] This was obviously a political turn of phrase, not the expression of an institutional possibility. In both the first premise and the second it was obviously a political statement, not a procedural one. That is, if the president does not remove the AD from the office he runs the risk of the reactionary forces, the AD creating such a situation that the president is forced to resign in the wake of the revision of the constitution. Of course, it is not up to the president to remove any party or any coalition of parties from office. That is not his role. Objectively speaking, however, we believe that if he dismisses the government, dissolves parliament and calls a general election, the AD will be removed from office because it will lose the election. It would not be removed from office by the president but by the results of the elections, which, if held under democratic conditions, would bring the AD a clamorous defeat. [end recording]

The president of the republic's candidature was backed by the Communist Party and the PCP has not attacked the president since. Does Ramalho Eanes still enjoy the Communists' confidence?

[Begin recording] We did not elect -- we did not vote -- we did not help in General Eanes' victory because this particular candidate advocated any particular policy. We basically voted for Eanes -- and everyone will remember our 1980 presidential elections campaign -- to defeat the right's candidate, Soares Carneiro. Thus, it was to defeat an entire project -- a subversive scheme worked out through 1980 and aimed at AD's taking over all organs of sovereignty through a project that had already been well defined by presidential candidate Soares Carneiro -- that we decided that General Eanes was not only the best placed candidate but indeed the only candidate capable of defeating the right's candidate.

You will note that the very moment the PCP made this decision we broke the silence we had maintained for quite some time on the political line pursued by the president of the republic and levelled our first public criticism at the president. I do not know if you remember it -- if you wish, I can immediately refresh your memory with the date and the very text of our criticism -- but the fact is that we made this criticism immediately after examining the situation and concluding that it was necessary to vote for Eanes to defeat Soares Carneiro. We took the view, and still take the view, that despite a policy very different from our own, despite decisions that we question, despite many hesitations which in our opinion have not been conducive to resolving the national problems or preventing the advances of the counterrevolution in Portugal -- in spite of all this, we believe that, generally speaking, as far as the stabilization of the democratic regime in Portugal is concerned, the current president of the republic has played a positive role. [end recording]

The physical assault on the Journalist Carlos Fino in Moscow was aother subject taken up with Alvaro Cunhal.

[Begin recording] I do not know whether or not he was beaten up, and, if he was, I did not know if it was the Soviet police that beat him up. All I know are the first reports from the news agencies, so I would rather not comment. [end recording]

Further on Interview

[Excerpts] Lisbon Radio today carried a lengthy interview with Alvaro Cunhal in which the PCP secretary general once more advocated the continued existence of the Council of the Revolution.

At one stage in the interview Cunhal commented on the case of the Revolutionary Party of the Proletariat [PRP] detainees. First he emphasized his party's reservations on the revision of the constitution:

[Begin recording] [Cunhal] Behind the Democratic Alliance, [AD] behind this democratic facade that was erected after 25 April [1974], there are the lurking features of fascism: fascist ideology, fascist methods, fascist mentality, fascist arrogance and the intolerance, lies, slander and provocations typical of fascism. This is what we detect in many aspects of the government's activity.

The danger posed by these policies does not lie with specific individuals. The danger is that if this constitutional revision is approved by parliament we may in the short or medium-term future find ourselves confronted with the threat of fascism in our democracy -- a democracy with muscles, as some call it -- but the threat of fascism proper. This is what we fear and what we are campaigning against.

[Unidentified interviewer] Dr Cunhal, I take this opportunity to raise a subject that the Communist Party has not been very clear on -- in my opinion at least. This is the question of the PRP. The Communist Party has remained somewhat aloof. Why is this? Has the PCP no sympathy for the PRP members' activities?

[Cunhal] It is like this: in the case you have mentioned there are two different aspects to consider. One concerns allegations of possible procedural irregularities and illegalities in the charges against them, the trials, the sentences, their treatment in jail and the humanitarian angle. If there were only this aspect to consider the PCP might well have adopted a different attitude.

But there is another aspect: There has been a full-fledged campaign to ascribe political motivations to certain actions by these people, actions that we do not regard as political.

[Interviewer] So you regard them as common law criminals.

[Cunhal] [Words indistinct] We take the view that what they did cannot be regarded as political activity. We refuse to be a party to a big political scheme -- we still do not know the goals of some of the participants -- to characterize those individuals' conduct as political activity. We do not recognise it as such and believe that a Democratic Portugal cannot do so either. [end recording]

LIBERAL PARTY AIDE HITS U.S. FOREIGN POLICY STYLE

PM121235 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 6 Jul 82 p 4

[Text] Liberal Party Foreign Affairs Spokesman and former Trade Minister Arne Christiansen in a "postscript" to the party's Rebild meeting this year criticizes the United States for the way in which it pursues its foreign policy.

"Lack of diplomatic experience" in the Reagan administration and "crises of confidence in Europe" after Alexander Haig's resignation as secretary of state are concepts used by Christiansen in an article to be published today in the Liberal Party's newspapers.

The article states that Reagan's attempts to stop the natural gas pipeline from Siberia to West Europe and the threats of reprisals in the steel war between the United States and the EEC are putting a strain on the relationship between the United States and Europe.

Christiansen takes the view that as EEC chairman Denmark has a special responsibility to try to resolve the problems between the United States and Europe, although at the same time he does criticize Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen for the way in which he has spoken of U.S. foreign policy.

"The Danish prime minister has not made the climate for talks any easier through his spontaneous and ill-prepared attacks on the United States," the former Liberal minister writes.

NORWAY

AFTENPOSTEN CITES 'IRRITATION' AT REAGAN REMARKS

PM121345 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 2 Jul 82 p 4

[Lars Hellberg dispatch]

[Excerpt] New York, 1 Jul -- Top Norwegian politicians taking part in the UN disarmament session in New York are somewhat despondent and irritated by the fact that the Reagan administration still obviously views Norwegian gas resources as an alternative to Siberian natural gas.

"It is unheard of that President Ronald Reagan should make statements as if the United States were able to dispose of Norwegian oil and gas resources. In addition the United States must quickly be made to realize that Norwegian gas is not a real alternative," is the unanimous Norwegian reaction.

The background to Reagan's parenthetic remark during Thursday's press conference is that parallel with the sanctions intended to halt the natural gas pipeline from Siberia to several West European countries the United States is searching feverishly for alternative sources able to satisfy West European needs. However, American sources point out that President Reagan has not expressed regret at Norway's -- or anyone else's -- unwillingness to supply other European countries with oil and/or natural gas, although many people are giving this impression.

However, even after Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad's meeting last week with the U.S. counterpart Caspar Weinberger, it was clear that Norway could find itself in a difficult position the moment the United States succeeds in delaying or possibly even stopping the Siberian pipeline. Despite repeated Norwegian attempts to win understanding of the fact that North Sea gas is not a practical alternative to Siberian gas, in the U.S. debate there is still a fondness for talking of Norwegian and Netherland gas as possible alternatives.

American sourcer are unable to understand the violent Norwegian reaction to the President's mention of Norwegian gas deposits in an aside at the press conference Thursday. In brief, what President Reagan said was as follows: "We offered the (the Europeans) help with a source of energy closer at hand -- Norway and the Netherlands and existing gasfields with a potential which could satisfy their needs. We were unable to get that agreement."

Reagan's mention of Norwegian gas is first and foremost an attempt to explain what efforts the United States made before it decided to extend the sanctions against the Siberian gas pipeline, so that today they affect with full force the European firms producing goods under U.S. license.

There is no suggestion of pressure on Norway, but as earlier U.S. investigations and Norwegian-U.S. talks have shown, such pressure could be applied at a later date.

Referring to Reagan's remarks Foreign Minister Svenn Stray told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA that he did not take the President's statement as applying first and foremost to Norway and the Netherlands. The foreign minister also pointed out that the United States is aware of the actual situation, because the problems attached to increased Norwegian gas supplies have been pointed out to the U.S. authorities a number of times.

ACTION BROUGHT AGAINST TURKEY ON RIGHTS ISSUES

[Excerpts] The Governments of Norway, Denmark, the Netherlands, France and Sweden yesterday brought an action against Turkey at the European Human Rights Commission in Strasbourg for violations of human rights. The majority of Norwegian reactions express satisfaction with the government's decision.

Foreign Minister Svenn Stray said that the work of preparing the action has gone on for more than 6 months and it shows that there is no doubt that there have been violations of human rights by the Turkish authorities.

The government has received frequent criticism that the preparations for the action have taken an unnecessarily long time, but Stray stressed that from the legal point of view it is an extremely complicated case which has required thorough preparation.

"We must be aware that it is a serious decision we are making when we bring an action against another member of the Council of Europe," he said.

The five countries behind the action also wanted to give the Turkish authorities some time to act to improve conditions in Turkey, but there is now no reason for any further delay.

Stray denied that there had been any conflict within the Norwegian Conservative Party about the action. "As in Norway in general there are varying views within the Conservative Party about what pressure should be brought to bear on Turkey, but the question has not led to any major disagreements within the party," the foreign minister said.

When asked whether the action would not have repercussions for relations between Norway and Turkey, Stray replied that an action is not the same as a judgment and that it is too early to say anything about the reaction of the Turkish authorities.

"Initially the action will lead to a statement from the Human Rights Commission. We hope that Turkey will accept this statement and that it will not be necessary to proceed any further with the action," Stray said.

Storting Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Kare Kristiansen (Christian People's Party) said that in the present situation it is right for the government to take action against Turkey. He said that taking action against Turkey was a complicated matter, but considered it correct in view of the fact that five nations are taking the action jointly.

"I had reservations about Norway taking such a step alone, but the matter must be seen in a different light in view of the broad action achieved," Kristiansen said.

[Norwegian Labor Party Chairman] Gro Harlem Brundtland congratulated the government on its success in getting France and Sweden to take part in the action against Turkey. On the other hand she pointed out that the government would have had to take action alone if it had not won the support of other countries. In her view there is a clear majority in the Storting in favor of an action against Turkey.

EPS AIDE COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH EIVINN BERG

[Knut Falchenberg report]

[Text] "The fact that we were able to meet at [Norwegian Foreign Ministry] Under Secretary Eivinn Berg's summer cottage in Sandefjord rather than at an office at the Foreign Ministry shows how close our relationship with Norway has become in the last 6 months. And contacts with Norway can be developed further," Alfred Cahen said on his departure from Fornebu [Oslo's Airport] on Friday [2 July]. As chairman of the European Political System's [EPS] Political Committee Cahen has been one of the driving forces behind the EEC nations' foreign policy cooperation. Now a Dane will be taking over as chairman.

Even though Foreign Ministry procedural experts had their doubts about receiving Alfred Cahen at a Norwegian summer cottage,the urbane Belgian was obviously delighted at this setting for his talks with Under Secretary Eivinn Berg. But the contents of the talks were much less encouraging, especially when the two sides came to the subject of the seemingly widening gulf between Europe and the Reagan administration in the United States. The Ten EEC nations which cooperate on foreign policy through the EPS are seriously concerned and in his interview with the press Cahen used expressions like "total lack of U.S. understanding" and stated that the gulf must not "create more conflict -- we must avoid economic warfare with the United States."

He pointed out that only 8 days after the Western leaders' 3-day meeting in Versailles and 2-day NATO meeting in Bonn Reagan made some completely surprising moves -- these were the new obstacles to the planned gas pipeline from Siberia and the new import levels on steel. "As I see it, it is very wise to attempt some savings of Western gas resources by obtaining gas from elsewhere. The West would only become dependent on Soviet gas supplies if we first used up our own resources," he said. Cahen hopes for better understanding between Europe and the United States and said that it is necessary to use all channels to achieve this.

NATO is one such channel and in the political and economic field the OECD is an unused forum, he said. Up to now the OECD has been mostly used for technological discussion, but the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development could also be an excellent political instrument.

It was last January that the new Norwegian foreign policy leadership led by Foreign Minister Svenn Stray established a new working relationship with the EPS, while the Belgians were chairman. Cahen said that the arrangement has borne fruit, characterized by honest exchanges of opinion between Norway and the Ten in the field of foreign policy.

"On several points the discussions have meant that the views of the two sides have moved closer together. On the practical level such contacts will never be able to lead to spectacular results, but nevertheless the usefulness of the working arrangement has shown itself during the last 6 months," he said. "There is scope for further developments, but this will be a matter primarily for the Norwegian authorities and the Danish chairman who takes over in the EPS this week. Norway can be kept informed and discuss issues both before and after the official meetings between the Ten, but will never be able to take part in our meetings directly as long as Norway remains outside the EEC," Cahen told the Norwegian press Friday.

At Eivinn Berg's summer cottage the two sides also discussed the situation in the Middle East, Central America and South Africa.

NEW BOFORS ANTITANK MISSILE DEMONSTRATED

PM120805 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 24 Jun 82 p 8

[Erik Liden report]

[Excerpt] Kvarn -- A new antitank missile which hits tanks from above at an angle has been developed by Bofors for the Swedish Army.

On Tuesday [22 June] the system was demonstrated for the first time at Kvarn firing range in Ostergotland in the presence of Army Chief Nils Skold and others.

The missile is fired in the conventional way at its target. Electronic sensors automatically steer it above its target which it strikes at 30-degree angle. All other antitank missiles in the world today attack from the front or the side which increases the distance they have to pass through tanks armor.

The Bofors system, which was also demonstrated to international arms dealers on 8 June, will be ready for series production by the end of 1984 and will be an extremly important addition to infantry and tank brigade defenses, Skold said. Its range is 2 km and all current tank armor is susceptible to it.

ARAB DELEGATION MEETING WITH THATCHER REPORTED

LD091716 Kuwait KUNA in English 1600 GMT 9 Jul 82

[Text] London, 9 Jul (KUNA) -- British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher was asked Friday by an Arab League delegation to impose sanctions against Israel.

At a meeting in Downing Street lasting some 45 minutes the delegation, comprising Bahraini Foreign Minister Shaykh Muhammad Ibn Mubarak al-Khalifah, Tunisian Minister for Foreign Affairs Beji Caid es-Sebsi and Arab League London representative Omar al-Hassan, asked Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher to implement U.N. Resolutions 508 and 509 which required Israel to withdraw from Lebanon.

In comments after the meeting Shaykh Muhammad said Arab League delegations had been asking the five permanent members of the Security Council to "take their responsibilities and apply the Charter of the U.N., especially the chapter concerning sanctions against countries which do not apply the rule of the U.N."

"We are asking all the governments of the world to implement sanctions against Israel until it withdraws its forces and acts according to the U.N. Charter," the Bahraini minister adds.

Shaykh Muhammad described the talks with the British prime minister as "frank and useful." "Britain can play an important role to help peace and stability in the Middle East. We believe what the Israelis have done, this catastrophic situation, should be stopped and we hope Britain, as a permanent member of the Security Council, will play its role," he said.

The delegation has had discussions with the British Government, including talks with Deputy Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd yesterday, and with the leaders of the British opposition parties today.

"And the reaction we have had is very useful and encouraging because they understand that the Israeli attacking should be stopped," he commented.

This morning the delegation had lengthy meeting with Labour opposition leader Michael Foot and his deputy, Denis Healey. Later the Arab team met Liberal Party leader David Steel and the newly-elected head of the Social Democratic Party Roy Jenkins.

After the Downing Street meeting Prime Minister Thatcher's spokesman said she had made it clear to the Arab team that Britain did not disagree with the wording of U.N. Resolutions 508 and 509, but that the problem was one of implementation. "After all, Britain did vote in favour of the resolutions," the spokesman commented.

The prime minister also reiterated the British Government's position on Lebanon and the Palestine problem, as defined by the European Community's Venice declaration and the European Council statement of last month.

She told the delegation that she thought stability in the region "was unlikely until the fundamental Palestinian problem was resolved."

On the question of sanctions against Israel, it is understood that the prime minister said "It was not a realistic proposition without unanimity amongst Security Council members, and at this time we don't think unanimity is likely."

IOANNIDHIS COMMENTS ON TURKISH MILITARY THREAT

NC130840 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 13 Jul 82 p 10

[Text] Independent presidential candidate Yeoryios Ioannidhis [former Greek Cypriot representative at the intercommunal talks] has asked for preventive measures in view of the reports that the Turks are being strengthened militarily, to the degree that they have doubled their firepower.

In a statement, Ioannidhis said:

"In our last statement we stressed that Attila is trampling on our land and strengthening his positions and military forces while our own government is remaining silent and inactive in face of national dangers.

"Since then, two new facts have been added from official statements which support our information about the strengthening of Attila's forces. They are:

"1. The statement by Minister of Interior and Defense Khristodhoulos Veniamin on Turkish military preparations and aggressive plans against our island and on the more than doubling of the firepower of the Turkish military forces in Cyprus.

"2. The government spokesman's statement that the government has proof in its hands that the Turks are preparing for military operations and that they are stockpiling food for a state of emergency.

"If to all this we add the recent statement by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou that Turkey is arming and that critical dangers are facing the nation, then the entire picture which appears before us ought to lead the government toward serious considerations and to the adoption of the necessary preventive measures to stop a new crime against Cyprus.

"As a first step we call upon the government to inform the people, through the people's representatives, of the proof available to the appropriate minister and then to listen to the views of the people's representatives on the steps and measures to be taken to prevent another unpleasant development.

"We must not fatalistically accept developments nor should there be inaction on critical national matters that have to do with our national and natural survival. At such critical moments, the people must know the dangers surrounding them and the government has a duty to inform them correctly and to take preventive action.

"The survival of Cyprus is a matter for all the Cypriot people and the whole nation. No positive result can be derived from the [AKEL-Democratic Party] minimum program.

"Only unity, unanimity and collective action with sincere and close cooperation between Greece and Cyprus can save Cyprus.

"All those who do not believe in this national necessity, all those who work against this position, all those who cultivate polarization and division, all those who instigate bigotry and party rancour only strike against Cyprus and its struggle for survival and salvation."

[Text] The Cypriot parliamentary delegation on a visit to the Soviet Union had a new meeting in Moscow with a Supreme Soviet delegation during which Shitikov, chairman of the Council of the Union of the USSR Supreme Soviet, reiterated his country's support for a just solution to the Cyprus issue without foreign interventions and emphasized that further development of relations between the Soviet Union and Cyprus not only serves the two countries but also security in the Mediterranean and in Europe.

Delegation Returns

[Text] The Cypriot interparty parliamentary delegation, which concluded an official 7-day visit to the Soviet Union at the invitation of the Supreme Soviet, returned from Moscow today. In an arrival statement at Larnaca Airport, the head of the delegation, House of Representatives President Ladhas, stated:

[Begin recording] We have returned from the Soviet Union after a 7-day visit at the invitation of Mr Shitikov, chairman of the Council of the Union. Our stay in the Soviet Union was remarkable in all aspects. Our impressions are very favorable. Our talks covered the entire spectrum of Cypriot-Soviet relations and were really very constructive.

On our second day in the Soviet capital, we laid a wreath at the Lenin Mausoleum and at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and then held talks with Vasiliy Vasilyevich Kuznetsov, first deputy chairman of the Supreme Soviet Presidium, which lasted for over 1 hour and covered all international and bilateral issues like the Cyprus problem, the present phase of the inter-Cypriot talks and the missing persons issue. Both sides decided that our bilateral relations can and must be improved even more.

Then we had talks with Mr Shitikov, chairman of the Council of the Union, who had officially invited our delegation. The deputy chairman of the Council of Nationalities, chairmen of Supreme Soviet parliamentary committees and many Supreme Soviet members and officials were present at the talks. All the members of our delegation, officials and our ambassador in Moscow attended the talks. Once more there was a review of all international and bilateral problems. Our Soviet friends were briefed on the present phase of the Cyprus problem. The Soviet side explained to us how the Supreme Soviet operates, while we explained to the Soviet side how our House of Representatives operates. The briefing lasted for approximately 2 hours and was very constructive. We believe that our visit to the Soviet Union will strengthen even more the very friendly relations between the two countries.

During our visit to the Soviet Union we paid an official visit to Leningrad. We held talks with the chairman of the city soviet executive committee. We also laid flowers at the tomb of the defenders of Leningrad and a wreath at the (Kariyovka) Cemetery where 470,000 men, women and children are buried who died of famine, hardships and sufferings while defending Leningrad during the 900-day siege. Our Leningrad visit was truly remarkable.

Then we paid a visit to the Soviet Socialist Republic of Armenia where both the people and the surroundings reminded us very much of our country. We had the opportunity to hold talks with Mr Sarkisov, chairman of the Armenian Supreme Soviet, and with other officials. The hospitality that was accorded to us both in Armenia and in Moscow and Leningrad was truly excellent. The love and the respect that our Soviet friends extended was not just to us but to all the Cypriot people.

I must also stress that our delegation was extended full honors commensurate with the level of the delegation. The mass media -- the press, the radio and particularly the television -- gave full coverage of our visit to the Soviet Union. It is enough to tell you that when we arrived in Yerevan, we met one of the intellectuals who had come to the Cyprus studies congress, a very educated man who spoke impeccable Greek. He came to welcome me and used myname. I asked him if he knew me. He said: I know you, Mr President, because I have seen you on television for 3 days. This shows how much coverage the mass media gave to our visit.

During my visit I invited Mr Shitikov, chairman of the Council of the Union, to visit Cyprus. My invitation was accepted, and the date of Mr Shitikov's visit, who will head a Supreme Soviet delegation, will be fixed through diplomatic channels.

In general I can say our visit to the Soviet Union was useful and constructive and will contribute to further strengthening bilateral relations. [end recording]

The interparty parliamentary delegation was welcomed at Larnaca Airport by Soviet ambassador in Nicosia Mr Astavin, deputies and other officials.

TURKISH REJECTION OF TALKS TIMETABLE SCORED

NC100952 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 10 Jul 82 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "The Timetable"]

[Text] Turkish opposition to the establishment of a timetable for the conclusion of discussions on the Waldheim "evaluation" [of the intercommunal talks] is understandable. They do not want the timetable for the very simple reason that it suits them to have the talks go on without any time restrictions, so that they can protract them in order to be able to say that talks are being conducted, even though nothing is being achieved.

Absence of a timetable only serves the one who not only is in no hurry but who also does not want to have an honorable settlement. According to a popular Cypriot saying, "He who does not want to bake bread goes on sifting flour for 5 days."

This exactly describes the intentions of the Turks, who would be prepared to continue the talks not only for 5 years but for 5 decades if it were up to them.

The logic behind the Turkish opposition to the timetable goes something like this: Nothing urges us toward a solution which, if it is to be achieved, presupposes reaching certain decisions which are not palatable. The talks can be continued indefinitely. This strengthens the occupation faits accomplis and, in the meantime, it is likely that favorable conditions could develop -- or we could create them -- in order to accomplish new faits accomplis.

In any event it is a positive element that the United Nations understands the usefulness of a timetable which, as Gobbi stated, helps the talks.

PAPER QUESTIONS U.S.-BRITISH ACTIVITY ON BASES

NC101150 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 10 Jul 82 p 3

[From the "Views and Comments" column: "Unacceptable and Illegal"]

[Text] The prospect of Cyprus being used as a point of support for the Israeli attack and the threatened U.S. military intervention in Lebanon is a source of serious concern for our people. This concern has increased after reports about large-scale activity on the Akrotiri and Dhekelia bases and about the arrival there of U.S. marines and Phantom military aircraft.

Such a development is an open U.K. and U.S. provocation against our state and our people, who condemn with horror the U.S.-Israeli attack against Lebanon and wholeheartedly support the Palestinians. Over and above this, Cyprus also runs the danger of being implicated in a broader buccaneering act with unforseeable consequences to our country. We are of the strong opinion that the large-scale activities on the bases should be thoroughly investigated and that the intentions of the British authorities should be explained. It must be made clear to the British officials that our people will in no case allow use of their country for strikes against their Palestinian friends either by the U.S. or any other attacker. Anything of this sort is not only morally and politically unacceptable to us but is also illegal in accordance with the provisions of the agreements on the operation of the British bases in Cyprus.

DENKTAS REBUTS KIPRIANOU STATEMENT ON REFUGEES

TA121400 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1300 GMT 12 Jul 82

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that Greek Cypriot administration leader Kiprianou is not in favor of conciliation on the Cyprus issue. Denktas replied to Kiprianou's statement to the effect that the return of Greek Cypriot refugees to their homes is a precondition for settlement of the Cyprus problem. Denktas said that Kipranou cannot make anyone forget the population exchange agreement of 1975. Explaining that the 1974 peace operation prevented the island from being annexed to Greece and stopped a Greek occupation, Denktas said that Greece is still pursuing the policy of expansion and that the Greek Cypriot administration is following this adventurist path.

Noting that the continuation of national guarantees is essential for the independence of Cyprus, Denktas again asked Kiprianou to return to the path of intercommunal talks and said that the time is ripe to rapidly establish a bizonal federation through the intercommunal talks.

GUNAYDIN CLAIMS CYPRUS PREPARING FOR WAR

NC130632 Istanbul GUNAYDIN (Kibris) in Turkish 7 Jul 82 pp 1, 5

[Text] It has been learned that in accordance with a decision taken by the Greek Cypriot administration, all new apartments in Cyprus must be built in a manner suitable to defense purposes.

According to reports from reliable sources, the basements in all newly built apartments are being equipped with modern means and materials and large quantities of tinned food are being stocked to provide for a long time. In accomplishing all these activities, the Greek Cypriot leadership enlists the forcible support of the public.

Reliable circles say that the Greek Cypriot leadership has established a control system through which contact is possible with all defense centers in the event of a war. The telephone and wireless connections operate in a very orderly manner. The same circles evaluate all these efforts as a "preparation for a new war."

The same circles further maintain that the Greek Cypriots have been reinforced with more modern weapons and military equipment. They say with absolute certainty that these weapons originate from Greece.

TUNISIAN PRIME MINISTER ARRIVES, MAKES STATEMENT

[Text] Tunisian Prime Minister Mzali arrived in Athens this afternoon. Hellenic Radio-Television reporter Manolis Sardhoulias reports:

[Begin recording] Tunisian Prime Minister Mohamed Mzali arrived in Athens at 1830 [1530 GMT] today for a 2-day working visit. He was met at Ellinikon Airport by Foreign Minister Yiannis Kharalambopoulos. Upon his arrival, Mr Mzali stated:

[Mzali in French with superimposed Greek translation] I come as a representative of people who, like the Greeks, have devoted themselves to freedom. This will will provide the possibilities for broader cooperation between our two countries on all levels. We view with concern recent events, such as the invasion of Lebanon -- an invasion of a peaceful state -- which was attacked by Israel. (?Before such) an international situation, Greeks and Tunisians can stand side by side and levy effective pressure for their rights as people. We admire Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou's courageous attitude toward the Palestinian people. We believe in the cooperation of our countries within the framework of cooperation of Mediterranean states which can effectively cooperate in order to avert intensification of the crisis.

[Sardhoulias] Welcoming the Tunisian prime minister, Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos said:

[Kharlambopoulos] I welcome on behalf of the Greek Government the prime minister of friendly Tunisia, Mr Mzali who, as you heard, is the former chairman of the Olympic Committee and current vice chairman of the same committee. He has come for talks -- political talks -- in order to review the situation that has developed in our region and, moreover, to promote our bilateral relations.

It is indeed a fact that what you just heard from the Tunisian prime minister in connection with the Middle East situation and our country's participation in these developments has been generally acknowledged. Our country plays a leading role in these developments and is particularly respected by the entire Arab world.

With regard to our relations with Tuniaia, you can understand that since Tunisia is a Mediterranean country, we take special interest in making our ties closer and in developing political, economic and cultural relations, as well as relations on all levels because our stance, the Greek Government's stance, is that the Mediterranean should become a sea of peace and cooperation among the people who live on its shores.

Tomorrow we shall have the opportunity to discuss many questions at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Prime Minister Mzali will have the opportunity to have talks with Prime Minister Papandreou. He will also be received by the president of the republic and, as he himself has said, we believe that this time his presence here is of a general political nature. Thus, on this occasion, I welcome the prime minister of the friendly state of Tunisia, Mr Mzali, and wish him an enjoyable stay and success in the talks we will have. [end recording]

RIZOSPASTIS SCORES PAPANDREOU CABINET SPEECH

NC071608 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 7 Jul 82 p 2

[From the "Radical" column: "Groundless Assertions"]

[Text] We have shaped a proud multidimensional Greek foreign policy. The country's international support has been broadened and its defense capability strengthened. Mr Papandreou made this concise foreign policy statement in his report on the government work at the new Council of Ministers session the day before yesterday. His speech perhaps implies contentment and optimism, but is it justified? Are there facts, government actions and developments substantiating the prime minister's assertions that could inspire comparable optimism and satisfaction among the people?

The negotiations on the bases are moving toward a decision to retain them. The promise for the immediate removal of the nuclear weapons has also become a "vision." The "vision" to dissolve the military blocs has also been abandoned, and there is a Greek government signature on the decision to allow Spain to enter NATO. How can such events or the signing of cold war NATO communiques, as was done at the recent Bonn summit conference, be reconciled with a multidimensional Greek foreign policy? If the prime minister had wanted Greece to develop relations with socialist countries, does this fact alone mean that he is implementing a multidimensional policy?

The imperialist countries of West Europe, under intensive U.S. pressure to obstruct such a course, are also promoting relations with socialist countries. The report on the 8 months of government work cannot substantiate the prime minister's allegations. On the contrary, deeds and actions of this dimension without, of course, discounting some positive ones, ultimately lead to completely different conclusions from those of Mr Papandreou.

ANATOLIA REPORTS ON PROPOSED CONSTITUTION

[Excerpt] Ankara, 10 Jul (AA) -- The Turkish nation will embark soon upon a new experiment in parliamentary democracy with a new constitution.

The members of the constitutional committee that drafted the document told newsmen that the substance of basic freedoms and rights recognized by the 1961 Constitution will remain untouched. But certain restrictions will be imposed to help maintain national integrity, independence and territorial entity and to combat against subversive trends.

An election law would permit political parties but would prohibit a communist, fascist or theocratic state. The authors of the draft are seeking to head off formation of extreme rightist and leftist groups of the sort whose blood vendetta resulted in 6,000 deaths in the 3 years prior to a coup in September 1980.

The general framework of the draft constitution, completed by a 15-member commission of the Consultative Assembly, is already public knowledge, made so by Turkish newspaper reports described as "quite accurate" by authoritative sources. An official version of the draft is expected to be disclosed in the next week, says Orhan Aldikacti, chairman of the commission.

Further Report

[Text] Ankara, 11 Jul (AA) -- The Consultative Assembly's constitutional committee completed work on the bulk of the "preliminary draft" of the new constitution, ANADOLU AJANSI was told by Committee Chairman Orhan Aldikacti, last touches and drafting of the explanations concerning individual articles were still going on and the "preliminary draft" will be submitted to the Assembly speaker Wednesday at 11 hours a.m.

The "preliminary draft" is expected to include 170 articles provided that no last-minute changes are made. The presidential council being newly-created as a consultative body will consist of 35 members.

The draft is expected to call for presidential elections every 7 years. The president will be elected by the Parliament. In case the Parliament fails to elect a president of the republic in the three rounds, the candidate who obtains the greatest number of votes on the fourth round will become president. An additional provision in the draft calls for election of the seventh (next) president of the republic directly by the people.

The Senate is abolished and the Parliament becomes a single-house one with 400 members elected for 5-year terms.

The powers of the executive are being enlarged to bring about a strong government. The prime minister is being given [the authority] to dismiss individual ministers in certain cases through consultations with the president of the republic, he will also be entitled to ask the president to proclaim an "emergency" whenever required.

Some of the members of the presidential council being introduced will be appointed by the president and others will be determined according to laws to be enacted. Those who served as prime ministers since the Sep. 12, 1980 military takeover will be members of the presidential council, as well as many top civilian or military officials.

The National Security Board which had certain powers under the 1961 Constitution will be given additional powers and duties. The board will meet under the chairmanship of the president of the republic and its decisions, hitherto in the form of "recommendations," will have more bearing.

The Constitutional Court remains. The number of Constitutional Court judges will be diminished and they will be appointed by the president of the republic.

"Press is free and cannot be subjected to censure," [as received] the draft says but under extraordinary conditions, certain restrictions will be made.

Strikes and lockouts are legal, the draft says, the supreme labour arbitration will continue its functions but will be resorted to only when the employer and the employee fail to strike a collective bargain.

He added that his country completely agreed with Turkey's peaceful policies both in the Middle East and the world at large.

Efraimoglu then said that out of its total imports of $19 billion, Greece imports $30 million worth in goods from Turkey. He added: "Let the politicians eat one another. I believe that there are no differences between our peoples. Both Turkey and Greece stand to gain economically if our businessmen increase their bilateral contacts.

"We buy raw textile materials, hazelnuts and pistachios from Turkey and sell it electronic appliances and industrial goods. You possess large quantities of minerals and raw materials of which we import a great deal. We can work together in mining and agricultural productivity. We can make joint investments in these fields. We can sell you various industrial materials and industrial products."

As has been reported, Austria had been officially informed by the USSR that telephone services with the West -- including Austria -- would be cut back.

CHANCELLOR KREISKY INTERVIEWED IN AL-MAJALLAH

PM131057 London AL-MAJALLAH in Arabic 10-16 Jul 82 pp 3-6

[Jamal ar-Rawi interview with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky in Vienna -- date not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] What do you think of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon over the past weeks?

[Answer] I have said it several times, and I here repeat that the Israeli invasion of Lebanon is an act of aggression and a blatant violation of international law.

[Question] You have recently said that you feared that this invasion might lead to a major conflict in the region.

[Answer] Any war could have uncontrollable consequences. I can imagine that, as a consequence of this invasion, the Israeli force might attack Syrian territory, in which case the Soviet Union would not accept the embarrassment, a serious conflict would ensue between the United States and the Soviet Union, and world tension would mount.

[Question] As leader of a neutral state you are qualified to play a special role in the Middle East conflict. Bearing in mind Austria's limited resources, I would like to know what practical steps you can take against the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, considering that the invasion faces you with a twofold problem because it is directed against the Lebanese Republic and the PLO, two entities which Austria fully recognizes.

[Answer] As a neutral state we cannot help either of the two warring sides militarily, but this does not mean that we cannot extend humanitarian aid to those afflicted by the war. Furthermore, nobody can prevent us from expressing our opinion frankly and clearly on the basis of our moral and political principles. I personally believe that the United Nations should use its resources to impose and carry out sanctions against Israel. Austria would support a UN resolution to this effect.

[Question] With reference to the present conflict in the area, one cannot equate the American position with the positions of the other big powers. Washington has given the green light for the invasion of Lebanon, just as it gave the green light for the 1978 invasion. In brief, Israel is an aggressor supported by another state, namely the United States. As leader of a neutral state, how do you view the U.S. attitude toward the Israeli invasion?

[Answer] Even with the best of intentions one cannot deny the close relations between the United States and Israel. There are numerous examples. The whole world knows that the Israeli Army is mainly armed with U.S. weapons. If I myself knew 6 months ago that Israel was planning to invade Lebanon, there can be no doubt that Washington, which has closer relations with Israel, had better and clearer information. Why then has the United States done nothing? Either the United States had no means or opportunity to prevent what has happened, or certain Washington circles had no intention of preventing what happened. This mad Israeli war is being implemented in accordance with a specific plan satisfactory to some people in Washington who apparently let themselves be carried away with the argument that this war in Lebanon would restore Lebanese sovereignty, which would make possible a peace treaty between Israel and Lebanon. This short-sighted analysis cannot prevail, especially after the very high price paid in terms of casualties, even for Israel which has itself suffered an unexpected number of causalties. Whether Washington could not or would not prevent what happened, the matter is serious.

However, I would not be fair if I did not voice my opinion regarding the attitude of the Soviet Union. I know the PLO and its various trends very well. Some people within the PLO have for many years had blind faith in the power of the Soviet Union, believing that Moscow would help the PLO. Their calculations were wrong because the Soviet Union has done nothing despite the commitment of these currents to it. In short, I believe that both superpowers have played a part in what happened, each according to its own policies.

[Question] It is clear that the Israeli Government would not have taken its decision to invade Lebanon if it did not have the prior approval of the Israeli opposition, particularly the Labor Party. It is known that this party is a member of the Socialist International [SI]. You are one of the leaders of the SI. How could you agree to deal with a party that supports the invasion of Lebanon when you yourself oppose the invasion? Do you have any intention of calling for disciplinary sanctions within the SI against Shimon Peres' party if it does not withdraw its support for the policies of the Begin government, and would such sanctions go as far as expelling it from the SI? How can you accept the membership of a party that supports a military operation that, as admitted by Begin, Sha'ron and Shamir, aims at liquidating a nation?

[Answer] As soon as the Israeli war against Lebanon broke out I called for an emergency meeting of the SI. Willy Brandt, its president, informed me that most of the vice presidents were against such a meeting. Brandt instructed Mario Soares, one of his deputies who is also the leader of the Portuguese Socialist Party, to go to Israel to obtain specific information about the position of the Israeli Labor Party. I have once more sent a cable calling for an emergency meeting of one of the main SI bodies to discuss the subject, hoping that my call would this time succeed. As for Shimon Peres, I cannot say that I was shocked by his attitude because I saw this coming months ago. The Israeli Labor Party is divided. There is conflict among its leaders. This may be one of the reasons which led the party to swim in the waters of a fascist government. I think I am right, and not exaggerating, when I use this harsh word, fascism, to describe Begin's government. Ben-Gurion himself used much harsher words to describe Begin. At the forthcoming meeting of the SI I will certainly reaffirm my position and I will say that in its present state and with its present policies the Israeli Labor Party does not qualify to retain its membership in the SI.

As for the attitude of the other Israeli party, MAPAM, which is a member in the ruling coalition, [as published] it has taken a stand against the war from the beginning. I think it is the only political force in Israel whose views are not in conflict with the views of the SI.

[Question] Peres recently met with Lebanese leader Walid Junblatt and said that he was authorized by the SI to negotiate with him. How could the SI authorize Peres to hold such a meeting, especially when it is held on territory occupied forcibly by the Israeli Army?

[Answer] I have no knowledge of this. As far as I know, Peres is not qualified to embark on such a move on behalf of the SI.

[Question] In the past few years you played an important role in introducing the West to the rights of the Palestinian people. One significant step was your invitation to Yasir 'Arafat to Vienna to meet with you and Willy Brandt. What role will you play in the future?

[Answer] I believe that my efforts to explain the Palestine question have so far only achieved limited success. Of course, as a result of my efforts other states have started thinking about the Palestine question and about relations with the PLO. I particularly mention the EEC states. Their attitude has changed tangibly. I can therefore say that my efforts were not all in vain. However, the other important shift -- in the general attitude of the United States -- has not yet materialized. True, signs of change are beginning to appear.

This is perhaps one of the reasons which prompted Israel to start a new war and attack Lebanon, but the attack has actually resulted in a further change in American public opinion. The best evidence of this is the Washington POST editorial during Begin's recent visit to the United States. The editorial was entitled "Begin, go home." This shows that U.S. public opinion is changing rapidly, and this may escalate if Israel does not end the war, and quickly.

[Question] In a recent statement Dr 'Isam as-Sartawi urged the Palestinian fighters to stand fast against any Israeli assault in Beirut and to refuse to negotiate with Israel as long as its forces remain in their positions around Beirut. He maintained that only steadfastness can bring down Begin's government and cause a change. What to you think of this, considering it came from a Palestinian personality known for his moderation?

[Answer] Dr 'Isam as-Sartawi has not stopped struggling for the Palestine cause. He enjoys good and important relations with the democratic states in the West, and his views are highly appreciated in these states. If today he is advocating military resistance instead of negotiations, which he had supported for such a long time, I fully understand his position. We in Austria now live in peace and security, and I will not allow myself to advise others to struggle and die; but I do understand why the Palestinians refuse to lay down their arms. They are struggling for survival. I personally hope that the Israeli people will one day understand the real extent of this invasion, the number of victims who fell as a result, and the madness of this war policy. I hope they will change their views and thus provide the opportunity for the states and peoples of the region to live together in peace. It will be a long time before this change occurs. I personally am pessimistic about this happening in the near future, but the Israeli people are bound one day to realize that this policy is wrong and that it exposes them to grave dangers.

[Question] What is the future for the Palestine cause if the [Israeli] Army enters Beirut and the PLO is militarily destroyed?

[Answer] If the Israeli Army mounts an assault on Beirut the consequences will be grave and there will be many casualties, not only in Beirut and the rest of Lebanon but also in Israel where every family will become aware of the consequences. If the Israelis imagine that they can defeat the PLO in West Beirut, let us ask: What will happen then? The Israeli forces will be compelled to withdraw from the devastated city and the world will ask: What was the use of the war? The Palestinian people will not allow their destruction. They will always live. The Palestinians will form the nucleus of new Palestinian forces attached to the PLO, and these forces will enjoy worldwide moral support.

[Question] Some political analysts believe that Israel's attempt to destroy the Palestinian resistance will strengthen extremism at the expense of moderation, and subsequently lead to more Palestinian "terrorist" operations. Do you agree with this analysis?

[Answer] I can clearly see that the Israeli invasion and the resulting suffering have increased the bitterness and frustration of the Palestinians and the other Arab people. However, the fall of these and other victims cannot possibly solve the Middle East problem. The only way to solve the Palestine problem is to change world public opinion and win it over through political efforts aimed at compelling Israel to change its attitude. One must not abandon this and must always work for it.

I personally believe a Palestinian state should be set up in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. What will be the final shape of such a state? This has to be worked out through negotiations and dialogue. Terrorism by any side cannot solve the problem of the Palestinian people and can only lead to other wars.

[Question] What in your opinion is the solution to the 7-year-old Lebanese problem?

[Answer] The foreign forces must withdraw from Lebanon. There is no other way.

I believe that the Austrian-French joint statement was important because it called for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon, to be replaced for a transitional period by a sufficiently strong international force. This means that both the United States and the Soviet Union should participate in this force, otherwise it will not be able to protect Lebanon and the Palestinians there. Such a force should restore Lebanon's sovereignty, put an end to the tragedies of this war and protect the Palestinians. This solution can only materialize if concerted efforts are made to persuade the Palestinians to accept it. It is obvious that there can be no final settlement in Lebanon unless the Palestine problem is solved.

[Question] How do you assess Arab-Austrian relations?

[Answer] The relations between Austria and the Arab states are very good, generally excellent, in fact. I will not permit myself to discuss economic relations in the present circumstances while victims are falling and blood is being spilled in Lebanon.

PLO'S QADDUMI ARRIVES IN VIENNA, SEES KREISKY

AU131214 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1003 GMT 13 Jul 82

[Text] Faruq Qaddumi, PLO foreign policy spokesman, has arrived in Vienna from Paris for political talks. At present Qaddumi is holding political talks with Chancellor Kreisky. He is accompanied by the new PLO delegate in Vienna, Franji.

Discusses Meeting

[Brigitte Fuchs report on interview with PLO Spokesman Faruq Qaddumi in Vienna 13 July]

[Text] The taking of office of the new PLO representative in Vienna, Abdallah Franji, constituted only the external reason for the visit of the PLO's foreign policy spokesman Faruq Qaddumi to Chancellor Kreisky. It was far more important for the PLO spokesman to brief Chancellor Kreisky about the PLO's attitude in the Lebanon crisis, a crisis to which no solution is yet in sight. The PLO, said its spokesman Qaddumi, is, as before, unwilling to embark on a retreat from Lebanon. He pointed to pertinent UN resolutions which request an unconditional Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon. Only after such a withdrawal would the PLO be ready to negotiate the status of the Palestinians in Lebanon. But negotiations should be conducted only with the Lebanese Government, Qaddumi stated, because it is the exclusive concern of the Lebanese to negotiate on Lebanon. Qaddumi once more rejected the offer of the Egyptian Government to grant the status of an exile government to the PLO's political leadership. This proposal to move to Cairo is not yet ripe for a decision. It is necessary first to find a solution to the present conflict. Only then would the PLO reflect about a possible move to Cairo.

Qaddumi also left no doubt about the fact that he is disappointed with the halfhearted attitude shown by the Arab states thus far. He literally requested sanctions on the part of the Arab countries against the United States, sanctions of an economic and political nature because in Qaddumi's view the United States is the only country that has made possible the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. Qaddumi cannot now conceive of direct negotiations between the United States and the PLO because the Americans would have to first officially recognize the PLO for this purpose as the representative of the Palestinian people. Qaddumi also once more rejected last week's nine-point American plan. This plan envisaged a withdrawal of the PLO strugglers from Beirut under the supervision of U.S. troops. Qaddumi literally stated about this plan: "This plan is being rejected because it would not be honest for the true murderers to be the Palestinians' saviors."

Qaddumi had better things to say about the second superpower, the Soviet Union. To the question of what assistance he expected from the Soviet Union, Qaddumi said: "I say that we receive moral, political and material support from the Soviet Union. We do expect more, however, because the Soviet Union is a friend of the Palestinians and supports their struggle for an independent state, for self-determination and for a home country. I think the Soviet Union could do many things. There is no need to state openly what it could do, but the Soviet Union will do it in the future. We have great confidence in the Soviet Union.

But PLO spokesman Qaddumi also expects political support from Chancellor Kreisky. Even though Kreisky stated only a week ago that he was not planning any new Middle East initiative, Qaddumi had a different impression after his talks with the chancellor today. It is first and foremost within the framework of the Socialist International in Qaddumi's view that Kreisky could do something for the PLO. Qaddumi stated in this context: "Chancellor Kreisky promised to do whatever we want him to do. He has denounced the Israeli action from the very beginning. He has also conferred with the Arab leaders and with the leaders of international socialism and is continuing his efforts to ensure that actions against Israel are taken."

To the question of when new political developments should be expected in the Lebanon conflict, Qaddumi said: "In the very next few days."

TV Interview

[Antonia Rados interview with PLO spokesman Faruq Qaddumi given in Vienna 13 July -- recorded in English with superimposed German translation]

[Text] [Question] In his talks with Kreisky the PLO representative was concerned with prompting the Socialist International [SI] into an initiative in favor of the Palestinians. Kreisky will probably as early as tonight present Qaddumi's wish at a meeting of the SI in Copenhagen, for which he left after these talks. In Copenhagen Kreisky will also meet the head of the Israeli Labor Party, Peres, whose support for the Lebanon invasion the chancellor has harshly denounced. After his conversation with Kreisky, Qaddumi passed himself off as an optimist.

[Answer] He is doing his best and I am sure that something will be done in support of the Palestinians in the next few days and weeks.

[Question] By the SI?

[Answer] Yes, by the SI.

[Question] There have been rumors that the U.S. administration will also accept and recognize the PLO. How much information do you have about that?

[Answer] Up to this point, I have no concrete information about a U.S. recognition of the PLO and of the rights of the Palestinian people. The United States is now the only country which has not recognized the PLO and its right to self-determination thus far.

[Question] Nor has Israel.

[Answer] Well, that does not count, that is the enemy. I am saying that one expects the United States to be unbiased. It is a great power which maintains that it guarantees peace and security. Hence it should not be biased.

[Question] But the U.S. Government says that it was not informed of the invasion plan.

[Answer] I am sorry, but they are big liars.

KREISKY MEETS WITH SI LEADERS IN COPENHAGEN

KREISKY CHARGES ISRAEL WITH 'SLANDERING' HIM

[Esxcerpt] Asked about press reports according to which the Israelis had seized documents in Beirut which proved that Palestinians were shown anti-aircraft facilities in Austria, Kreisky declared that this was a grotesque lie, that it was quite out of the question. He then offered the following explanation for reports of that type:

[Begin Kreisky recording] You see, I am consistently slandered by the Israeli side, for rather obvious reasons: I am an opponent of the current Israeli policy, and that is why they are incessantly seeking to impair our reputation. But considering how strong their hatred is for us, or rather, especially for me, the result is rather moderate, rather poor -- they have not established anything at all to date as far as equipment or training is concerned. We have demanded that they show us the documents. [end recording]

Defense Minister Roesch, also asked about this issue, excluded the possibility of Palestinians' having received any training at anti-aircraft facilities in Austria -- at least he had no knowledge of any such training during his term of office as minister of defense, he said.

KIRCHSCHLAEGER ANSWERS SARKIS' LEBANON MESSAGE

[Text] In reply to a message from Lebanese President Elias Sarkis, Austrian President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger has sent Sarkis a message expressing Austria's consternation over the latest events in Lebanon. The Austrian president recalls that Austria demanded that military operations be halted, an end be put to the suffering and peace be restored, and that it condemned the Israeli invasion. Kirchschlaeger concudes by expressing the hope that Lebanon's full sovereignty and freedom are restored soon, and assures Sarkis that Austria will spare no pains, neither in the political nor in the humanitarian field, to make its contribution to this end.

NETHERLANDS

VAN AGT WILL FOLLOW FRG ON EUROMISSILES

PM131055 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 8 Jul 82 p 3

[Text] The Hague, 8 Jul -- In determining policy on the deployment of 48 cruise missiles in the Netherlands the government will pay close attention in the next few years to the position of the West German Government, Prime Minister Van Agt declared on his return from Egypt yesterday.

The prime minister -- who is also foreign minister -- said that his actions in connection with the deployment decision would be a continuation of the policy of his predecessor [as foreign minister] Van der Stoel. At the end of last year Van der Stoel stated that as far as arms controls were concerned the Netherlands must follow the same line as Germany -- as had been the case recently, the foreign minister said.

"During the life of the interim cabinet there will be no changes in policy -- that is, the situation remains unchanged since the last cabinet formation negotiations. This means that nuclear arms policy remains the same, despite the fact that the Labor Party no longer forms part of the cabinet," Van Agt said.

He pointed out that up to mid-1982 the Soviet Union had deployed 315 SS-20 missiles with a total of 945 warheads. "From this we can draw the conclusion that the Soviet Union is unwilling to honor the moratorium but wants to continue deployment," the prime minister said. For Van Agt this is a reason for "urgent" negotiations with the Soviet Union about medium-range missiles.

For Van Agt's part the question of nuclear arms modernization will not be one of the most important topics at his talks today with West German Federal Chancellor Schmidt. However, Van Agt expects that the chancellor will give high priority to the issue.

FRG-USSR BANKS SIGN LOAN FRAMEWORK AGREEMENT

[Excerpts] Leningrad, 13 Jul (DPA) -- Despite the U.S. embargo, the loan framework agreement for German supplies for the construction of the gas pipeline from Western Siberia was signed in Leningrad today with the Soviet Foreign Trade Bank. The agreement, which was signed for the German side by Friedrich Wilhelm Christians, the board spokesman of the Deutsche Bank as the leading bank of the consortium, represents a finance volume of DM2,800 million.

The signing put the final seal on the general agreement between German banks and the Soviet authorities of July 1981. According to an announcement by the Deutsche Bank, the financing volume "fixed until the end of the year" can be increased up to DM4,000 million. The final volume depends on the extent to which further orders for supplies are given to firms in the Federal Republic.

The Federal Republic is giving a Hermes [export credit] guarantee for the financial loans which will be granted at market rates. According to Deutsche Bank the financing is limited to a maximum of 85 percent of the value of the respective orders. According to additional information from Leningrad the loans are granted for 8 years at an interest rate of 7.8 percent. The volume could "theoretically" increase even to DM5,000 million.

At his request, Christians today visited the Nevskiy Works in Leningrad which the USSR claims could produce substitute turbines for the pipeline. Soviet officials stated that the pipeline could, if necessary, be constructed on schedule by 1984 using Soviet equipment. Soviet mass media have been reporting lately that prototypes of a 25,000 kilowatt gas pump had proved reliable during testing.

The signing took place in connection with a meeting of the German-Soviet banking commission. In a protocol on the 2-day session, which in itself had nothing to do with the gas pipeline deal, both sides expressed their will to continue cooperation in the loan and insurance sector for the "implementation of major and long-term projects".

In view of Deutsche Bank chief Christians, the Soviet Union will, however, have to be prepared, in view of the worldwide high interest rates, to pay market interest rates itself. He told HANDELSBLATT (Duesseldorf) that so far Moscow had paid political interest rates which were scarcely higher than for the gas pipeline deal. It would not be bad at all, Christians said, if interest rates were to be increased for the Soviet Union too, since it is not after all, a developing country and cannot expect preferential conditions such as are granted to Third World countries.

At the bank meeting in Leningrad, Soviet Foreign Trade Bank chief Yuriy Ivanov said of the U.S. sanctions against the USSR that German firms are "bearing the brunt" of the U.S. embargo policy. Christians also expressed regret at the effects of the sanctions.

MINISTRY WARNS AGAINST 'OPENNESS' IN USSR DEALINGS

[Text] Bonn, 13 Jul (DPA) -- Without engaging in costly intelligence, the Soviet Union and other East bloc countries manage time and again to obtain information from German firms about high-grade technologies. The Federal Ministry of the Interior today cautioned against being too open in dealings with communist countries. The authorities of these states were bent on obtaining such technical know-how by underhand means. The resultant economic damage is incalculable.

According to German security authorities, the communist states, hampered by a shortage of hard currency and export restrictions, are using trade fairs and technical conferences to establish contacts, as well as visits to Western production and development facilities. They also request prospectuses, tenders and technical documentation without intending to buy. Occasionally instruments and components subject to embargo are included in orders for spare parts. Another ploy is to deliberately cause faults in installations that have already been purchased in order to watch repairs carried out by Western personnel.

The security authorities have plenty of evidence to show that East bloc countries often enter into purchase negotiations in order to procure Western technical know-how. They report a case in which a senior executive of a firm making electronic control systems in the energy sector found in the course of preliminary negotiations that the East European would-be buyers were keenly interested in details, technical data and operations. When he realized that the negotiators were only interested in pumping him for technical know-how, he asked them for the data needed to offer a solution. He did not receive the concrete facts nor did the East European negotiator contact his firm again.

The Federal Ministry of the Interior advised German firms always to bear these aims in mind when negotiating with communist states. If their suspicions are aroused they should get in touch with the security authorities.

DANIEL ORTEGA ACTIVITIES IN PARIS REPORTED

PA140045 Managua Radio Sandino Network in Spanish 1200 GMT 13 Jul 82

The luncheon was also attended by the following French officials: Charles Hernu, defense minister; Michel Jobert, minister of state for foreign trade; Jack Lang, culture minister; and Claude Cheysson, foreign minister. Commander Ortega was accompanied by Nicaraguan Foreign Minister Miguel d'Escoto.

In the afternoon, Daniel Ortega met with Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert and then with Premier Pierre Mauroy. French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson is to host a dinner in honor of the Nicaraguan delegation.

Today, Ortega is scheduled to meet with Cooperation and Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot and Transportation Minister Charles Fiterman. He will hold a news conference at noon.

Cheysson Hosts Dinner

PA132009 Managua Domestic Service in Spanish 0300 GMT 13 Jul 82

[By Carlos Jose Guadamuz -- live or recorded relay from Paris]

[Excerpts] French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson held a working dinner today at 2000, 1200 Managua time, with commander Daniel Ortega and his official delegation.

The French foreign minister and Commander Ortega made statements at the dinner. Foreign Minister Cheysson said that Nicaragua reflects an image of freedom, liberation and progress to Europe and that, from afar, France feels that Nicaragua represents freedom.

These beautiful words were expressed by French Foreign Minister Cheysson to Commander Ortega Saavedra who, in answering the foreign minister's statements, emphasized the grave situation faced by Central America and our country through exposure to aggression and threats resulting from the arrogance of imperialism and those who want to crush our revolution.

Cheysson's and Ortega's statements were applauded by the participants at the working dinner, which was attended by several ministers in President Francois Mitterrand's cabinet.

Press Conference

[News conference by Commander Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the Nicaraguan Government Junta, at the Crillon Hotel in Paris, 13 July -- recorded]

[Text] [Ortega] I wish to greet and thank the distinguished newsmen for their presence and to tell them that we feel very pleased with this visit to France, that it is taking place at a time when Nicaragua and the Central American region are experiencing one of the most difficult moments in their history. I am now at your disposal to answer whatever questions you wish to ask.

[Question] I would like to know if the coincidence of views regarding Latin American problems that was established between Mexico and France was again established during the meeting held by the commander with President Mitterrand?

[Answer] We can report a coincidence of views on the situation, with the aggravating circumstance that the situation is now much more complicated than when the French-Mexican proposal was made. We think, therefore, that it is time to revitalize the French-Mexican proposal.

[Question] Mr (Alfredo Garcia) has said in a statement made in Managua that the commander indicated that Central America was on the verge of a confrontation, a (?formal) confrontation, in view of the attitude of the United States. Can you give us some details on this?

[Answer] I can state that at this moment the Central American region has become a focus of world tension as a result of a mistaken policy of the present U.S. administration, which is pressuring the Central American governments and armed forces sectors of Central America to launch a campaign of political aggression, political (?harassment) and military aggression against the Nicaraguan revolution through greater intervention in El Salvador. Among these elements we must highlight [words indistinct] the declaration of the so-called Central American Democratic Community [CDC] that was released in San Salvador recently after a meeting of the foreign ministers of Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras and Costa Rica; the direct involvement of Honduran Army forces in the Salvadoran conflict; and the secret invasion that has been promoted against the Nicaraguan revolution from camps supported by Honduran Army sectors inside Honduran territory. This has meant that in the last few days over 1,000 heavily armed former Somozist guardsmen have been mobilized against the Nicaraguan revolution from Honduran territory. This has resulted in the last few weeks [as heard] in over 51 dead and over 20 wounded inside Nicaraguan territory.

[Question] Commander, I would like to know if you have asked for or obtained additional military assistance from the French Government.

[Answer] The Nicaraguan Government as a rule does not to give out any type of information regarding military cooperation.

[Answer] We can state that the aggression by the present U.S. administration against the Nicaraguan revolution has already begun. Naturally, the U.S. administration has taken care not to become directly involved in it and is pursuing it in the manner we have already outlined.

Regarding France's role in the problem, we believe that this is the time in which countries like France, by revitalizing the French-Mexican proposal or by stressing the need for a dialogue, for a solution that [words indistinct] the problems of the Central American region, will be able to make the current U.S. administration come to reason, because Nicaragua is completely willing to establish negotiations with the United States, to engage in talks with the United States, but only in a serious and responsible and above all respectful manner.

[Question] Commander, I represent French television channel two. At the same time you are paying this visit to France, a first delivery of arms is taking place. Granted, it is only the delivery of a token quantity because it amounts to 90 million francs. We would like to know if you believe that this amount of arms is going to be enough to keep you from the temptation of trying to obtain more weapons from the large blocs and particularly from the Soviet Union.

[Answer] We have already explained that the Nicaraguan Government does not release any specific information regarding how it obtains its weapons.

What we can say is that the Nicaraguan revolution upholds the right of any people, any nation, to seek ways to arm itself for defense. A revolution such as ours that is facing aggression, at a time when there is an escalation of aggression throughout the world and when the peoples have to be prepared to defend themselves with whatever they can, should not believe that other countries or the community of nations are going to run to their aid. This is being proven by the dramatic situation that the Palestinian people are facing in Beirut. So with good reason Nicaragua is compelled to make overtures wherever it can to achieve greater support of this type.

[Question] Mr (Gothais), correspondent from EL DIA of Mexico City. I would like to ask two questions. First, in view of your desire to revitalize the French-Mexican agreement on El Salvador, I would like to know how this problem is being focused upon following the election of a new president in Mexico. Second, do you think that the U.S. position regarding the Malvinas conflict will lead to the formation of a broad front regarding Nicaragua?

[Answer] The recent election of Miguel de la Madrid was fortunate because, as he himself has said, he is going to adopt and continue the policy that Mexico under President Lopez Portillo has been following regarding the region. Therefore, we think that this has opened the possibility [of revitalizing the French-Mexican agreement] in view of the responsibility with which Mexico has handled this problem and the statements of Miguel de la Madrid.

As for the possibilities of strengthening Latin American unity at this time, we believe that the conditions are very favorable. There are several countries, among them Venezuela, which are defending positions which we think are very positive and which show that the governments and peoples of Latin America must unite around common interests. Nicaragua supports that effort.

[Question] (Francisco Villarosenro) of ASSOCIATED PRESS. From the economic viewpoint, what are the results of the talks you have held with the French authorities?

[Answer] We have concluded a number of agreements in the area of economic cooperation and trade. We think all of this is very important because it helps to strengthen ties of all kinds.

[Answer] We are confident that the Nicaraguan revolution can maintain a nonaligned policy. Of course a nonaligned policy is greatly determined by the response it receives within the framework of international pluralism. To the extent that there is international receptivity toward the Nicaraguan revolution within a pluralist framework, we can say that Nicaragua's nonalignment is guaranteed. This possibility still exists. This possibility is present. This visit to France confirms that this possibility still exists.

[Answer] We are scheduled to meet with King Juan Carlos and Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo.

[Answer] Well, we plan to (?travel) on Wednesday.

[Answer] Nicaragua is experiencing the effects of an unjust economic policy in the international area, which is seriously affecting the Central American region in these critical moments.

Therefore, we are experiencing a very difficult economic situation. Our situation is doubly serious in comparison with the rest of the Central American countries in view of the conscious attitude of the current U.S. administration of economically harming the Nicaraguan revolution, of destabilizing it. To this is added the damage from natural disasters such as the recent floods that Nicaragua suffered. According to a study by ECLA, Economic Commission for Latin America which sent a commission to Nicaragua to evaluate the damage, it amounts to more than $355 million.

Regarding the attitude of Mr Eden Pastora, we have termed it as a loss, as a blow to the revolution, because imperialism, Mr Reagan, won that battle with the Nicaraguan revolution. The revolution wanted to keep Mr Pastora in its ranks, while the United States, the U.S. administration, wanted to undermine us, to weaken us, to divide us and affect us in that way. We painfully have to accept that they won that battle and were able to take away Mr Pastora.

[Answer] We think that stability in the region inevitably has to come through an agreement with the United States, with the current U.S. administration. Nicaragua is always willing to achieve an understanding. It is willing to improve its relations with the U.S. Government.

Regarding the recent changes in the U.S. foreign policy officials, we do not believe that the change of persons represents a change of policy. The current situation that we in Central America are experiencing, as I was telling you previously, is the continuation of the aggressive policy that Mr Reagan announced in his platform and that is now being escalated into a greater offensive. This makes the situation in the area more serious.

[Question] (Feliciano Fidalgo), correspondent of the Madrid newspaper El PAIS. What West European country could represent Nicaragua?

[Answer] This is too big a load for only one country. I think this should be the responsibility of the international community. All the European countries should adopt a more active policy in this regard because they cannot view the problem of the region as one that does not affect international tension. They must be aware that the Central American region is already a point of world tension.

[Question] Do you think that your revolution has maintained the same democratic characteristics and the same pluralism — in other words, the same representation -- as 3 years ago?

[Answer] I think that this is a great concern of the present U.S. administration. All of the U.S. actions are aimed at provoking the Nicaraguan revolution and forcing it to become radical and then, with that, the United States intends to kill or limit the possibilities for changes in the region and for hopes in the Latin American continent.

[Question] I am an independent journalist. You have said that Nicaragua is willing to negotiate with President Reagan. I'd like to know the minimum conditions you would want met in order to have a just negotiation.

[Answer] It is a condition not only that the United States be willing to talk and discuss, but that it change the arrogant attitude it has been showing. There was an exchange of notes between the Nicaraguan and U.S. Governments, and we saw in the American proposals language that makes a dialogue impossible. The Americans are using language that is aggressive, threatening, full of conditions and that reminds us of the times when the United States intervened in Nicaragua. It seems that the U.S. administration is not aware of the reality it is facing. It hasn't realized that a revolution has taken place in Nicaragua and that things have changed there. Consequently, we are willing to being negotiations with the present U.S. administration, but without any conditions.

We have said that we need witnesses -- countries to witness, or governments to assume the responsibility of witnessing these talks -- to these talks so that the U.S. administration won't be telling stories abroad saying that they have made every effort to talk with Nicaragua but that it is being inconsistent. However, the United States has so far rejected this proposal. What they have been doing is giving the impression that they are trying to negotiate and hold talks with Nicaragua, but that Nicaragua is being stubborn. What they are doing in reality is promoting a political and military aggression.

[Answer] Relations with the Socialist International [SI] continue. These relations are logically going through different stages, which are related to the great campaign of defamation and slander against the Nicaraguan revolution. These stages are also connected to the efforts that the U.S. administration has been making to get others to withdraw their support from the Nicaraguan revolution. Regarding this, there are sectors within the SI that have a greater degree of understanding for the Nicaraguan revolution. However, there are other sectors that are seriously concerned about the Nicaraguan revolution, but we think that the truth will shine as time goes by. We have made efforts to open our doors to all those sectors of the SI that believe that the Nicaraguan situation is very bad. The Revolutionary Government invites them to visit our country, and after experiencing our reality they can have a clearer view of the Nicaraguan revolution.

[Question] I represent the CDS. Commander, you mentioned an indirect U.S. aggression. Could you give us specific examples of this? Another question: If negotiations with the United States are established, what do you expect from them?

[Answer] We have already said that we are facing an escalation of aggressions promoted by the U.S. administration. [words indistinct] Honduran Army sectors to get involve in military actions in El Salvador and for Honduras to allow the use of its territory for operations against the Nicaraguan revolution. How can one doubt that these sectors are responding to the present U.S. policy, when the U.S. administration has taken it upon itself ever since the times of the electoral campaign to propose a confrontation with the Nicaraguan revolution and its destruction. To this one must add the loan that the United States approved for the construction of two military airports in Honduras; a naval base in Amapala on the Gulf of Fonseca, also in Honduras; the increasing weapons support that the U.S. administration is giving to the Honduran Government; and the reports the U.S. media published a few months ago on statements by CIA officials during U.S. Senate hearings. During these hearings, these CIA officials admitted that the State Department had approved a plan to destabilize the Nicaraguan revolution. They said that $15 million had originally been approved for this plan, which included economic destabilization, support for armed bands, assassinations of leaders of the revolution, terrorist acts, and so on.

What do we expect from talks with the United States? Well, in the first place we must begin to talk. This is the first thing. Then the United States must stop waging war against Nicaragua. By ceasing to wage war against Nicaragua, the United States would be laying the groundwork for reaching stability. However, up to now the United States has tried to justify the existence of training camps for Somozist guardsmen in Florida. What do they say? They claim that it is legal and that the U.S. Constitution permits this as long as they remain on private property. But we can't imagine the U.S. administration permitting the training of Guatemalan or Salvadoran guerrillas on private property in the United States. I can just imagine the U.S. administration's reaction to the world if it found out that private property in Nicaragua -- where 70 percent of the land is in the hands of small, medium and large producers -- was being used by Puerto Rican patriots to struggle for Puerto Rican independence. What would happen if a farm owner decided to lend his property to these patriots? What would be the U.S. administration's reaction?

The important thing is that a power like the United States should not wage war against Nicaragua on all fronts -- politically, militarily and economically. Regarding the economic front, it must be stressed that the U.S. administration has exerted pressure on U.S. and international banks so that they won't lend money to Nicaragua.

Nicaragua, despite the tremendous difficulties and great sacrifices of the Nicaraguan people, is the only Central American country that is paying the interest on its foreign debt. We recently had to make a payment on this debt of approximately $32 million, which under our conditions represents an enormous effort.

[Question] Mr [name indistinct] from the newspaper L'HUMANITE. Commander, you have twice spoken about the French role, saying that it would be desirable to revitalize the French-Mexican declaration. After your meeting with French President Francois Mitterrand, I would like to know whether the French president has spoken to you about new French initiatives in the near future.

[Answer] We have found great receptivity in the French president to make all efforts necessary to help find a solution for the situation in the region and to immediately do everything within his power to help in this respect, to achieve the stability of the Central American region.

[Answer] We believe that first of all the Nicaraguan position on this problem is a homogeneous position, and the declaration is made at a time when the United States is about ratify a treaty by which it grants Colombia rights over Nicaraguan territories. It is based on the treaties signed at a time when there was U.S. intervention in Nicaragua. We believe that this is a problem which, in any case, should be discussed with maturity and responsibility. Logically, this must be done through diplomatic channels, through talks between the two countries.

[Question] Does the state of urgency [as heard] that exists in Nicaragua at the present time not represent the suspension of civic freedom? This is how the United States sees it, and perhaps this is an obstacle to good relations between Nicaragua and the United States?

[Answer] I would say that, well, we are the victims of the United States. However, the United States has forced us to declare a state of emergency. It is one of the principal causes, one of the principal destabilizers of the revolutionary project that guarantees freedom, that guarantees justice, that strengthens political pluralism, a mixed economy and the freedom of the press.

[Answer] (?What is it?)

[Question] Commander, you have said that Nicaragua is prepared to support the struggle everywhere in the world. Does this means that Nicaragua supports the Salvadoran guerrillas, especially after what happened out of Honduran territory?

[Answer] Nicaragua has political and moral solidarity with all the just causes of the world. Nicaragua maintains the right to express its active solidarity whenever it is attacked, whenever it is the victim of invasions, like the ones which are already occurring, which are causing reactions in this respect in Nicaragua. Visit 'Highly Positive'

PA131952 Paris AFP in Spanish 1717 GMT 13 Jul 82

[Excerpts] Paris, 13 Jul (AFP) — Commander Daniel Ortega has described the first 2 days of his visit to France as "highly positive." The coordinator of the Nicaraguan Government Junta said that both the symbolic gestures and the concrete actions taken "were worthy of the gravity of the situation in Central America."

In an exclusive interview with AFP, Ortega said that the "gravity of the situation in Central America requires efforts to negotiate and talk, for otherwise no one will be able to think of economic achievements"; in this regard, he found "receptivity" in France, where he will return tomorrow — after a quick visit to Madrid — to attend the 14 July festivities.

"Nicaragua expressed its political needs and France replied that it will do everything within its power. At the same time, Nicaragua will make every effort to involve the largest possible number of European and Latin American countries in the effort to prevent war in Central America," Ortega said.

Questioned about whether Nicaragua feels isolated, given the loss of the support that it had in Central And Latin America 3 years ago, Ortega conceded that the United States has partly achieved its objective of isolating the Nicaraguan revolution adding that "current" conditions are not good."

"The crisis in the Malvinas Islands demonstrated the need for greater continental unity," Ortega said, making a distinction between relations with Latin America — which he described as "good," offering Venezuela as an example — and relations with Central America, which he described as difficult because of U.S. influence.

In Ortega's opinion, the deterioration in the Central American situation demands "a revitalization of the French-Mexican initiative" to find a negotiated political solution in El Salvador and to achieve peace in the region as a whole.

Commander Ortega insisted throughout that Nicaragua has not closed the door to dialogue with the United States, though it believes that the Reagan administration is confusing dialogue with conditions.

Cheysson Cites 1981 Arms Deal

PA132245 Managua Radio Mundial in Spanish 1730 GMT 13 Jul 82

[Text] Our correspondent in Paris [name indistinct] covering the official visit of Commander Daniel Ortega Saavedra, coordinator of the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction, reports:

President Francois Mitterrand and Commander Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction, who is on an official visit to Paris, talked for approximately 3 hours.

Meanwhile, French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson indicated that Ortega's visit to France confirms the French Government's support for the independent policy of Third World countries. Regarding the arms sold to Nicaragua last December, Cheysson said that the sale had been approved, and that two helicopters had already been delivered.

President Mitterrand referred to the genuine aspects of the Sandinist revolution and also stressed the fact that Nicaragua is not affiliated with any bloc.

France To Grant New Aid

[Text] Paris, 12 Jul (AFP) -- The French Government will agree to $14 million in new financial assistance for Nicaragua, it was learned today from an official French source.

This assistance, which will soon be the object of a financial agreement, was decided during a meeting today between French Premier Pierre Mauroy and Commander Daniel Ortega, leader of the Nicaraguan junta. Ortega, who is on an official 2-day visit to Paris, was received earlier by French President Francois Mitterrand.

The French assistance will serve to finance several industrial projects and assist Nicaragua's balance of payments. The representatives of the two countries also signed a basic agreement on economic, scientific, cultural and technical cooperation.

Commander Ortega was the guest tonight of French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson, who hailed the work undertaken by the Sandinist revolution.

"Nicaragua," he said, "is identified with the image of liberation, progress and liberty." Cheysson also referred to the necessity of respecting individual rights and encouraged Nicaragua to enter the path of cooperation with its neighbors, ridding itself of all foreign pressures.

"Central America," he noted, "must be able to express itself as a region. We would like all countries of Central America to come together and tell Europe to assume its responsibilities before their 20 million inhabitants."

For his part, Commander Ortega described France's policy in Central America as "serious, responsible and exemplary." Without explicitly mentioning the United States, Ortega declared that Central America and Nicaragua must face "the presumptuous and adventurous policy" of some powers which thus create a large focus of tension in the area.

"Nicaragua," he added, "will continue to struggle to maintain its revolutionary achievements and to find grounds for understanding in the region."

MORE ON FRENCH RESPONSE TO ISRAELI PROTEST

[Excerpts] The Council of Ministers met at the Elysee today -- a day early because tomorrow is Bastille Day. During the Council of Ministers' session Francois Mitterrand returned to the subject of Israel's condemnation of his Budapest statement. In his statement President Mitterrand mentioned the name of Oradour-sur-Glane in connection with the siege of Beirut. Jacques Attali, Mitterrand's special counsellor, said that what happened was a false interpretation of the president's remarks which caused distress by isolating part of a phrase from its context.

The president of the republic reminded the cabinet that he has never accused Israel of having committed acts in Lebanon which could be compared to that of Oradour-sur-Glane. He only underlined that any war which meets with national resistance can put the belligerents in a position of committing violence against civilian populations, as has been the case recently in Afghanistan, El Salvador and elsewhere.

SPADOLINI REPLIES TO BREZHNEV MESSAGE ON LEBANON

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 13 -- Italian President Giovanni Spadolini told Kremlin leaders that he shared their concern for the suffering of the Lebanese people in the present conflict, and renewed the Italian Government's condemnation of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in a message sent to Soviet Union Communist Party Secretary Leonid Brezhnev.

The note, transmitted to Brezhnev today through the Italian embassy in Moscow, came in response to a letter sent to Rome by the Soviet Union leader last week concerning the latest developments in the war-torn Mid-East nation.

Spadolini made note of the Italian Government aid contributions to Lebanon, and said that his government's condemnation of the act of force committed by Israel referred to the consequences which the Israeli invasion could have on the difficult peace process in the Mid-East. He also urged that the cease-fire be maintained.

Referring to the position assumed by Italy and the other nations of the European Economic Community (EEC), Spadolini said that a definitive peace in Lebanon can only be accomplished by the immediate withdrawal of Israeli and all other foreign troops from Lebanon.

According to Spadolini, it is also necessary and urgent to arrive at a solution to the Palestinian problem.

In the context of the proposed peacekeeping force in Beirut, the Rome Government leader maintained that they must be accepted by the Lebanese and all other interested parties.

PCI'S BERLINGUER ON DEMOCRATIC ALTERNATIVE

[Ugo Baduel report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer 7 July televised press conference]

[Excerpts] Rome -- The alternative, Berlinguer said, is a political prospect that is now supported by the entire PCI, and consists essentially of the need to replace the power system centered on the DC by a different approach and therefore also a different government coalition, whose principal aim will be to break what I would call the evil interconnection that has been formed between state and parties over the years and that was initially the responsibility of the DC but later also of the other parties which have cooperated with it and that has now led to the stifling of the life of the state and of the government itself that everyone can see. This evil interconnection stems basically from the fact that government posts and also posts in all state corporations (economic bodies, radio and television, banks, and so forth) are distributed among the governing parties and their factions with no regard for any criteria of competence or professional standards. This is leading to the decline and paralysis of the Italian state. This is the line that we want to eliminate so as to establish at last a distinction between parties and state, that is, to end the occupation of the state -- and this will require a broad range of forces, naturally excluding the DC.

Asked about [PSI Secretary] Craxi's assessment of his recent speech in Turin ("propagandist trash"), Berlinguer replied that the Communists have in fact calmly raised a very topical issue, whose reasoning is as follows: It is clear from statements by the PSI and its secretary himself that relations between the PSI and the DC have reached the point of incompatibility. Craxi has said that the leeway has been consumed. This being so, we ask the PSI whether, despite this, it wishes to continue cooperating with the DC or whether it does not believe that the time has come to change policy (we have never said "either with us or with the DC"). Changing policy means working for a democratic alternative to the government system and coalitions based on the DC, which means not an alliance with the PCI but working for a different prospect from the present one. I have noted, Berlinguer added, that one curious argument used by Craxi against this proposal of ours has been that the PCI is allegedly unclear in indicating whether the alternative should be with or without the DC. It seems to me that I have specified that the alternative is without the DC. I hope that this will rule out all pretexts for the PSI still wanting a government alliance with the DC in the future as well as for the present, despite everything.

Berlinguer repeated this argument when he confirmed the PCI's opposition to early elections, which are now desired for reasons that are unclear, since any possibility of a change of line or prospect emerging from them is being ruled out. Hence stems our opposition to elections, he said, and also our commitment to setting in motion a new political process in which there could be intermediate stages, but in which a start will be made on a different kind of relationship between parties and government, between parties and state.

What do you mean by "intermediate stage?" IL GIORNO's Franco asked.

What we are saying, Belinguer replied, is let a step forward be taken, let a government be formed in which a precise indication will start to be given, starting with the actual composition of the council of ministers, so that the choice of ministers is entrusted to the prime minister and not dictated by the postures of the party secretaries, on the basis of the internal calculations of the parties themselves and of their factions: let such a government present itself to parliament and the PCI will judge it.

Some of the questions concerned Berlinguer's recent interview granted to Alberto Moravia and the differences between the "historical compromise" ("I will no longer use this term since it is fated to be interpreted wrongly and distortedly and no rectifications of any kind have ever been successful") and the democratic alternative.

Is a PCI-PSI government possible? Berlinguer was asked. Not in the sense of the old aim of forming a leftwing front, which was important and valid but which would not now be a useful formula, the PCI secretary general said. We now have in mind a broader formula comprising other democratic forces too, including democratic forces within the Catholic camp. But I am not in principle opposed to a PCI-PSI government if the conditions for it existed. I would hope for such a government, extended if possible.

Next Berlinguer returned, in reply to other questions, to the subject of the "infernal mechanism" of the relationship between parties and state as it is now -- a relationship that must be smashed, this being the prime condition, above any other, for a new prospect.

Would the communists be in favor of a different government, even if they did not participate in it? Dalmato asked. This is what I called the intermediate stage, Berlinguer replied: Let somebody -- I certainly cannot specify who -- take an initiative, in the event of a government crisis occurring now, for instance, and set in motion a change in the direction I indicated, starting -- I repeat -- with the actual composition of the government. If such a beginning were to materialize we would welcome it as something that has at last changed that which now needs to be changed before anything else and that moved in the direction of the democratic alternative. [passage omitted]

PCI-CPSU relations were also discussed ("we would welcome the fact if discussions were to take place differently from hitherto"). In connection with Lebanon, Berlinguer issued an intense and dramatic appeal for every initiative to be taken by Italy and Europe to prevent the massacre of Palestinians and Lebanese in Beirut.

EL PAIS INTERVIEWS PRIME MINISTER SPADOLINI

PM131421 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 2 Jul 82 p 4

[Juan Arias Rome interview with Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini]

[Excerpt] Question: What do you expect of this visit to Spain?

Answer: When I met with Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo in Rome in March, we decided to intensify Italian-Spanish relations, promoting new and more advanced forms of cooperation in sectors important for the two countries' economic development. My wish is that more frequent and closer consultations be initiated immediately. And I say this because I am convinced of the deep ties between our two countries, not only due to geographical affinity, but also and especially because Spanish history, culture and art -- in a word, civilization, of ancient Christian origins -- have developed in parallel to Italian civilization. And they have done so with an exchange of mutual influence, in a constant intertwining of historical experiences, in a curious "cross-fertilization of intellectual sectors," as a philosopher who studied Spain's history thoroughly -- Benedetto Croce -- would have said.

Question: You have always been a convinced pro-European: How do you view democratic Spain's role in the Mediterranean area?

Answer: As a factor for stability and peace in an area in which all the causes of tension crossing the international scene in the North-South direction intersect and overlap; an area in which interests of various kinds coexist and comprising Western-style democracies and authoritarian regimes, ancient civilizations and new peoples, advanced industrial societies and countries which only a few years ago began to advance toward a sometimes unbalanced and contradictory development. It is a hodgepodge of peoples, religions and economies sometimes so diverse that they require constant exercise of tolerance and dialogue and of firm defense of peace. For that reason Italy has received with great satisfaction Spain's joining the Atlantic alliance, as an action which strengthens Spain's deep ties of unity with the entire West.

Prime Minister Spadolini asserted in a pause that he has spoken with French President Francois Mitterrand, supporting very clearly and firmly Spain's joining EEC. And he stated that even during his very recent visit to Brussels, the results of the Italian pressure "are really encouraging."

Question: This year you have received the confidence of the most senior Spanish leaders, and I am certain that they have always spoken of the threatened Spanish democracy. What personal idea of the Spanish situation have you formed through this information?

Answer: I regard the new stage of Spain's transition toward a democratic and representative system as complete. The very events of 23 February last year, when the country immediately identified with the new institutions, confirms this. I believe that the legacy of the dictatorship has been rapidly demolished, wisely and firmly, with a sense of responsibility which has created a new balance at the service of a genuine democratic rebuilding. Spain has demonstrated with its own forces that it has all the qualifications for regaining its proper place among the democratic European and Western nations.

Question: And what about Italy, Mr prime minister? Is it true that it is beginning to be something more than a U.S. colony and that it is beginning to have a role of genuine dignity and not as a Cinderella within the community?

Answer: Look, what many people forget is that Italy is linked to the United States with a very close tie of friendship and alliance, based, more than on a defensive alliance requirement, on a foundation of joint adherence to certain values and certain principles of freedom, within a framework of loyal Euro-Atlantic partnership, which requires a strengthening of Europe's role as an active political agent. That is why in this line of a long-standing alliance we are striving to increase relations of cooperation between the EEC and the United States, but, of course, as we have vigorously emphasized in the Brussels European Council, without being prepared to accept policies which we do not share, beginning with the prospects of trade wars, which would represent a further source of danger for a coexistence already disturbed by worrying causes of conflicts and lacerations in areas not remote from us.

Question: And the eternal issue of the Communists? The late Ugo la Malfa, your glorious predecessor as Republican Party secretary, was firmly convinced that this country will not emerge from its economic emergency without the Communists' direct participation in the government, since they are the second largest electoral force in the country. Do you rule out this possibility, or do you believe that you yourself could play the leading role in this change, as some people are already rumoring?

Answer: The problem of the Communists' direct participation in the government does not arise, at least during this legislative term. As regards the future, I cannot make prophecies, but I have not failed to point out the importance of certain recent stances by the PCI vis-a-vis the Soviet Union, such as, for instance, in the case of the distressing Polish issue. Although the further steps which the PCI is able to take in the field of democratic evolution, along a path already embarked upon many years ago which it must now complete, will be decisive. If there have been no broader convergences with the PCI in the current government coalition, this has been because of the opposition which the Communists have raised to some government decisions as regards international policy. There is no prejudicial veto against the Communists; at this moment there is only a legitimate parliamentary dialectic between majority and opposition, which has not prevented very significant convergences during these 12 months of my premiership. But, of course, these have always been effected openly. We have not asked the PCI for favors, nor have we received any....

DEFENSE MINISTER ON SPAIN'S ENTRY INTO NATO

Freitas do Amaral maintained that "the entry of a new member into the alliance should strengthen its defensive power and increase its influence on the international scene." However, he recalled that "Portugal has never concealed the fact that in this respect there will be problems to be resolved, negotiations to be begun and guarantees to be secured." And he added: "It is essential that Spain's joining NATO be the opportunity for joint strengthening and not for the weakening of any of the member countries; Portugal would not accept it."

Charles Hernu will also meet Foreign Minister Futscher Pereira and Armed Forces Chief of Staff General Melo Egidio.

NICARAGUA'S DANIEL ORTEGA ARRIVES IN MADRID

PA140337 Madrid EFE in Spanish 0051 GMT 14 Jul 82

[Text] Madrid, 13 Jul (EFE) -- Commander Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the Nicaraguan Government junta, arrived in Madrid today from Paris. Tomorrow he will meet with Spanish King Juan Carlos I and with Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo.

Commander Ortega told EFE on his arrival in Madrid that during those meetings he wants "to express thanks for the Spanish solidarity with the Nicaraguan people and to make known the difficult situation Central America is experiencing and see what possibilities there are for Spain to help in the search for a political solution to that situation."

Ortega did not rule out a meeting with Spanish Socialist leader Felipe Gonzalez, "although one is not scheduled." Gonzalez is vice president of the Socialist International, to which the Sandinist front belongs.

Regarding his trip to the French capital, he indicated that "it has essentially been political and has to do with the current tension in the Central American region and the need to revitalize the initiatives on this situation in which countries like Mexico and France have taken an active part."

Regarding Nicaragua's relations with the United States, he said they "are formal." "There has been an exchange of notes," he added, "in which it does not appear that the U.S. administration is interested in beginnning a dialogue with Nicaragua to face the problems realistically."

"It is very clear," he stressed, "that efforts must be made to try to improve relations with the United States, since it is fundamental to being able to work for the stability of the region."

Ortega added that the discussion must begin "without conditions of any kind" and with "the presence of a witness country that will help the dialogue take place."

The coordinator of the Nicaraguan junta accused the United States of maintaining a "totally imposing and arrogant" stand and of setting specific conditions for beginning to talk "which eliminates all possibilities of negotiation."

He also accused the Reagan administration of pressuring the governments of various Central American countries to isolate Nicaragua and of committing more military resources in El Salvador as well as pouring large resources into Honduras to support the former Somozist guardsmen who, he said, harass the Nicaraguan Army from Honduran territory.

Ortega said that he had discussed these subjects with French President Francois Mitterrand, who was receptive to any effort that would help solve the problems of the area.

Commander Ortega will return to Paris tomorrow to attend the French national day festivities as a special guest.

This is the second trip that Ortega has made to Europe in a little over a month. He recently visited the Soviet Union, where he signed a $100-million credit for the purchase of industrial and agricultural machiners.

ENTERPRISE TO SELL SUPERPHOSPHORIC ACID TO USSR

PM131505 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 1 Jul 82 p 41

[Text] The Fosforico Espanol SA enterprise, in which Union de Explosivos Rio Tinto and Cros have equal shares, yesterday signed a contract with the Soviet foreign trade enterprise Soyuzkhimeksport to supply 1.4 million tons of superphosphoric acid over 10 years; according to sources in the Spanish enterprise.

Deliveries will be at the rate of 140,000 tons per year for 10 years from Fosforico Espanol SA's Huelva plant to the Soviet Union. The contract will mean an income of about $500 million (over 50 billion pesetas) for Spain while it is in force.

According to the same sources, the awarding of this contract to Spain was considerably influensed by the Spanish group's capacity and technological experience, the Huelva plant's strategic location and the support that province's pyrites mining provides.

The signing of this agreement entails the construction of a superphosphoric acid plant worth 1.5 billion pesetas, which will bring about in Huelva a corresponding increase in jobs at Fosforico Espanol.

Cagatay, who is in London for talks with representatives of Turkish Cypriot institutions and businessmen, issued a written press statement today. A Turkish Radio and Television correspondent reports from London that Cagatay recalled in his statement that the United Nations as well as the whole world acknowledged that the Cyprus problem could be solved through intercommunal talks. The statement added that the Turkish Cypriot Federated State would continue its work for the protection of peace and the solution of the Cypriot problem.

ATAKOL CONDEMNS ARREST OF DANISH CAPTAIN

TA131222 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 13 Jul 82

[Text] The minister of foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, has condemned the Greek Cypriot authorities for arresting the captain of a Danish vessel for calling at the port of Famagusta. Mr Atakol said that this [word indistinct] of the Greek Cypriot authorities was another bare example of the inhuman embargo they applied against the Turkish Cypriot people and a violation of human rights. He added that the Greek Cypriot administration had used the title of Government of Cyprus in a way that endangered efforts for a Cyprus settlement and that this is harmful both to the Turkish Cypriot people and the principles of freedom and free travel.

TURKISH CYPRIOTS PROTEST NONALIGNED MEETING

TA131202 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 13 Jul 8.

[Text] The acting prime minister, Mr Irsen Kucuk, has said that the decision of the nonaligned foreign ministers to hold a meeting in southern Cyprus to discuss the situation in Lebanon has shocked the Turkish Cypriot people. Mr Kucuk said that the Turkish Cypriot people respected the sacred aim of the conference, which was to discuss the expansion of Zionist imperialism and the massacres it had been carrying out, but it was clear that the wrong place was chosen for the meeting because the Greek Cypriot leadership was also representative of another imperialist [word indistinct]. Mr Kucuk said that the Greek Cypriot leadership, which is applying Greek imperialism in Cyprus in cooperation with Greece, was responsible for a genocide similar to the one carried out by Zionism.

MZALI CALLS ON KARAMANLIS, PAPANDREOU 13 JUL

[Text] Tunisian Prime Minister Mzali, who arrived in Athens yesterday for an official visit, was received this morning by President Konstandinos Karamanlis. At noon he met with Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, who is right now giving a luncheon in honor of Mr Mzali.

Welcoming Mr Mzali, Mr Papandreou said that he welcomes him with particular pleasure so that foundations may be laid for a policy of closer cooperation between the two countries. He added: It is characteristic that in major international issues the positions of the two governments coincide, and this is a good omen for further tightening and developing relations between the two countries. The prime minister also observed that relations between Greece and Tunisia have not been promoted as they should have been but that Mr Mzali's visit to our country will result in development of relations between the two countries in the political, cultural and economic fields.

The Tunisian prime minister also expressed pleasure over meeting with Mr Papandreou and said he too looks forward to rapprochement and further development of the two countries in the political, economic and cultural fields.

Mzali, Papandreou on Lebanon

NC131906 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 13 Jul 82

[Text] In response to a question by newsmen after his talks with Prime Minister Papandreou as to whether the Palestinian question had been discussed and whether an identity of views had been noted, Tunisian Prime Minister Mzali said: We discussed the Palestinian question. We noted that the Governments of Greece and Tunisia agree that the Israeli Government is implementing an aggressive and expansionist policy and for the last 6 weeks has been carrying out genocide at the expense of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples. We believe that support for the Palestinian fighters must be increased and must be total. At the same time we must continue our efforts on Arab, European and international levels so that pressure can be exerted, a way out of this unacceptable military situation found and a fundamental political solution agreed upon that will change the situation and end up with good will and peace -- a peace which can be achieved only if the peoples of the region recognize each other and agree to live within the framework of mutual respect. I would like to add that the moderate and responsible attitude of PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat is encouraging in this regard.

Speaking on the same subject, Prime Minister Papandreou stated: I really do not have much to add, because the positions as expounded by the Tunisian prime minister are our positions as well. I could probably add this: that we feel that amid this terrible crisis, now that the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples have paid such a high cost, this would probably be the time to seek a final solution, not some intermediate or temporary solution, but a final solution. Let us hope that this great sacrifice will really lead to the establishment of a Palestinian state in the area and that the Palestinian people will be able to live peacefully in their country for a long time.

While the two prime ministers were holding their talks, delegations of the two countries were examining bilateral questions at a conference at the Foreign Ministry.

At noon, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou gave a luncheon in honor of his Tunisian counterpart at the Foreign Ministry.

The aircraft will be overhauled within the framework of cooperation between the Hellenic Aerospace Industry and the Egyptian Air Force. This cooperation is at a very good level.

MESIMVRINI ON PAPANDREOU VISIT TO USSR

NC091411 Nicosia MESIMVRINI in Greek 9 Jul 82 p 1

[Text] Papandreou will not go to Moscow unless the Soviet premier and foreign minister, Tikhonov and Gromyko, first come to our country on an official visit reciprocating Karamanlis' visit to the Soviet capital in 1979.

This is the conclusion drawn from yesterday's statements by the government spokesman in answer to press reports on Soviet hints to the Greek side about a probable Papandreou visit to Moscow without the prior Soviet reciprocal visit, contrary to all diplomatic custom.

The government spokesman said "the report is not accurate" and added, "a visit by Tikhonov and Gromyko is expected, reciprocating the visit by Karamanlis and Rallis."

Answering a question on whether there was a Soviet sounding out as mentioned in the relevant press report, the government spokesman stated that "for the government there is nothing."

The government spokesman added the government will examine whether the visit to Athens by an official USSR delegation headed by one of the 12 deputy presidents of the USSR is to be considered as a reciprocal visit. Answering another question on the level of Greek-Soviet relations, the government spokesman said, "It is satisfactory."

REVOLUTIONARY CP WING, MARXIST PARTY MERGE

NC131646 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 13 Jul 82 p 14

[Text] A wing of the Revolutionary Communist Movement of Greece [EKKE] and the Marxist-Leninist Communist Party of Greece [M-L/KKE] have merged into one organization called the EKKE-M-LKKE. According to a statement released yesterday, the new organization believes that "this unity constitutes a decisive step and opens up hopeful prospects for the union of all Marxist-Leninist parties into one party."

The new organization accuses the other wing of EKKE under Mr Kh. Bistis of having reacted to the merging because of its "rightist" positions. As is well known, the wing under Bistis holds the EKKE Central Committee majority, and a statement released the day before yesterday favors the setting up of slates [presumably for the forthcoming municipal elections] promising cooperation with PASOK.

[Text] Istanbul, 13 Jul (AA) -- An Iranian parliament member told a news conference Tuesday that 5,000 Iranian volunteers were sent to Lebanon to fight the Israelis.

Ayatollah Musavi Tabrizi arrived in Istanbul to promote the "Jerusalem day" scheduled for Friday and proclaimed a day of pro-Palestinian activities by Iranian leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeyni.

The Iranian (?parliamentarian) was accompanied by Hojjat ol-Eslam (Rahmani) and Hojjat ol-Eslam (Duzhdozahi), reportedly close aides of the Iranian leader. Tabrizi said that Khomeyni had declared the last Friday of every Ramadan as the "Jerusalem day" and that other envoys have been sent to friendly countries to campaign for the Palestinian cause.

"Jerusalem is the motherland of the Palestinians, and Iran is willing to save this holy city from the Israeli occupation," he said. He said Iranian authorities have dispatched 5,000 volunteers, made up of soldiers from the revolutionary guards, to Lebanon to join the (?Palestinian) struggle against Israeli invading forces massed around Beirut. The Iranian delegation is scheduled to travel to Syria after concluding its visit in Istanbul, Iranian officials said. Tabrizi also confirmed reports which said Iran "may launch a major attack against Iraq" later this month.

CENTER PARTIES OPPOSE NUCLEAR PROLIFERATION

[TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA dispatch]

[Text] Pajala -- the centrist movement in the Nordic countries should intensify their cooperation to bring about better guarantees against the spread of nuclear arms," Swedish Industry Minister Nils G. Asling (Center Party) said on Saturday [10 July] when he opened the 1982 Green Scandinavia [Gröena Norden] meeting of the Swedish, Finnish and Norwegian center parties.

"The risk that enriched plutonium produced from peaceful nuclear power station waste could fall into the hands of nuclear arms manufacturers should be a devastating argument against enrichment for all those who take an interest in disarmament question. In this light it is remarkable that the Swedish Social Democratic Party, despite the growing numbers of reports of the risks, has moved over to an increasingly positive attitude," Asling said.

"Support should be given to enable the serious peace movement to put pressure on the nuclear powers to bring about real disarmament. Nordic cooperation is a good example of the fact that freer relations between states make a contribution to peace, security and freedom for individuals.

"The Falldin governments have made contributions to the special UN disarmament conferences, through the factual material they have presented and the arguments against rearmament in the light of the enormous danger to the environment a nuclear war would present and the consequences such a war would have for underprivileged parts of the world.

"Center parties must continue to make active contributions to disarmament work and, most of all, contribute to the removal of the nuclear threat," Asling said.

KREISKY ON MEETING WITH PERES IN COPENHAGEN

[Fritz Pesata interview with Chancellor Bruno Kreisky at Schwechat Airport on 14 July -- recorded]

[Summary] [Question] Mr Chancellor, you have just come back from Copenhagen, from an informal meeting on the occasion of Danish Prime Minister Jorgensen's birthday, and reportedly you have also met with Israeli Labor Party leader Shim'on Peres. Can you tell us something about it?

[Answer] "I did not actually meet with Shim'on Peres, or would not have met with him, had it not been for Socialist International [SI] Chairman Willy Brandt's invitation to hear together a report by [Portuguese Socialist Party leader] Mario Soares. Well, we did that, and Soares presented a most conscientious and interesting report about his trip to the Middle East. He also talked about how futile his endeavors were to meet with 'Arafat, because the Israeli military authorities did not give him permission, and no one else helped him. Eventually there was a report by Peres, which was kept within the usual framework -- the pure Israeli version, with certain variations, such as that the Labor Party is not for capturing Beirut -- but otherwise it was the usual propaganda version, in my opinion. And then there was an admittedly very serious controversy between Peres and me, during which we actually did not agree an a single point, as far as the past is concerned. For the officials, six points were drafted which naturally everyone had to support, but which do not mean very much as far as their contents are concerned."

[Question] Some time ago you very sharply criticized Peres for his attitude on the Lebanon crisis, and indicated you would advocate the ousting of his party from the SI and possibly its replacement by the MAPAM party.

[Answer] "No, I did not say that in this way -- I am against the ousting of any parties as long as they somehow or other comply with the statutes. My position is that we should give MAPAM, the other socialist party, the opportunity to play a more active role in the SI -- because I cannot regard Peres' statements as very credible."

[Question] What was the opinion of the other socialist leaders?

[Answer] "There were no others present -- except for some Danish party functionaries -- they had already left."

[Question] What was to you the most interesting aspect of the report presented by Soares?

[Answer] "The fact that his opinion, based on his visit [to the Middle East] also clearly differed from the opinion presented by Peres, especially as regards the future attitude of the Palestinians."

[Question] Yesterday PLO foreign policy spokesman Qaddumi expressed the hope that you would strongly support the Palestinians in the SI. How are you going to do that?

[Answer] "Well, yesterday I did plead rather strongly for the Palestinians, for understanding for their cause, but that was not a body where that would have been essential. But I will continue to support this cause wherever I can."

[Question] Are you personally considering making a trip to Lebanon?

[Answer] "No, that would be pointless. They would not let me in, either, just as they did not let Soares in. The Israelis would not even let me into Lebanon as long as they are in control."

PLO'S QADDUMI INTERVIEWED IN ARBEITER-ZEITUNG

AU141137 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 14 Jul 82 p 3

[Georg Hoffmann-Ostenhof exclusive interview with PLO "foreign minister" Faruq Qaddumi in Vienna on 13 July]

[Text] AZ: There has been much talk recently that the negotiations in the Lebanon conflict may soon come to a successful conclusion. How do you assess the current state of the negotiations?

Qaddumi: The negotiations between the PLO and the Lebanese Government are being continued. We say that it is necessary for the Israelis to effect a cease-fire and withdraw, and for the United Nations to dispatch a peace force to disengage the troops.

AZ: International interest is now also focused on the question of the PLO's withdrawal from Beirut. Is the PLO ready to consider such a withdrawal?

Qaddumi: The relations between the Lebanese Government and the PLO should be discussed only within the framework of talks between the two. We are in Lebanon, and we will stay there for the time being. We have been driven out from our fatherland, we are living in the Diaspora. We must return to our fatherland, Palestine.

AZ: Mr Qaddumi, lately one has had the impression that there has been a change in the PLO's position -- namely, regarding the acceptance of a coexistence of a potential Palestinian state with Israel. Is this impression correct?

Qaddumi: There has been no change in the PLO's attitude. From the very beginning we have stressed the need for peaceful coexistence with the Israelis within one state. We continue to maintain this aim, we are working to achieve it. We want a peaceful solution through peaceful coexistence with the Israelis in one state.

AZ: The PLO is encircled in west Beirut, Defense Minister Sharon and other members of the Israeli Government have repeatedly threatened an assault on Beirut....

Qaddumi: They are not merely threatening -- they are already assaulting. They have destroyed buildings in Beirut. They have destroyed the refugee camps. They have killed thousands of people, civilians. And they are continuing their massive attacks on the civilians. That action is like those of the Nazis. Sharon is like Hitler. He is doing just what Hitler did when the Nazis attacked Warsaw, when they attacked Poland. They are not threatening, they are already doing it. But our people are offering courageous resistance. And Sharon knows how many Israeli soldiers would be killed were he to invade Beirut.

AZ: Do you believe that the Israeli Army could take Beirut militarily, and that it could beat the PLO there?

Qaddumi: That would cost a high price. Can the Israelis accept that? You must put this question to Sharon. We have clearly stated: The invaders must get out. The Security Council adopted Resolution 509 which demands the unconditional and immediate withdrawal of the Israelis from Lebanon.

AZ: In Israel there is a large movement against the war. Is that a factor you are taking into consideration in your policy?

Qaddumi: I believe many Israelis have had enough of this aggressive and expansionist policy of Begin. And they have demonstrated. Every day there are at least two or three demonstrations -- demonstrations in which 20,000 to 100,000 people participate. The Israelis realize that they cannot live in peace if they launch invasions.

AZ: The United States has offered a so-called "evacuation plan" for the PLO. What do you say about this?

Qaddumi: We have turned it down. It is an irony to see that the Reagan administration, the real slaughterer of our people, which has given the Israelis the green light for the attack, is now posing as our "savior."

BANKER ON FRG-USSR GAS DEAL, FINANCING AGREEMENT

DW141029 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 13 Jul 82

[Interview with Friedrich W. Christians, board spokesman of the Deutsche Bank, by reporter Klaus Bednarz in Leningrad; date not given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] The Americans are calling for a trade boycott against the Soviet Union at a time when you are signing a DM5 billion loan for the Soviets. Don't you feel you are a kind of strikebreaker?

[Answer] It isn't 5 billion; deliveries worth 4 billion at the most are involved, if the Soviets can absorb this volume by the end of the year. Financing will involve 85 percent of this -- you figure out how much that is. So much for the amount.

What is involved is the fulfillment of a longstanding contract. We have been negotiating with the Soviets since December 1979 -- prior to Afghanistan, if you want to look at it that way. We have been negotiating for 2 and 1/2 years and we accepted a commitment 1 year ago. If banks no longer adhere to their commitments, I wonder where the system of order would be in this country. What we are doing is no more and no less than what other governments, including the American Government, have stated -- namely that agreed on commitments must be adhered to. We are of the opinion that the Soviet Union will continue to be an interesting and reliable partner for us, particularly since signals are being set for the long term and not just for the moment.

[Question] You are giving preferential treatment to the Soviet Union with loans at low interest rates which are usually reserved only for developing countries. Do you think this is right, or is the Soviet Union really still a developing country?

[Answer] The Soviet Union is an industrial country, a rich industrial country, although I grant that it is poor with regard liquid assets. In the end the Soviets will pay according to the final conditions, they will pay as much as is demanded from German borrowers, and no less.

[Question] Is there still something for the firm AEG in connection with the gas pipeline deal with the Soviet Union, or is the firm definitely bankrupt?

[Answer] I understand your direct question. We should not deal with such difficult negotiations in a short statement. Serious negotiations are still being conducted and I believe that there are still possibilities.

FRG-FRENCH TV SATELLITES TO BE CONSTRUCTED

[Text] Bonn, 13 Jul (DPA) -- The construction of the long-planned German-French television satellites has been agreed. Andreas von Buelow, German minister for research, told the press on Monday evening (12 July) that he and his French counterpart, Jean-Pierre Chevenement, had approved the relevant contract with the German-French "Eurosatellite" industrial consortium. It is to be signed this month.

The joint project provides for the construction, launching and testing, over a period of 2 years, of one German (SAT) and one French (TDF-1) satellite, which are to operate three television-radio channels each. They are to be launched in 1985. The cost will be borne by the German Research Ministry and the German Post Office. The latter will contribute DM70 million in 1984 and in 1985.

The minister was optimistic about possible export chances for the satellites. The first success was that an order is to be placed with "Eurosatellite" for the Scandinavian tele-x radio satellite trial in which Sweden, Norway and Finland cooperate.

The satellite project agreed by Bonn and Paris in 1980 is part of the new space program to be adopted by the German Federal Cabinet on Wednesday (14 July). It provides for the allocation of about DM3.5 billion from federal funds until 1985 to promote space research.

CSU STATEMENT OPPOSES VISIT BY HONECKER

[Text] Bonn, 14 Jun (DPA) -- The CSU has opposed a visit by GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker to the FRG before the end of this year. In a statement published on Wednesday by the land parliamentary group, Deputy Eduard Lintner takes the view that at present Honecker is persona non grata. The Federal Government should make it clear to East Berlin that "there could only be an enhancement of the GDR's international status by a visit to the FRG" or financial benefits if the GDR Government responds with appropriate concessions. At present, however, there is no sign of this.

PAPER VIEWS REAGAN DECISION ON LAW OF SEA

[Commentary signed HVB.: "Reagan Yields to Private Interests"]

[Text] President Reagan has foiled one of the most important projects in the postwar era by withholding the U.S. signature to the Law of the Sea Treaty which has been the subject of a struggle for 8 years. A new international maritime law for two-thirds of the earth's surface seemed inevitable since the sphere of the free high seas has been constantly restricted by extended territorial waters, economic zones and continental shelves. At the same time metals in quantities defying imagination were discovered in nodules on the sea bottom and declared to be the "inheritance of all mankind" by the United Nations.

Four U.S. presidents before Reagan had pursued the nonpartisan policy of a compromise between the industrial states and the Third World. In return for concessions of worldwide military passage and overflight rights, which are indispensable for the nuclear deterrence strategy, the United States was prepared to yield to the demands of the developing countries for participation in Western mining technology and for an element of dirigisme in the new Law of the Sea. During the negotiations allowances were made to the strategic interests of the nuclear powers (thus also the Soviet Union). In return the industrial nations conceded an economic "parallel system" under which private companies and the executive of the Third World-dominated International Sea Bottom Authority would share the mining. When Reagan was inaugurated he immediately blocked the convention.

The background of this was a conflict of interests. For strategic reasons the Pentagon recommended the Law of the Sea Treaty while the mining companies wished to reserve for themselves the right to exploit the metal deposits worth billions without any international control. Their victory has now been confirmed by Reagan's negative decision. It remains to be seen what revenge the underpriviliged coastal states will take, a revenge which may well adopt the form of military hindrances.

COMMENTATOR VIEWS GEORGE SHULTZ APPOINTMENT

[Commentary signed Schr.: "Nothing new from George Shultz"]

[Text] Even before assuming office, the new American secretary of state, Shultz, has received considerable praise. It is believed he will be better able than Haig to balance American foreign policy between Washington's hawks and doves, between the Israelis and Arabs, between America and Europe, and finally, between preparedness for understanding and a policy of strength with regard to the Soviet Union. His first senate appearance did not justify these hopes. He carefully followed the line of his President, who probably would not have appointed him if he had not considered him one of his loyal California "cronies." This does not mean, however, that he will always move in the shadow of Reagan, Weinberger and Clark once he has been confronted with the realities of world policies in the State Department.

In his initial statements, however, we look in vain for a concept of how he wants to solve the contradictions of American foreign policy. In general, he considers trade sanctions to be a "bad idea." This is understandable because they could harm American grain exports to the Soviet Union, for which the farmers are currently lobbying for an increase. Specifically, however, he follows Reagan's "leadership" without explaining why sanctions against the gas pipeline deal are supposed to be a good idea.

For his friend Helmut Schmidt, who is now on his way to see him, this is bad news. Since German bankers have just signed the financial framework for this deal, it is hard to see how Shultz will be able to eliminate the basic dissent between America and Europe. A new nuance has perhaps arisen with regard to the Middle East issue, but here, too, Shultz had not been able to find an answer to the problem of how Israel can be made to sit at the same table with the Palestinians.

[Excerpt] The Assembly of the Republic was in session tonight in order to continue the debates on the revision of the constitution. Here is a report from Melo Matos:

[Begin Matos recording] While the Council of the Revolution, theoretically wound up at 1840 yesterday, was one of the most outstanding issues of this parliamentary session, the House regarded the president of the republic's appointment of top military chiefs as the other important issue. The amendment was voted on exactly half an hour ago. NICARAGUA'S ORTEGA VIEWS CENTRAL AMERICAN ISSUES

["Exclusive" report by Madrid EFE's (Libre Verti) on the visit to Spain by Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction of Nicaragua -- recorded relay from Madrid; quotation marks contain recorded statements by Ortega]

[Text] Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the Nicaraguan Government junta, arrived in Madrid this evening following his visit to France which he described as a political visit and where he secured credit valued at 100 million francs:

"The trip to France was a political one. It dealt with the tension in the Central American region and with a revival of initiatives in this regard, which have involved the participation of Mexico and France. We believe that the situation demands involvement by other governments, for otherwise it will soon become a focus of world tension."

The Nicaraguan leader then discussed the objective of his visit to Spain:

"We have come to express our appreciation for the solidarity that Spain has given the Nicaraguan people, to report on the difficult problems being experienced by the Central American region and to seek possible support in the search for a political solution to the region's situation."

As for differences between Nicaragua and the United States, Ortega said:

"Nicaragua holds the position that it is necessary to initiate talks, without conditions of any kind, to deal with whatever points Nicaragua and the United States may wish to discuss. In view of the delay, we have told the U.S. Government that it is necessary to include in these talks representatives of a country that can act as a witness, to help produce the necessary dialogue.

"The U.S. position has been one of imposition and arrogance. They have said that we first must accept certain conditions if there are to be any talks. This has eliminated the possibility of negotiations for the time being."

Finally, Commander Ortega referred to charges by certain Central American countries that Nicaragua is threatening peace in the region with its arms race:

"This is very important, because it has to do with an increase in U.S. activities in Central America. The United States is exerting great pressure on Central American governments, taking advantage of economic weakness -- as with Costa Rica and Honduras -- and of shared aggressive policies -- as with Guatemala and El Salvador.

"A communique trying to isolate Nicaragua in the region has been issued, at a time when the United States is sending more military and technical resources to El Salvador and is training Salvadoran troops.

"The United States is building two military air bases and a naval base in Honduras. The naval base is being built in Amapala, in the Gulf of Fonseca. The United States is investing important technical and military resources in Honduras, and Nicaragua is suffering the consequences of this U.S. support for the most aggressive positions in the region. There is also the fact that we suffered attacks last week involving more than 2,000 Somozist guards, who operate in Honduran territory and who are supplied by the Honduran Army. These attacks resulted in more than 51 Nicaraguans dead and more than 20 Nicaraguans dead." [sentence as heard]

After his meeting tomorrow with King Juan Carlos I and Spanish Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo, Daniel Ortega will return to Paris to participate in the celebrations of the French national holidy, at the invitation of the president of France.

PAPAIOANNOU ON CYPRUS ISSUE, MINIMUM PROGRAM

[Text] An AKEL district gathering was held in Nicosia this evening to condemn the treasonous coup. Speaking to the gathering, AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou stated that the domestic aspect of the Cyprus issue must be solved by the Cypriots through the intercommunal talks as called for by the UN resolutions. If we refuse to talk, he said, until the Turkish occupation troops are first withdrawn, then both our friends and enemies at the United Nations will accuse us of acting wrongly.

Papaioannou then voiced support for convening an international conference within the framework of the United Nations to solve the international aspect of the Cyprus issue.

Referring to the cooperation between AKEL and the Democratic Party, Papaioannou stated that the two parties are only bound by what the minimum program provides and that each party maintains its total independence and autonomy.

Papaioannou said that the relations between Cyprus and Greece must be placed on the correct foundation, which is the strengthening of the totality of the Cyprus state, mutual respect and sincerity. In conclusion, he said the presidential election will be the most important since the proclamation of Cyprus as an independent state, adding that the AKEL-Democratic Party candidate, Kiprianou, will be proclaimed president after the first round.

INFORMAL MORATORIUM ACCORD WITH TURKEY POSSIBLE

[Text] Yesterday after the deputy foreign minister and Turkish Ambassador Alacam met, and it is now clear that the "moratorium" issue is entering the final phase. The Athens government spokesman yesterday announced that Kapsis and Alacam would meet soon, while in Ankara, Foreign Ministry Spokesman Akiman, according to the Turkish News Agency, said that discussion of the "moratorium issue has started in Greece and we have nothing to say in that regard." Mr Akiman added: "The talks are aimed at improving bilateral relations."

It is, however, very probable that the talks on the "moratorium" will, within the next 15 days, arrive at a certain concrete outcome. It will be announced in both Athens and Ankara that from now on both countries will refrain from any provocative actions and statements against each other. (This, however, as it has been stressed repeatedly, does not mean that both aides will abandon their already known positions and views). Finally, it is now ruled out that in the next two meetings between Kapsis and Alacam an agreement will be concluded, which, according to indications, will not be in writing but informal. Both sides will simply limit themselves to issuing a joint statement in Athens and Ankara.

If, ultimately, the relevant consultations arrive at this result, and of course if the terms contained in the "moratorium" are kept for the next few months, then prerequisites will begin to be created for Greek-Turkish talks at the foreign ministers level. The first meeting between Foreign Ministers Kharalambopoulos and Turkmen will probably be held in New York in September within the framework of the UN General Assembly, while the second time the two minister will "have the chance to meet" will be at the NATO foreign ministers conference in Ottowa in October.

So far, however, and despite the fact that all the initial indications are encouraging, the government is maintaining a cautious stance and is being particularly frugal in providing information, because until an agreement on the "moratorium" is officially announced some new Turkish backtracking cannot be totally ruled out.

SWEDEN

U.S. REJECTION OF LOS PACT 'MOST REGRETTABLE'

PM130937 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 11 Jul 82 p 2

[Editorial: "The United States and the Law of the Sea"]

[Text] President Reagan has decided not to sign the international Law of the Sea convention, which has been the subject of negotiations since 1974.

The U.S. objections to the text of the treaty are well known and the United States also voted against the treaty when it was approved at the United Nations by 130 nations at the end of April. Hopes that there would be a change in the U.S. attitude have not been great, but nevertheless the President's decision is most regrettable and is yet another setback for international cooperation between advanced industrial nations and the developing countries.

The fact that the Americans refuse to cooperate does not prevent the convention from taking effect -- this will happen when it has been approved by 60 signatories -- but it will not be what was intended if international cooperation to exploit the oceans' resources is to take place without U.S. technology and U.S. capital.

While the Reagan administration finds much that it is positive in the Law of the Sea convention, its reaction is all the more negative to the sections regulating mining activities on the ocean floor.

The United States is one of the few nations which today has the resources to carry on such technologically complicated and capital-intensive activities, and it is understandable if Washington does not find the text of the treaty perfect, but the chances of achieving perfection in international negotiations are extremely small. Those who have carried the day are the large U.S. mining companies which have successfully applied pressure in Washington. But an international Law of the Sea convention is a necessity. And it will probably also become apparent that it is in the U.S. interest to have a treaty, and the hope now is that a U.S. president, even if his name is not Reagan, will realize this.

27TH ROUND OF MBFR TALKS ENDS IN VIENNA

[Text] Without any indication of an early breakthrough for an agreement the delegations from East and West yesterday wound up the 27th round of the negotiations on a troop reduction in Central Europe, which have been going on in Vienna since October 1973, and adjourned the conference until 23 September. Although the new treaty draft presented by the West last week has brought a reconciliation of positions in some partial sectors, substantial differences continue to exist between NATO and the Warsaw Pact regarding some basis issues.

At the concluding session of the 27th round, the 313th plenary session of the Vienna conference, the chief delegates of the United States and the USSR, Richard Starr and Valerian Mikhaylov, took stock of the current state of the negotiations. They reaffirmed the continuing good will of the superpowers and their allies to achieve a balanced reduction of forces in Central Europe, but each charged the other side with showing too little readiness for concessions.

As Netherlands Chief Delegate Willem de Vos van Steenwijk declared at a press conference, NATO has gone a very long way to meet the East with its draft agreement of 8 July, especially regarding the question of contractual commitments for the individual reduction phases. According to the new Western four-phase plan, the commitment of all participants to make an adequate contribution to the reduction should be laid down in an agreement. However, the West still reserves for itself the right to fix the individual reduction quotas within the alliance.

In his speech at the plenary meeting Soviet Chief Delegate Valerian Mihaylov sharply criticized the new Western initiative, expressing the view that the NATO plan gives "no answer at all" to various important questions of the conference. The West continues to dodge the Eastern proposal to immediately freeze the troops of both sides at their present level. It refuses to reduce arms, and also seeks to circumvent a numerical limitation of the air forces. Moreover, NATO continues to stick to its so-called asymmetry concept according to which the East is to disarm more than the West, Mikhaylov said.

TRAINING PROGRAMS FOR FOREIGN TROOPS OUTLINED

AU151249 Vienna KURIER in German 15 Jul 82 p 5

[Erich Grolig report]

[Summary] Contrary to Israeli assertion, PLO fighters never received any training in our Austrian Army. However, the Austrian Army did provide such training for members of foreign armies from East and West. Romanians, Hungarians, Swiss and Swedes as well as Americans and Soviets have been guests of the Austrian Army.

Even Austrian Army insiders who would like to find some fault with Chancellor Kreisky and his defense minister, Otto Roesch, regard the Israeli assertion that the Austrian Army provided air defense training for PLO members as downright absurd, especially in view of the very poor quality of domestic skills and equipment in this field as a result of the state treaty ban on all missiles.

The same sources, however, openly admit that the Austrian Army does render assistance to foreign armies.

In addition to a far-reaching exchange of experience and personnel with the Swiss Army, the Austrian Army provides special military training courses for flying helicopters in high mountain regions, and for mountain cimbing and alpine skiing. Such helicopter training has already been provided for Swedes, Swiss, Americans and Romanians, and climbing and skiing training for the British, Americans and Spaniards. There is a very lively exchange of training courses with the Hungarian and the Soviet Armies but, it is emphasized, exclusively within the framework of military sports programs. An extension of this cooperation to sectors other than military sports, which has been sought by the Austrian side, has thus far always been rejected.

According to the same source, the Austrian Army regrets the fact that while Swedes, Frenchmen, Italians, Americans and Sudanese regularly participate in Austrian general staff courses within the framework of exchange programs, officers from the East bloc never participate. The only exception was an exchange program providing for 10-14 day mutual visits by military academy graduates, because these visits merely served to establish personal contacts with members of foreign armies. And that was indeed all that was offered to Austrian Army officers who were allowed to visit military academies in Moscow, Budapest or Bucharest.

Roesch: No PLO Training

[Text] Vienna (APA) -- In a letter to the Israeli ambassador in Vienna, Defense Minister Otto Roesch has firmly denied the assertion that PLO members had received training in the Austrian Army. He stressed that this held true for all sectors of the Austrian Army and not just air defense.

PLANS FOR SCHMIDT'S VISIT TO U.S. OUTLINED

[Text] Bonn, 14 July (DPA) -- The European-Soviet natural gas deal will be discussed during Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's trip to the United States. This was confirmed by Government spokesman Klaus Boelling in Bonn (?today). Schmidt will leave on 20 July for a 10-day visit to the United States and Canada. He told the cabinet today what he plans to discuss. In San Francisco the chancellor will be the personal guest of the new Secretary of State Shultz.

While Schmidt is on the West Coast, Minister for Economic Affairs Otto Graf Lambsdorff will be in Washington to find out how to remove German-American irritations which occurred after the tightening up of the embargo by the U.S. President. Preliminary talks on planning the contacts have been conducted by U.S. Ambassador in Bonn Arthur Burns, who is flying to Washington almost at the same time as Lambsdorff.

The economic affairs minister will also meet with President Reagan's most important adviser, William Clark, with Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldridge, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System Paul Volcker and Secretary of the Treasury Donald Regan, among others.

DIE WELT REPORTS SS-21 MISSILE DEPLOYMENT IN GDR

[J.M. Svoboda report]

[Text] Kiel -- The "Group of Soviet Armed Forces in Germany" has begun to deploy new tactical short-range SS-21 missiles in the "GDR." Initial confirmation that the SS-21 missiles are being introduced in the "GDR" has come from the Jena area in Gera Bezirk, from the Ohrdruf area in Erfurt Bezirk and the Stendahl area in Magedburg Bezirk.

The SS-21 will replace the Frog-7 missiles currently deployed in the "GDR." The latter have a range of up to 70 km with conventional or nuclear warheads.

The SS-21, however, has a range of 100-km and is more accurate. The SS-21 has a standardized warhead which can carry conventional, nuclear or chemical charges. In addition the SS-21 has a modernized internal guidance system. It is transported on a six-wheeled, lightly armored amphibious vehicle.

A total of 124 mobile SS-21 launching platforms will be deployed in the "GDR"; more of these missiles can be fired in sequence than is the case with Frog-7 missiles. Despite its size the SS-21 can be quickly transported together with the accompanying vehicles (electronic guidance vehicles and extra missiles) by cargo aircraft from distant parts of the Soviet Union to the Central European front.

MITTERRAND RECEIVES ARAB LEAGUE REPRESENTATIVES

[Text] Paris, July 15 (AFP) -- President Francois Mitterrand discussed the Lebanese crisis today at a meeting here that marked his first official encounter with any leader of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO).

Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO Political Section, was one of a three-man Arab League delegation that had an hour-long talk with Mr Mitterrand. The other delegates were Algerian Foreign Minister Ahmed Taleb Ibrahimi and the United Arab Emirates minister of state for foreign affairs Rashid 'Abdallah.

The delegation's mission is to lobby the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council -- France, Britain, China, the Soviet Union and the United States -- for action over Lebanon.

Presidential Spokesman Michel Vauzelle told reporters after the meeting that it should not be regarded as a "special gesture" by France with respect to the PLO. Nor did it imply any change in French policy over the Middle East. [passage indistinct] crisis could be solved only through recognition of the Palestinians' national rights and PLO participation in peace efforts.

He called for immediate withdrawal of the "occupation forces" from Lebanon, a withdrawal, he said, that "can only be the first stage in the perspective of a just and lasting solution." "If the Palestinians had land and a [words indistinct] he added, "they would not have gone into Lebanon."

Mr Qaddumi confined himself to saying that "the dialogue is continuing" with France and [words indistinct] has assent with what Mr Ibrahimi had just said.

CHEYSSON TOASTS VISITING NICARAGUAN LEADER 12 JUL

[Toast by Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson on the occasion of the official visit to France by Daniel Ortega Saavedra, commander of the revolution and coordinator of the Junta of the Government of National Reconstruction of Nicaragua, on 12 July]

[Text] I would like to express to you the honor of the French Government in receiving you and your companions. I insist, if you permit me, on using your title of commander of the revolution. For many people in this part of the world your revolution, the Sandinist revolution, has been great news, a revelation. It must be admitted that we did not know, we did not understand all that your people had suffered during the last century. We could not imagine the degree of oppression by one family over an entire nation and the sufferings of the people.

Therefore, before anything, Mr Commander, would like to express the respect that we have for those who have so struggled, those who have liberated your people, and those who have given new hope in this revolution.

I would like to tell you that, for many of us, Nicaragua is now synonymous with a certain image of liberation, freedom and progress. But that is only the brilliant, charming side: We also expect a lot from your people, your government and your revolution. We expect an assertion of the freedom of man, his capacity for self-expression. We expect you to set an example for the countries of the isthmus, for Central American countries which have suffered too, and continue to suffer and which should be able to liberate themselves.

This Central America which we Frenchmen know very little of seems to us to have the right to express itself as a region, as a part of the world where the peoples, despite their differences, despite their past conflicts, would find the means to work together and free themselves from all foreign influence.

I have said it several times to our companion, my friend Miguel d'Escoto [Nicaraguan foreign minister]: We would like to see the countries of Central America come together one day and tell Europe to take up its responsibilities toward some 20 million inhabitants there.

I know that you think this view of things is too idealistic, too far from the real problems which, unfortunately, often divide neighbors and thus enable some big powers to move in. But allow me to say, Commander, that viewed from such a far place -- from France -- the Sandinist revolution remains an example, a moment in the history of this part of the world, but also to us, an expression of freedom.

In this regard, you have some rights over us, and to this end, too, allow me to tell you what we expect of Nicaragua and its neighboring countries: a demonstration of independence and the capacity of expression.

CHEYSSON ON FRENCH REACTION TO IRAN-IRAQ WAR

["Comments" by Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson on the Iran-Iraq conflict after discussions with Iraqi Foreign Minister Sa'dun Hammadi in Paris on 14 July]

[Text] ...Let us wait first to know the exact news. We know that there has been an attack. Is it a limited military operation or is it a deliberate Iranian desire to penetrate the Arab world and introduce its revolution there? You would understand that any judgment on such an issue is of great importance. For the moment we know that there is a military operation which is facing strong resistance -- my visitors have confirmed it to me. Let us wait for what follows.

What we did before, and what we will continue to do -- and this does not depend on developments in the military field -- is to say that Iraq is an old country, an old Arab nation, representing an authentic cultural entity which forms part of the stability of that region. Therefore, a threat to this culture, this entity and this sense of nationhood would certainly be a threat to the stability of the region, and its repercussions would be felt farther, especially in countries which have suddenly become very rich and in countries whose cultural structures are relatively new. This is what has been worrying us for weeks and months. There has been a continuity in French policy toward Iraq which is very remarkable because the policy of which I was talking had been outlined long before the present government. And this is one of the points where the continuity between the former majority and the present majority is perfect.

That is all I have to tell you now, but for the moment what have we done? We have shown our support to Iraq as an Arab nation which has a right to its identity. We have supported Iraq at the United Nations, and the fact that a debate on this issue took place at the Security Council in the last few days, ending the day before yesterday with an excellent resolution clearly outlining the issues of the problem, is mainly due to France, which is quite normal. We will continue to do so. As for the present events, let us wait to be able to measure their scope before we talk about it again.

NEARLY 370 VIETNAMESE BOAT PEOPLE RESCUED

[By Michelle Majorelle]

[Excerpt] Paris, July 15 (AFP) -- Cooperation between a French humanitarian organisation and the French Navy saved nearly 370 Vietnamese "boat people" in the Gulf of Siam during a two-week operation that ended on July 1, it was announced here today.

Involved in the rescue were the cargo ship Le Goelo, chartered by the Paris-based "Medecins du Monde" (Doctors of the World), and the French Navy corvette Balny, which doubled as a weapon against the Thai pirates who prey on the "boat people."

Despite storms and rain, Le Goelo picked up 212 Vietnamese and the Balny 150. The refugees were mainly from Ho Chi Minh City (Saigon) and Long (?Xuyen).

It was the second operation of its kind. In the earlier operation, carried out between May 16 and June 7, a total of 181 Vietnamese were rescued.

FOUR BOMBS EXPLODE ON CORSICA NIGHT OF 15 JUL

NC160837 Paris AFP in English 0821 GMT 16 July 82

[Text] (?Bastia), Corsica, July 15 (AFP) -- Four bombs exploded on this French Mediterranean island during the night, arousing speculation they could be part of an autonomist campaign against tourism.

Two went off at a hotel and a causing in northwest Corsica, and other explosive devices blew up at restaurants in and around the capital Ajaccio, causing heavy damage but no casualties.

The German-owned hotel is at Ile Rousse on the west coast, and the newly built casino at nearby Calvi. Yesterday a charge of plastic explosive badly damaged an empty Swedish tourist coach near Ajaccio.

No one immediately claimed responsibility for the explosions. In recent years the pro-independence Corsican National Liberation Front has been responsible for several bombings.

LE MONDE PONDERS VALUE OF FRENCH-SOVIET SUMMIT

PM151507 Paris LE MONDE in French 11-12 Jul 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Mr Mitterrand and the 'Symbolic' Nature of East-West Summits"]

[Text] Mr Mitterrand's visit to Hungary will not only have made it possible to "revive," to use the president's own word, relations with the Eastern bloc country currently best disposed toward an open-door policy but also the one where France's cultural influence leaves the most to be desired. It will at the same time have made it possible to profitably define the outlines of the "French-style Ostpolitik" that Messrs Mitterrand and Cheysson have gradually been setting out over the past year, though not always successfully, in the face of the opposition's criticisms: Should the French head of state meet with Mr Brezhnev in person or not, and if so, why?

The explanation of this point provided in Budapest is interesting. Mr Mitterrand is stating the obvious when he says that with or without the summit the French-Soviet dialogue "exists." In our day there are a thousand ways of conveying one's intentions and deliberations, and among state leaderships everyone is in contact with everyone else. Personal meetings serve other purposes, which very often depend on images and domestic politics and often conflict with the former: The disappointments that followed the Versailles summit have recently reminded us that summits, especially spectacular ones, rather exacerbate misunderstandings.

The "symbolic" factor of summits applies all the more to the USSR since Mr Brezhnev; in his old age; is more a symbol of the Soviet Politburo's and state's grandeur than a personal decisionmaker. Furthermore, and above all, the Kremlin leaders have never made any mystery of the prestige that they draw, in terms of legitimacy and 'respectability," from such meetings. It mattered little to Mr Brezhnev, when he received Mr Giscard d'Estaing in Warsaw a few months after sending his troops to Afghanistan, that he was allowing himself to be lectured by the French head of state: the essential point was that the meeting took place and East-West relations seemed to be resuming their normal course.

Furthermore, and contrary to what the criticisms of Messrs Giscard d'Estaing, Couve de Murville and -- to a lesser extent -- Chirac suggest, to meet with Brezhnev is not necessarily a sign of "greatness," and the setting of a pilgrimage to Moscow at the head of one's priorities is not a sign of success, either. There is a precedent -- that of Mr Nixon, who, before visiting the USSR in spring 1972, visited Romania, Yugoslavia and China, three Eastern countries with difficulties with the Kremlin: His meeting with Mr Brezhnev was nevertheless fruitful, because it saw the signing of the first SALT agreement and the start of a major period of Soviet-U.S. detente.

It will be noted on passing that the president of the republic no longer makes his agreement to a French-Soviet summit dependent on a specific change in Afghanistan or in Poland (as suggested by some of Mr Cheysson's remarks). Though he refuses to create a deadlock over these issues, he reserves the right to decide when the interests of peace will justify a "direct exchange of views." Be that as it may, he will be appreciated all the more as an interlocutor by the Kremlin if he manages to keep it waiting for him.

SPADOLINI DELIVERS REPORT ON SPYING, TERRORISM

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 15 -- Subversive activity by both left and right-wing organizations and the threats posed by industrial, economic, political and military spying on Italian territory were the subjects of a report read here to parliament by Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini.

The report presented yesterday, figured as one of a series of by-yearly presentations on Italy's secret service activities and covered the period November 22, 1981 to May 22, 1982.

"Terrorism in Italy is both politically and socially isolated," Spadolini told the parliamentary gathering, "but that does not mean that its days are numbered".

Emphasizing the "high grade of efficiency" demonstrated by Italy's secret service and law enforcement agencies, which last January liberated American NATO General James Lee Dozier from his Red Brigades kidnappers in Italy's north-east city of Padova, the premier maintained that the "terrorist emergency" had been confronted.

He also said that the confrontation had taken place within the legal confines of the constitution and "without arbitrary procedures which would have been counter-productive".

Right-wing or neo-fascist terrorism was described by Spadolini as a phenomenon of "certain surroundings".

The phenomenon is "wrenched from the social fabric" Spadolini said, "inspired by a primitive ideology and without any internal dialectic".

Spadolini also claimed that few right-wing terrorists were still at large.

The premier's report then expended to the intense and threatening spy activity aimed at military, economic and political objectives, and called its actions directed against the structure of the Atlantic alliance "insidious".

It also underscored the existence of an intense industrial activity to acquire information and facts of a technological and industrial character.

Reiterating his government's commitment to provide the secret services with all the instruments necessary for their activity, Spadolini concluded his report by maintaining that those activities must be covered by absolute secrecy "even if this appears at first sight to limit parliamentary watch-dog activity".

PSI LEADER URGES GREATER NATIONAL ROLE IN LEBANON

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, 15 Jul -- Italy's Socialist Party chairman urged a fuller participation by Italy to contribute to a peaceful resolution of the present Lebanese crisis in a speech before the party's leadership committee here today.

Bettino Craxi, who heads the party which together with the relative Christian Democrats, are the pillars of the present government coalition expressed a "very great concern" for the development in Lebanon, occupied by an Israeli invasion force since June 6 and in the Mid-East region as a whole.

"Italy must accentuate its political and diplomatic pressure", Craxi said "and show itself willing to contribute to the success of the mediation now under way".

He added that "all possible efforts need to be explored to stop the bloody conflict from reaching its ultimate tragic end.

"The situation in Beirut" he added, "must be cleared up to impede a final imminent battle".

The socialist leader also underlined the extreme danger of the war between Iran and Iraq.

"The idea that seems to be emerging from a kind of bipartisan Islamic area that the war should point toward Jerusalem once it passes through Baghdad is an idea dangerous enough to alarm all those who take international peace to hear," Craxi said.

MINISTER COMMENTS ON IMPROVED TRADE DEFICIT

[Excerpt] "The trade deficit for May of 1,911 billion lire confirms the figures for the first quarter of the year: There is an overall negative balance of 8.8 trillion lire over 5 months, which is considerably less than in the same period last year." This was announced by Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria, commenting on the balance of trade figures released by the Central Statistics Institute.

"The decrease in the negative balance," Capria added, "is the result of an exceptional increase in exports (over 35 percent) whose strong points are in the so-called 'made in Italy' sectors: textiles -- clothing in fact still makes a valuable contribution with a figure of over 4.7 trillion lire in the black for the 5 months -- but also the engineering sector, in which innovative and technologically advanced products play their part, and which is achieving a similar good result."

The minister warned, however, that the improvement hitherto achieved will probably be unable to continue for long, even in the months ahead. "We are drawing a comparison," he said, "with the worst period of 1981, and only if our exports show a real increase on the standard already achieved over the past 6 months will there be further improvements."

RED BRIGADES GROUP CLAIMS NAPLES SLAYING

[Text] (ANSA) Naples, July 16 -- The assassination of the head of the Naples "Squadra Mobile" police force here yesterday was claimed by the "Guerilla Party" of the Red Brigades in a telephone call last night to Naples daily "IL MATTINO".

According to investigators, the call has not excluded the possibility that the killing instead came in response to recent arrest by the Naples police force of some major figures in the local organized crime underworld. 57 year-old Antonio Ammaturo was gunned down together with his driver, policeman Pasquale Paola Thursday afternoon in a central zone of the city. The policemen were attacked by two assailants armed with machineguns and pistols, who then fled in an automobile later found abandoned in another part of the city.

The car in which the assailants fled was followed from some distance by plain-clothes police agents through the small winding streets of the Forcella district, who then lost them in the city traffic. The policemen managed to get a few shots off however and blood marks found on the seat of the car abandoned by the assailants may mean that at least one of them was wounded.

In a telephone call at eight p.m. to the Naples newspaper, a female voice without any dialect inflection referred to the victim as the "executioner Ammaturo" and closed with the slogan "organize and diffuse the liberation of the proletariat prisoner", announcing that a communique would follow.

In the last few months, Ammaturo, head of the special anti-crime division of the police force known as the "Squadra Mobile", had been dedicating particular attention to the murder of Roman criminologist Aldo Semerari, whose decapitated body was found on April first near Naples.

The police chief, who in the last few months had been credited with infiltrating the Neopolitan Camorra (or local Mafia-type operators) [words indistinct], was shot down in the "Forcella" district of Naples, the area controlled by Naples' smugglers groups.

This morning a boss of the so-called "new family" Camorra group, Luigi Giuliano, was arrested in the district. His group is reportedly fighting a bloody gang war for control of local rackets with "new [word indistinct] group controlled (?by) Jan Raffaele [words indistinct]. Two days ago police also arrested "new family" leader Pupetta Maresca, who had approximately 250,000 dollars on her person at the time of her arrest, is accused of the murder of Semerari. [as received]

Investigators are not excluding the idea that subversive elements could have worked in league with organized crime to eliminate one of the more important police figures in the city. They point out that Ammaturo's name was recently found among a list of future "victims" of the Red Brigades in a cove discovered in a town in the Campana region, where Naples is located.

DANIEL ORTEGA DISCUSSES MEETINGS WITH LEADERS

[Text] Madrid, 15 Jul (EFE) — Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the Nicaraguan Government junta, today asked Spain to mediate between his country and the United States. Ortega made the request during a meeting with Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo.

Daniel Ortega, who is in Madrid on a private visit on his way home from an official trip to France, also briefed Calvo-Sotelo on the situation existing in Nicaragua.

The coordinator of the Nicaraguan junta met yesterday with Spanish King Juan Carlos I. to whom he noted the need for countries like Spain to participate more actively in the search for a political solution for Nicaragua.

Ortega told EFE that the regional situation, Nicaragua's particular problems and that country's position with regard to the United States were discussed during the meeting with the king.

The Nicaraguan politician is also scheduled to meet today with Elena Flores, official in charge of international relations of the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party, the main opposition party.

Ortega, who made a prior visit to Madrid on Tuesday night, yesterday interrupted his private visit to the Spanish capital to attend activities organized in Paris to mark 14 July, France's national holiday. He returned to Madrid today.

Meets With Socialists

[Text] Madrid, 15 Jul (AFP) — Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party (PSOE), said in Madrid today after meeting with Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the Nicaraguan Government junta, that "a peace plan for Central America and the Caribbean is necessary."

The Spanish Socialist leader said that during the meeting they "exchanged views on the Central American situation as a whole and the dangers of the internationalization of a war."

He also said that the PSOE "supports the revolution, because any foreign (?interference) in a situation that has emerged from the people's will is (?condemnable)."

Daniel Ortega, who has been visiting Spain for the past 2 days, said that "Nicaragua wants a more active policy from the governments which are friends of Nicaragua and the United States, and I say friends of the United States because in this way they can help that country be reasonable."

Requests Further Aid

[Excerpts] Madrid, 15 Jul (EFE) — Diplomatic sources told EFE today that Daniel Ortega, coordinator of Nicaragua's Government junta, today asked Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, head of the Spanish Government, for economic aid from Spain.

Ortega, who is in Spain on a private visit on his way home from an official visit to France, met today with Calvo-Sotelo and with Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Worker's Party (PSOE), the main opposition party. Gonzalez is also vice president of Socialist International, to which the FSLN, Ortega's party, belongs.

According to the same sources, Daniel Ortega outlined for Calvo-Sotelo the economic efforts being made by Nicaragua to bring the country out of problems that have been aggravated by recent catastrophes.

The sources added that the Nicaraguan leader mentioned the aid received from Spain some months ago: $15 million. He said that although the amount has not been completely exhausted, Nicaragua would be pleased if the Spanish Government could increase it.

During the meeting, Ortega explained the two objectives of his European tour: to obtain economic aid and to inform friendly governments about the focus of tension in Central America

Meanwhile, in an interview published today by the Madrid newspaper EL PAIS, Ortega says that Central America is "on the doorsteps of a war" and that "Honduras is helping those who want to invade Nicaragua from within its territory."

After referring to the latest attacks against Nicaragua carried out by former Somozist guardsmen "from Honduran territory," attacks which according to Ortega left "51 dead and more than 20 injured," the Nicaraguan coordinator said: "They are forcing us to support the Honduran guerrillas."

Daniel Ortega, who had an audience with King Juan Carlos of Spain yesterday, will leave for Nicaragua tomorrow.

BRITISH ASPECTS OF GIBRALTAR DISPUTE VIEWED

FM150949 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 9 Jul 82 pp 3-4

[Text] British threats to the Spanish Government over the blockade on Gibraltar seem to have been confirmed, at least indirectly. According to our Bonn correspondent Valentin Popescu, German Christian Democratic Deputy Alois Mertes -- foreign policy chief of the CDU's Parliamentary Group -- has confirmed to LA VANGUARDIA that during talks with British officials in London early this week his interlocutors said that the Gibraltar problem could be exacerbated if Spain maintains its blockade. These "complications" would take the form of British opposition to the assigning of NATO military posts to Spanish officers, the prevention of entry into the Gibraltar Straits of Spanish Navy ships and last, a British veto on Spain's entry into the Common Market.

It should be added that on Mertes' return from London the British Government denied the military and NATO aspect of these measures. In this connection, our permanent correspondent in the British capital, Joseph Bosch, informs us that a British Foreign Office spokesman gave assurances in statements to LA VANGUARDIA that "Britain does not want to exert any pressure on Spain, has no new initiatives for achieving a rapid opening of the border and still wants Spain to join the EEC." However, the same official added that "the government considers it inconceivable that the border will remain closed once Spain joins the EEC."

Though this is the official British position, it is quite certain that there are more conservative deputies that want the government to take reprisals against our country. Both in the House of Commons and in the House of Lords angry and indignant voices are being raised, calling for a veto on Spain's entry into the EEC and reconsideration of Spanish-British relations as NATO partners. In this latter connection the Foreign Office official consulted by LA VANGUARDIA said that "the existence of a border makes things more complicated than they ought to be, but NATO is not the place for exerting this kind of pressure."

Last, and as a necessary counterweight to the statements from Bonn and London, LA VANGUARDIA's Madrid staff has managed to contact Inocencio Arias, director general of the Diplomatic Information Office, who told us that the Spanish Foreign Ministry has no news, either official or unofficial, of the possible British veto, either within the context of the Atlantic pact or with regard to Spain's entry into the EEC. As for the Gibraltar "blockade," Mr Arias explained to us that this term could not be used and that one should speak rather in terms of the strict application of the Treaty of Utrecht, in which no communications between Gibraltar and the rest of the peninsula were envisaged.

As for the other aspect of the matter, the director general proved evidently skeptical about the implementation of the British veto on our entry into the EEC, though he recalled that British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym did comment, in connection with the postponement of the talks on Gibraltar, that it seems inconceivable that the barrier would remain once Spain joined the Common Market. In conclusion, then, the Spanish diplomates consulted by our newspaper expressed their incredulity regarding the genuineness of the alleged British threats.

EL PAIS REJECTS U.S. MILITARY ROLE IN LEBANON

[Editorial: "Marines to Lebanon"]

[Text] Reagan's dispatch of a thousand troops on a peace mission to Lebanon is a dangerous move. The marines have the sad reputation worldwide, gained in several pages of history, that their proven bravery and high technical standard of combat have often served to repress people's causes, to subdue national majorities and to establish forms of neocolonial dependence. As for the term "pacification," it no longer even disguises these operations in the terminology acquired and lost at other times. It should be remembered that the vast destructive operation being conducted by the Israeli Army in Lebanon, involving the loss of tens of thousands of human lives, has been called "Peace for Galilee."

Perhaps the series of warnings from the Soviet Union is not so important in advising against this mission as the risk of involving the United States in a serious international situation. "The USSR will define its entire foreign policy in relation to this action," Brezhnev says in a message to Reagan. This new definition is barely of interest to the White House, because if it is attending the Geneva negotiations and preparing for high-level talks with the USSR, it is doing so more to satisfy its European allies and to avoid losing face vis-a-vis the pacifists. Reagan is convinced that the USSR now lacks any capacity for political or military response short of starting a total war, which is something it does not seem in the least determined to do. On the other hand, nobody can know how the Arabs might react or how the situation might evolve locally, that is in the huge area of the Arab and Muslim world. For one thing, it seems that the resistance in west Beirut has to some extent checked the plans prepared by Israel, which expected its immediate evacuation in the face of the force of Israel's advance and destructive capacity. The military action was conceived so as to result in an imposed political solution, which has not yet happened.

To introduce a thousand marines into this situation with the aim of separating the belligerent parties, following Washington's declared position in favor of one of them, is to complicate the situation and to place the United States in a hornet's nest, when it has within its reach other solutions acceptable to it that do not involve any direct military commitment.

Congress' reluctance to accept Reagan's measure is based mainly on these considerations. The specter of Vietnam is still frightening. Some senators regard it as a war operation and therefore one requiring Congress' approval (a measure introduced precisely to prevent the President from repeating actions similar to those of Vietnam). It is not only the fear of the United States' losing its public image by backing Begin in a brutal solution to a secondary problem; it is also the risk of becoming involved in another distant war, impossible to win or lose. Reagan seems willing to override these opinions and to consider the Senate's approval unnecessary. His decision has some precedents in its favour, which are undoubtedly prompting him to take a risk in the operation. His previous hardline actions, in whatever fields they have occurred, have brought him major successes. But they seem insufficient to counterbalance his domestic failures -- particularly in the economic field. The danger facing him is that somebody in Congress and within his own party could start suspecting that the President is going too far.

NONALIGNED MEETING ON PALESTINE OPENS 15 JULY

NC151932 [Editorial Report] Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek at 1455 GMT on 15 July broadcast a live relay of the opening session of the Nonaligned Coordinating Bureau conference on the Palestinian issue from the Hilton Hotel in Nicosia. The announcer stated that the conference will hold three sessions per day, in the morning, afternoon and evening.

The meeting was convened by Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca, who spoke in Spanish.

At 1530 GMT Malmierca called on UN General Assembly President Ismat Kittani to address the session. Kittani, speaking in English, thanked the Nonaligned Movement and the Government of Cyprus for inviting him to the conference. He reviewed the UN resolutions on the Palestinian issue of last April and June, stressing that despite such efforts, violence is continuing and the crisis has become more severe. Concluding, he called for strong efforts to end the crisis and for a solution to the tragedy in conformity with the UN resolutions.

('Abd al-Latif Abu Hijlah) then addressed the conference on behalf of Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO Political Department, who was unable to arrive in time for the opening session. According to the announcer, he is expected to arrive in Cyprus either on the night of 15 July or on the morning of 16 July. ('Abd al-Latif Abu Hijlah) then read in English a message to the conference from Yasir 'Arafat.

Malmierca then called on Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou to address the conference. Kiprianou, speaking in English at 1522 GMT underlined the leading role of Cyprus in the Nonaligned Movement since Makarios was one of the protagonists in its establishment and stressed its devotion to the principles of the Nonaligned Movement and its solidarity with the Palestinian people in their moment of trial, comparing the Palestinian and Cypriot tragedies since both peoples are suffering under foreign aggression.

Cuban Foreign Minister Malmierca then proposed Cypriot Foreign Minister Nikolaos Rolandhis as president of the conference, and the delegates present elected him by acclamation.

Following his election as president of the conference, Rolandhis, speaking in English, addressed the conference. He stressed Cyprus' suitability as the venue for the conference, particularly because Cyprus has also suffered a foreign aggression, invasion and occupation.

Referring to the tragedy of the Palestinian people in their search for a national homeland, Rolandhis dealt with the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and the siege of Beirut, which he described as the epilogue to the Palestinian drama. He concluded by stressing that military might will never win over the struggle of peoples for their rights and called for measures to ensure the triumph of the Palestinian people.

At 1548 GMT Rolandhis called on the representatives of the four geographic regions to address the conference. Sri Lankan Foreign Minister Abdul Carder Shahul Hamed spoke in English on behalf of Asia; Grenada Foreign Minister Unison Whiteman spoke in English on behalf of Latin America and the Caribbean; Benin Foreign Minister Tiamiou Adjibabe spoke in French on behalf of Africa; and Yugoslav Assistant Federal Secretary for Foreign Affairs Ignac Golob spoke in English on behalf of the Yugoslav foreign minister on behalf of Europe. They expressed their gratitude to the Cypriot Government and people for hosting the conference and reaffirmed the Nonaligned Movement's principles and solidarity with the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples.

Golob, the Yugoslav representative, stressed Makarios' important role as one of the founding personalities of the Nonaligned Movement and the fact that Cyprus continues to firmly support the nonaligned principles. He concluded by saying that the delegates have come to Nicosia to join in a united voice of condemnation of yet another Israeli act of aggression and violation of the rights of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples, stressing that no force can ever subdue a people who are fighting for their homes and for freedom.

Rolandhis then called upon Neville Gallimore, Jamaican minister of state for foreign affairs, who proposed the endorsement of the preceding statements by acclamation. His proposal was passed unanimously.

Conference president Rolandhis then announced the receipt of messages from UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar, President of the UN Security Council Sinclair and Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua. Upon translation, he said, these messages will be distributed among the delegates.

Rolandhis then proposed the adoption of a message from the conference to PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat:

"The nonaligned countries view with profound indignation the aggression of Israel against the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples, in utter violation of the most fundamental principles of international law and blatant contempt for the decisions adopted by the United Nations and the movement of the nonaligned countries. Admiring the courage, tenacity and heroism of your resistance against this latest manifestation of the continued Zionist aggression, the nonaligned countries express their support for your just struggle in defense of the freedom of your people, their right to self-determination, their right to return to their homes, their right to return to their homeland, their right to independence and sovereignty and to the establishment of their own national, independent state in Palestine. At this critical moment and as proof of solidarity with the Palestinian people and its leadership, the nonaligned countries' Coordinating Bureau decided to convene in Nicosia, Cyprus, an extraordinary ministerial meeting on the question of Palestine in order to express its firm adherence to the principles of justice and equality, flagrantly violated in the Lebanon by the Israeli aggressors, and to consider ways and means providing for continuing practical and effective support to the Palestinian people and the PLO, its sole and legitimate representative, and to broaden the support for its just cause in the world. The nonaligned countries wish to express through you to the Palestine Liberation Organization their firm conviction that your just cause shall prevail and that the Palestinian people will soon realize their inalienable rights." The reading of the message was followed by lengthy applause and was then adopted by acclamation.

Rohandhis then announced the conclusion of the opening session and announced that the next meeting will be held at 1930 GMT. The meeting adjourned at 1632 GMT.

Kiprianou Addresses Conference

NC151634 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in English 1525 GMT 15 Jul 82

["Text" of 15 July statement by President Kiprianou at the opening session in Nicosia of the extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Nonaligned Movement on the Palestinian question — live]

[Text] I wish to welcome to Cyprus all the participants to this extraordinary meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the nonaligned, which was urgently convened to deal with Palestine and the most dangerous as well as tragic situation created as a result of the Israeli aggression and invasion.

I would like to assure you that on our part we shall do whatever we can to contribute toward the success of this vital meeting of the nonaligned.

Cyprus is proud to have been chosen as the venue for this important meeting. This fact, if I may say so, is an eloquent proof of the recognition of the role of Cyprus in international affairs and in particular within the context of the Nonaligned Movement, as well as of the consistent policy pursued by the Government of Cyprus in upholding the role and the principles of nonalignment aiming at universal freedom, justice and peace.

Cyprus is a very small country, itself a victim of aggression and injustice. It, however, never ceased, even throughout these very difficult years, to play its constructive role in international affairs, in particular as a member of the Nonaligned Movement. We are proud to belong to the Nonaligned Movement. Since its inception, when a group of great leaders, Tito, An-Nasir, Nehru and our Archbishop Makarios, laid down the foundations, this great movement has been playing a very important role in world affairs.

We have always believed in the need for concerted action on the part of the nonaligned, so as to make its role as effective as possible. And, most definitely, the reason for the holding of this present meeting requires concerted and urgent action. We take this opportunity to salute the heroic Palestinians in Lebanon who have found themselves, as a result of the Israeli aggression, in an extremely difficult situation and yet they struggle for their rights and their freedom. We have no hesitation to state once again that a solution to the Middle East problem is impossible and unjust without the recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to set up their own independent state. We recognize the PLO and its leadership as the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people and we welcome their participation in this meeting. But all these are not enough. The situation calls for immediate action for the sake of the rights of the Palestinian people and in order to save thousands of lives who are being threatened in west Beirut. The task of this meeting is both political and humanitarian, and it is in this spirit that I call upon this meeting to act. There is no time to lose. The nonaligned and the world in general cannot allow a victory of violence and aggression at the expense of human lives and of the rights of a people struggling for so many years for their independence and freedom.

The secretary general of the United Nations, a few days ago, speaking of the role of the United Nations peace-keeping operations, indicated that they require revision in the light of the invasion of Lebanon and Cyprus. We fully agree with him. But, until this is done, or indeed any other ways and means are found and decided upon to meet such situations, it is absolutely necessary to proceed with taking the necessary steps to put an end to the tragedy of the Palestinian people and to put an end to the Israeli aggression.

What will the future of humanity and of the generations to come be if aggression is to be allowed to bear fruit or if the results of the aggression were to be legalized? When we were all hoping that, as a result of the last world war, the use of force would be excluded, we are now witnessing exactly the opposite, which is a dangerous prospect for the future of mankind. The international community has a responsibility to act in time by correcting situations which are created as a result of the use of force in violation of the charter and the resolutions of the United Nations, and take all necessary measures to prevent the creation of new such abominable situations.

I could have cited and dealt with many examples, including the example of my own country. I could have referred to the invasion of Cyprus by Turkey, the occupation of a substantial part of its territory by Turkish troops, the hundreds of thousands of refugees, the missing persons, the enclaved, all those elements, which compose the Cyprus drama, which has been going on for the last 8 years. But it is agreed that this meeting is solely for the purpose of dealing with Palestine and the situation in Lebanon as a result of the Israeli aggression. It would not, therefore, be proper not to concentrate all our efforts to this situation without meaning that other situations should not be dealt with as a matter of urgency by the nonaligned.

I hope and trust that this meeting will be a success and that it will prove to be historic. As far as Cyprus is concerned, I pledge that we shall do whatever we can to contribute constructively to the collective efforts of the nonaligned. The unity of the nonaligned is at stake and we must preserve that unity if the nonaligned are going to play the important role in the world it is expected of them in all situations. We are ready to participate in any initiative that this meeting may decide, fully conscious of our responsibilities and in conformity with the principles of freedom and justice to which we are dedicated. Thank you, Mr Chairman.

'Arafat Message Read

NC152015 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1455 GMT 15 Jul 82

[Message from PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat read at the Nicosia conference of the Nonaligned Coordinating Bureau by ('Abd al-Talif Abu Hijlah) on behalf of Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO Political Department, in English -- live]

[Text] [Passage indistinct] and which prevents the movement of individuals, of transport of vital goods, including international aid. Meanwhile, the Zionist and U.S. media are launching a bitter psychological war in which lies are transmitted worldwide in an attempt to obscure the reality. The invading authorities are, at the same time, preventing journalists and newsmen from entering the occupied regions.

To coincide with the aggression, the Israeli invaders are also launching savage attacks against our people in occupied territories, admitting that they fire at demonstrators who take to the streets in protest against the invasion and war of liquidation.

The occupation authorities have also shut down educational institutions and issued orders dissolving municipal councils, paving the way for another campaign to disperse our people outside occupied Palestine and in implementation of the civil administration scheme.

All this is taking place before the eyes of the whole world. The Israeli state has rejected all Security Council and UN resolutions calling for an immediate cease-fire and a complete and unconditional withdrawal from Lebanon. The United States has, moreover, used its power of veto to disrupt the international consensus, whose objective is to put a hold to this invasion and ensure the withdrawal of the invader.

What has happened and what is still taking place represents a tragedy in terms of international relations and for the future of relations between nations since the aggressors become more aggressive and more arrogant, taking advantage of the protection and encouragement of the U.S. administration and exploiting the lack of unity in the stand of the peace and freedom-loving states, particularly the lack of effective action by the member states of the Nonaligned Movement.

This issue requires effective action, not only in order to save an organization which is a member of the Nonaligned Movement, i.e. the PLO, and not only to defend the independence and sovereignty of a member state, i.e. Lebanon, but also to defend the future of the Nonaligned Movement and its principles as well as the independence and sovereignty of all its member states and in order that the law of the jungle might not prevail.

Brothers and Comrades, if this aggression is allowed to pass without response it will represent a dangerous precedent which will do away with all existing constraints and regulatory measures. It was hoped that the hand of aggression could be stopped and that the strong would be prevented from violating the sovereignty and freedom of the less strong. You can well imagine the terrifying future of a world which lacks a collective will as well as the norms and values for the consolidation of which the peoples have paid a high price.

The aggressors and those who encourage them only understand the language of force, the language of bombs and explosives. We expect you to take forceful measures to confront these crimes. There are many practical dimensions for exercizing your condemnation of this invasion and putting pressure on the United States, which encourages it.

I do not wish to define or give examples of these practical measures, but I am confident that the nonaligned states, their noble stand and their agreement among themselves will enable them to take whatever measures they can toward supporting the struggle of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples and in order to punish the aggressors and put pressure on their supporters.

This is the only measure which will be effective today. I thank you, salute you and assure you that we are firm in our commitment to the principles of the Nonaligned Movement, in defense of our independence and freedom and of all that is free and honest in the region.

Revolution until victory, Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, commander in chief of the forces of the Palestinian revolution. [applause]

GOVERNMENT AFFIRMS COOPERATION WITH GREECE

[Text] In reply to a question as to whether the president of the republic agrees with the doctrine Cyprus decides and Greece supports, given the fact that the doctrine had been criticized by Papandreou before he became prime minister, the government spokesman said that relations between Cyprus and Greece are not governed by doctrines but are characterized by close and sincere cooperation. The Greek Government never disputed the right of the independent Cypriot state's government to make decisions concerning the handling of the Cyprus problem. However, efforts continue for more effective promotion of our national cause and, within the framework of this close and sincere cooperation, to make the decisions jointly, as was done during the recent visit to Athens by the president of the republic and as mentioned in the official communique issued at the time.

At the same time, as is well known, the spokesman added, it has been decided to continue consultations for further joint promotion of the national cause. What I want to reiterate, the spokesman said, is that it does not concern a doctrine but the fact that the Greek prime minister, Papandreou, has made the Cyprus problem an issue of priority in his policy while the Greek Government's alignment is strong and dynamic, which the Cyprus Government has hailed from the outset.

O KIRIKAS BEGINS SERIES ON CYPRUS DOSSIER

NC151550 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 13 Jul 82 p 5

[First in a series of an unspecified number of articles by Andros Pavlidhis: "A Startling Document of the Treason -- The Cyprus Dossier"]

[Excerpt] Before the "court of the peoples":

Mr Chairman of the court, Judges, Members of the jury:

Before you today opens the presentation of a startling case -- the case of the Cyprus tragedy.

On 15 July 1974 there was a military coup against the legal president of the Republic of Cyprus and his legal government. In the presentation of this case, we will prove the entire plot for the dissolution of the Republic of Cyprus, a plot that we dare describe as international, because, apart from Cyprus, many Western nations played a leading role in its preparation, both in the planning stage and in its execution. For reasons beyond our control, the guilty high foreign personalities are unfortunately not included in the list of guilty persons before you. During the presentation of this case, however, we will attempt to present as many facts as is practical for us to present, and we will also place the burden of responsibility on the guilty high foreign personalities and moral accomplices.

As a sequel to the 15 July 1974 coup, we had the Turkish invasion of 20 July 1974, which was the second stage in this very same plot. The results of the coup and the invasion, which were so destructive to Cyprus, are well known to all, but during the presentation of this case we will once again present them because it must become absolutely clear that, to the degree that these results are so great and destructive the higher becomes the degree of responsibility of the guilty parties and, consequently, the greater must be the penalty you will be asked to impose.

Accused today before this court stand Cypriot and Greek protagonists and accomplices in the great drama which the Cypriot people lived and continue to live through. The aim of the prosecution is not to convict and send these people to prison -- this, in any case, would in no way help the people of Cyprus -- but it is our aim to place proof before your court, supporting this proof by presenting documents, written evidence, photographs and other proof in order to establish, I repeat, that there was truly a plot and that there are parties responsible for the tragedy of Cyprus. At a time when we hear and have seriously supported theories about the alleged "spontaneous radicalism of the rightwing," we wish to unfold before you this case in order to prove that the treasonous coup of 15 July 1974 was neither "spontaneous" nor "radical." We will prove that it was a coldly planned crime of vast dimensions, a crime against the legal president, Makarios, against the legal government, against democracy, against the state, against the Cyprus people as a whole and against Cyprus. This abominable crime of vast dimensions, judges and gentlemen of the jury, was planned continuously over many years. It existed as a permanent threat against Cyprus for many years until July 1974, when it was put into operation by unhesitating men, by criminals of the first order. We will prove that a crime was committed and that the criminals do exist. This is dictated by truth, this is dictated by history and this is what we will acomplish.

Naturally, we admit there are very many difficulties in this case, which truly is so very complicated and so very important. We wish, judges and gentlemen of the jury, to announce at the outset that we in no way consider the coup of 15 July 1974 as a misdemeanor "of the moment." We wish to make it absolutely clear from the start that by saying the "tragedy of Cyprus," we refer not only to the dramatic and startling developments of the summer of 1974. By saying the "tragedy of Cyprus," we refer to the entire intrigue which led to the developments of July 1974.

When, however, did this course start?

Gentlemen: It is well known that Cyprus always maintained good relations with Greece. After the establishment of the Republic of Cyprus and specifically from 1960, the government of Archbishop Makarios established close state relations with the government in Athens. Cooperation between the Governments of Cyprus and Greece was continuous and uninterrupted. From time to time there certainly were different viewpoints and even disagreements. The various governments in Athens, however, were, as a rule, frank with the government in Nicosia and vice versa. Things started getting difficult for Cyprus, and they would become dramatic and tragic in the end, in April 1967, when the tanks started rolling in Greece and authority was taken over in a coup by the colonels, who aspired to become "national saviors." The Greek junta soon forgot that Cyprus was an independent and sovereign state, a member of the United Nations, and it started behaving toward Cyprus as if it were a province or none of Greece. The junta's insistence on achieving a solution and a settlement of the Cyprus issue both contrary to the interests of the people of Cyprus and against the people's will polluted relations between the Governments of Greece and Cyprus. The operations of the Greek junta in Cyprus -- underground, criminal and illegal -- continued with ever increasing intensity and culminated in the coup of 15 July 1974. The honorable defense counsel should not start feeling uncomfortable from this moment because they will be given the opportunity, during the presentation of the case, to scrutinize and study various documents which will prove our allegations. Consequently, they have all the time at their disposal to feel uncomfortable later....

Consequently, judges and gentlemen of the jury, in presenting today before your court the case of the Cyprus tragedy, we will not limit ourselves to the developments of the summer of 1974 exclusively, but we will come to them by starting with April 1967. The Cyprus tragedy reached its climax in July 1974, but it started in April 1967 with the taking over of authority in Greece by the military junta. It is at that time that the coordinated efforts for the takeover of Cyprus started. There are even indications that the reason for which Washington put the colonels into motion and enforced dictatorship in Greece was the need to solve the Cyprus issue in a manner which suited U.S. and NATO interests in this area of the world.

We know that in the presentation of this case before your court the defense will go even further back in time in an effort to charge Makarios himself as well as his government with responsibility. In an effort to avoid giving the impression that we are avoiding the issue, we will ask the leave of your esteemed court to permit us to be the first to go back in time.

As a result, judges and gentlemen of the jury, since today we have undertaken the responsibility of presenting and opening to this court the dossier of the Cyprus tragedy, we have considered, as the prosecution, placing this case before the judgment of history in the following order:

1. In order to support our case and because references will be made to the past — which necessitates bearing in mind preceding developments — we will start with the date-milestone, the date of establishment of the Republic of Cyprus, with as much brevity as possible, to present developments from 1960 to April 1967.

2. We will then establish the charges, presenting developments as well as the necessary proofs of the Cyprus tragedy, stressing the following:

A. The coup in Greece;
B. The role of the Greek Army in Cyprus after 1967;
C. The Kofinou crisis and the withdrawal of the Greek Army;
D. The National Front;
E. The Makarios-Papadhopoulos rift;
F. The attempt on Markarios' life;
G. The "Ermis" [Hermes] coup plans;
H. The arrival of Grivas and the creation of EOKA B;
I. The operations of EOKA B and its relation organizations;
J. The relations of EOKA B and Greek [Army] officers;
K. The "Apollon" coup plans;
L. The second attempt on Makarios' life;
M. The total reliance of EOKA B upon the junta after Grivas.

3. After dealing with these developments, we will be permitted to deal specifically with the coup of July 1976.

4. We will then present the developments of the Turkish invasion.

5. In conclusion, we will deal with the postcoup period and with the case of the murder of U.S. Ambassador Roger Davies.

This, honorable judges and gentlemen of the jury, is the course which the prosecuting authority intends to pursue in this case, which the court is asked to start hearing today. As you will establish, we will be presenting a great amount of documented evidence and secret documents, which will be presented here for the first time. We are certain that we will be able to prove our charges and to prove the truth.

Thank you.

VOTCP Notes Resignations

They resigned on Wednesday, 14 July. CUMHURIYET APPRAISES TURKISH-GREEK TALKS

NC151102 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 12 Jul 82 p 1, 11

[Text] Ankara (CUMHURIYET news desk) -- It has been reported that the talks, begun some time ago with the aim of improving relations between Turkey and Greece, will be resumed in the next few days.

It has been learned that the aim of the talks between Turkish Ambassador to Athens Fahir Alacam and the Greek Foreign Ministry officials is to prepare the ground for a meeting of the foreign ministers of the two countries and to exchange views on the conditions for the talks.

Reports reaching Ankara say that while these talks are continuing, the Greek side has not yet adopted an open attitude toward the subject of resuming "negotiations" for the purpose of resolving the issues between the two countries. It is reported that there is the tendency in Greece to leave this decision to the meeting of the foreign ministers. Ankara has so far refrained from making a disclosure about the contents of the negotiations. One of the points that attracts attention in the attitudes of the Turkish and Greek sides is that, while Athens talks of the "declaration of a moratorium," Ankara does not use the word "moratorium" and sees the talks as taking place within the framework of an effort to improve bilateral relations.

While Ankara has maintained silence right from the beginning of the talks, in the latest statement issued this week, Athens maintains that no dispute of any kind has arisen, thus trying to create an optimistic atmosphere. Nevertheless, it is impossible to evaluate this situation as marking the beginning of a dialogue between Turkey and Greece.

ISRAEL CAPTURES TURKISH TERRORISTS IN LEBANON

NC151050 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 10 Jul 82 pp 1, 9

[Ozkan Altintas report]

[Text] It has been learned that Teslim Tore, one of the Turkish terrorists captured in one of the PLO training camps in southern Lebanon during the blockade of Beirut, collaborated with the Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia (ASALA) in the planning and taking part in the killing of three of our diplomats.

Teslim Tore, whose name appeared in messages issued by ASALA after the assassination of Danis Tunaligil, Ismail Erez, and Oktay Cerit, is reported to have acted since 12 March as the administrator of the camp in the heart of the PLO area.

Among the Turkish terrorists who were captured by Israel and interrogated in a kibbutz in the vicinity of Jerusalem were Abdullah Ocalan and his wife, Kesire Ocalan. It has also been stated that Edip Eranil, who is believed to be the man who hijacked a Turkish airliner to Bulgaria, is also in the hands of the Israelis. He is the one who planned the murder of Gun Sazak and a member of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Leftists in Ankara.

The following are the names of Turkish terrorists who were captured in the camps bombed by Israel and who are still believed to be in the hands of the Israelis:

1. Oner Alpsar: One of the leaders of the Socialist Youth Union and a member of the Turkish Communist Party. His code name: Cem. He is a student in the mechanical engineering department of the Middle East Technical University.

2. Cahit Atak: A student of the Ankara State Architecture and Engineering Academy and a cell secretary of the Turkish Communist Party-Union. He directed several bloody militant actions, particularly in Ankara.

3. Hasan Sukru Dal: A member of the Turkish People's Liberation Party. He was tried on 21 April 1980 in Istanbul. The prosecutor demanded the death sentence for him but he escaped from the Sagmalcilar Prison in a bus along with 23 others. It is said that he named his child "Eylemci" (Militant).

4. Kemal Kalayci: He is one of the leaders of the Turkish Communist Party-Union organization. He directed various militant actions, particularly in our southeastern provinces.

BRANDT ANNOUNCES SI MEDIATION IN LEBANON

[Excerpts] Copenhagen -- The Socialist International (SI) wants to launch a mediation effort in the Lebanon conflict. This was stated by SI President and SPD Chairman Willy Brandt Tuesday night in Copenhagen, where the SI held an informal meeting to discuss the Lebanon crisis. To this end a delegation headed by Portuguese Socialist leader Mario Soares is to go to the Middle East in the near future. In a six-point declaration the SI calls for, among other things, compliance with the cease-fire in Beirut and opposes the city's military occupation.

After the consultations Brandt took a stance on the results. From the six SI demands he called attention to the demands for respecting the cease-fire by all sides, and for solving the Palestinian problem by political and nonmilitary means. Moreover, the SI called for Lebanon's independence (without foreign armed forces) and opposed Beirut's military occupation. It affirmed that Israel's legitimate security interests must also be taken into consideration, and unanimously condemned terrorism and the use of military force as a means to solve political problems.

The next informal SI summit meeting is to be held in Vienna in September.

FRG WANTS TO LOWER CONTRIBUTION TO EEC BUDGET

[Excerpts] The Hague, 10 July -- The FRG cannot continue to pay its relatively high financial contribution to the EEC. Federal Chancellor Schmidt made it clear that a ceiling must be fixed for the West German contribution to the EEC budget during his 2-day visit with Netherlands Prime Minister van Agt.

On the subject of the gas pipeline from Siberia, for which the Soviet Union has signed contracts with various West European countries, including West Germany, much to the Reagan administration's displeasure, Schmidt said at a press conference yesterday: "We will adhere to these agreements, as France and Britain are doing. It is possible that this has caused some irritation in the United States and that the U.S. reaction is causing further irritation in Europe, but we must overcome this problem by talking. There is no reason why Europe should sacrifice its interests. On the contrary, the European nations must make their influence felt in unity within the framework of the EEC in order to protect their interests."

EEC'S THORN VIEWS U.S. - W. EUROPE RELATIONS

[Text] Bonn, 16 Jul (DPA) -- The relationship between the United States and the EEC, in the view of EEC Commission President Gaston Thorn, has rarely been as strained as it is now. Thorn said Friday on Deutschlandfunk Radio that what worries the Europeans above all is the "isolationism" of the Americans. yet no effort must be spared to restore the old relationship of trust.

In Thorn's view this applies both to the American tightening of the embargo toward Moscow and to the levying of special import duties by the Americans on European steel supplies. The EEC politician stressed in speaking of this that, in his opinion, the European standpoint will prevail. The American stance on the steel issue arose above all from a slump in the United States, as the level of European imports has remained relatively stable at five percent of American steel consumption.

DAILY CITES COMPLICATIONS IN 'MORATORIUM' TALKS

[Text] Complications have been noted in the contacts for the settlement of the "moratorium." This will probably delay the implementation of the informal agreement. Specifically, Ankara has shown that it is withdrawing from the initial framework of discussion and it has not accepted certain changes in the agreement with regard to the submission of flight plans [over the Aegean].

The day before yesterday, at the meeting between Kapsis and Alacam, the Turkish ambassador clearly stated to the Greek deputy minister that his country cannot accept the Greek side's proposal regarding specific changes on the fundamental issue of flight plans. According to Mr Alacam some other solution should be found for the whole issue that would be acceptable to both sides, to be discussed in the forthcoming meetings between the Turkish ambassador and Mr Kapsis. The Turkish ambassador's effort to divert the "moratorium" talks toward a more substantive exchange of views was very clear.

However, with the veering that the "moratorium" issue sustained the day before yesterday, a new round of Kapsis-Alacam talks should be expected in order that both sides may arrive — if they ever do — at a joint acceptable formulation.

NETHERLANDS

VAN AGT: DECISION NEEDED ON CRUISE MISSILES

FM151513 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 10 Jul 82 p 3

[Excerpt] The Hague — According to Netherlands Prime Minister van Agt there must be a decision "in the very near future" about the deployment of cruise missiles in the Netherlands. He said this yesterday at a press conference which he gave together with West German Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at the end of the latter's 2-day official visit to the Netherlands. "We cannot go on postponing a decision," Van Agt said.

With this statement Van Agt toughened earlier statements he had made at the beginning of this week during his visit to Egypt. There the prime minister said that a decision cannot be put off indefinitely. Van Agt proposed that clear agreements on the question must be reached during the cabinet formation negotiations following the 8 September election.

The nuclear arms question was one of the topics discussed by Van Agt and Schmidt in The Hague. Asked for his opinion of a possible failure to reach agreement on a decision on Netherlands deployment of cruise missiles, Schmidt said that he had no reason to criticize Van Agt. The federal chancellor again stressed that since the NATO decision was for deployment in five countries West Germany considers the participation of the other countries necessary. "We must not allow ourselves to become isolated," Schmidt said.

The West German Government head said that if worse comes to worst, deployment must begin if the Soviet-U.S. talks in Geneva have not produced any results by the end of next year. The Soviet Union knows that NATO is prepared to begin deployment and must not be left in any doubt about this, Schmidt said. The Soviets must not be allowed to gain the impression that we accept the threat posted by the SS-20s, he added.

Schmidt also had meetings yesterday with the permanent First and Second Chamber Foreign Affairs Committees. According to various Chamber members, during this closed meeting Schmidt was even clearer in his opinion of the Netherlands Government's position with regard to the deployment of cruise missiles. Those countries which do not take part in deployment will have little influence on the arms limitation talks. He doubted whether the Soviets would be prepared to agree in Geneva to the zero option, because it would mean that SS-20 missiles which have already been deployed would have to be scrapped.

SEARCH BEGUN FOR 'SUBMARINE' IN TYSFJORD

FM160913 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 13 Jul 82 p 8

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report]

[Excerpt] Bodo — On Monday [12 July] morning a helicopter and a frigate were put into action in a search in Tysfjord after reports of something resembling a submarine in the area around Hulloy close to Kjopsvik.

The search, which was initiated at 1000 hours, had produced no results by the afternoon, but will be continued for the time being, the acting chief of the Navy Operations Center at the North Norwegian Defense Command, Capt Jacob Borresen, told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA.

The object was reported by two people -- a civilian from Kjopsvik itself who saw it from a height of 700-800 meters, and one of the passengers on the ferry between Kjopsvik and Drag.

CGTP OFFICIAL ADDRESSES WORKERS' DEMONSTRATION

LD152334 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2100 GMT 15 Jul 82

Addressing the demonstrators, CGTP Secretariat member Joaquim Calhau said that living standards have now reached their lowest point since April 1974. He also said that the workers do not understand why the dismissal of the government should be postponed on the pretext that the revision of the constitution must be completed. The constitution is not to blame for the crisis, he said, adding that it is precisely because the constitution is not implemented that the country is in a state of crisis.

Joaquim Calhau said that the Democratic Alliance government is leading the country down a blind alley toward a situation with unforeseeable consequences. He stressed that Portugal's foreign debt is now over 50 percent of 1 year's GNP.

He blamed the Democratic Alliance for the brutal worsening of unemployment, the slowdown in production and rapidly rising prices. He also said that the government's economic policy is nothing but a series of measures to serve the interests of the big bosses.

Joaquim Calhau demanded the speedy publication of the results of the inquiry into the 1 May incidents in Oporto [demonstrations in which two people were killed by riot police], recalled the two general strikes already staged by the CGTP and repudiated the government's plans to revise labor legislation.

He further said that with its present composition the Assembly of the Republic not only cannot resolve the problems of the crisis but indeed has proved incapable of revising the constitution in such a way as to safeguard democracy.

MINISTRY, OTHERS DENY SECRET USSR AGREEMENT

[Text] Valery Giscard d'Estaing has issued a formal denial. The report that a secret agreement on credits was concluded between France and the USSR is fantastic and irresponsible, circles around the former president of the republic are saying. For Jean-Francois Deniau, former minister of foreign trade, this report by a high-ranking American official is not serious. Our allies have always been informed of the rates of export credits, Jean-Francois Deniau states.

The External Relations Ministry also denies the existence of such an agreement and finds it distressing that such incorrect accusations can be spread.

NICARAGUAN PAPER INTERVIEWS MITTERRAND

PA182303 Managua BARRICADA in Spanish 13 Jul 82 p 12

[BARRICADA "exclusive interview" with President Francois Mitterrand; date and place not given]

[Text] Question: Mr President, an economic and technical cooperation agreement will be signed at the coming official visit to France by Commander Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the Nicaraguan Government junta. What particular importance does your government give to Commander Ortega's visit and the signing of this agreement between the two countries?

Answer: Daniel Ortega's visit is the natural continuation of longstanding relations chacterized by frankness and mutual respect. It was time for a direct political dialogue, at the highest level, between the representatives of our peoples.

This visit, then, is well timed. I realize that Nicaragua is going through difficult moments, and this is precisely when friends are important. Friends should discuss everything, face to face and openly.

In my opinion, the interest that guided him toward the unique Sandinist project, toward his people's courageous struggle against all forms of oppression, goes back to the very beginning of the Nicaraguan revolution. He was the first secretary of the Socialist Party, and as part of the opposition he was president of the international committee for the defense of the Sandinist revolution. The circumstances have changed, but men have not changed. I am the same man. The Sandinist revolution must also remain faithful to its principles; at least this is my wish, and I am sure that the Sandinist leaders have the same hope.

Question: Your government has demonstrated with actions that its policy toward Nicaragua and Central America is independent and contrary to U.S. policies in the region. What are the principles that govern this policy, and what is your evaluation of its effectiveness?

Answer: Independent. That is the best word to describe our policy. We do not care about the contradiction by itself. Our independence could lead us to serious differences on this or that problem with one or another superpower; with the Soviet Union regarding Afghanistan and Poland, or with the United States of America — although we are allies — regarding the situation in Central America, for example.

But that is not the important factor. What is important is to conduct our policy following strict and clear principles, which should be the same for all. Among these principles, I will first mention the defense of human rights and the peoples' rights from those with the most power, regardless of who they are.

This is why we have the same foreign policy for the Middle East, Central America, Europe, or any other region. We might resort to geographical or historical reasons to justify some of our incidental positions -- I am thinking about the Malvinas conflict, when our Latin American friends did not always understand our position -- but when freedom, the most essential thing, is at stake, we are and will be intransigent.

Question: Your government has not only sponsored, together with Mexico, the French-Mexican declaration on El Salvador, it has also had an active role in supporting President Lopez Portillo's proposals for negotiations in relation to Central America and the Caribbean. However, at this time, there are no prospects of finding an acceptable political solution for the Salvadoran conflict, and the pressures and hostilities of the United States against Nicaragua have increased. Do you visualize peace in this region, and what would be the role or new initiatives that France could adopt to prevent a major confrontation in this area?

Answer: The French-Mexican declaration regarding El Salvador was signed almost a year ago. Its only goal was to raise the fact that the political problems of a country or region must be discussed among the political forces in that country or region, and that social injustice will not be solved with bombs, military offensives, and slaughters. What has been taking place over there since last year tragically confirms that our evaluation was correct. A few days ago I met with Guillermo Ungo, president of the Salvadoran Revolutionary Democratic Front, to review the situation with him.

We are always willing to participate in any initiative that could advance the time for negotiations, both regarding El Salvador and the region as a whole. However, it is not our intention, if course, to replace the parties involved in the conflict. This would be against our mission, which is to help each country so that they can decide their own destiny.

Question: Some observers have said that the recent armed conflict between the UK and Argentina for sovereignty over the Malvinas could have affected relations between Europe and Latin America, in view of the EEC's support for the UK. In the particular case of Central America and Nicaragua, how are relations between the EC and our region? Could Commander Ortega's visit to France improve these relations, taking into consideration that this is the first Latin American leader to visit Europe since hostilities ended in the Malvinas?

Answer: The Malvinas war was an unfortunate situation, but it belongs to the past in the relations between Europe and Latin America. Each continent has its own spirit of solidarity, your continent as well as mine.

On this issue, the French position was governed by respect for an elementary rule, the violation of which opens the way for unlimited chaos: the refusal to support resolution of a territorial dispute by force. However, as regards the nature of this dispute, the problem of sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands, you know that France has no prejudices. As soon as peace was restored we, along with the FRG, were the first to ask the EEC to speedily suspend the economic sanctions against Argentina.

In the future as in the past we will continue to act within the EEC to see that the Central American countries, particularly Nicaragua, receive all the economic and financial cooperation to which they have a right.

Question: During the Cancun meeting in October 1981 expectations were raised that the U.S. position would be shifted somewhat in favor of the great majority of countries that urgently demand a new international economic order. However, time has demonstrated the opposite, and the negotiations remain stagnant. Since then, there has been further aggravation of the international economic crisis and of its devastating effects on the underdeveloped countries. At the same time, the danger of war and of worldwide confrontation has increased. Does your government plan to promote any new initiative to advance global negotiations? Are you optimistic about humankind's near future?

Answer: We are all tired of a certain rhetoric about the new international economic order. It is necessary to go from words to actions. France does not forget that. Moreover, it never stops reminding its industrialized partners, the so-called countries of the North, of their responsibilities.

I personally took the initiative at the Versailles summit last month to obtain specific commitments regarding the launching of global negotiations within the United Nations.

We have received satisfaction on that point, and I can even say that it is one of the few aspects of that conference that gave cause for satisfaction.

We will make sure -- and you can be sure of this -- that in this case as in others the commitments made in common are respected.

SHULTZ SUGGESTS NEW U.S. MIDEAST APPROACH

[Editorial: "American Alteration of Course?"]

[Excerpt] Is the American position on the Near East changing? Comments are already being made on statements by Mr Shultz, U.S. secretary of state designate, on Tuesday, 13 July, according to which it is a matter of "urgency" to resolve "the Palestinians' legitimate problems" and "achieve a settlement which would satisfy all their demands." Some people attach scarce importance to this -- did Mr Carter not come out in support of a Palestinian "homeland"? And has Mr Shultz not reaffirmed a constant American stance -- the PLO will be recognized as the "voice" of the Palestinians only if it foregoes guerrilla warfare and itself recognizes Israel's right to exist?

Nonetheless, Mr Cheysson detected on Tuesday night an "evolution" in Washington. Mr Junblatt, leader of the Lebanese left, deems the statement made by the future head of the American diplomatic service "interesting and positive," even though he fears that its aims is to draw the Palestinians into the scorned Camp David process. As for Israel, it does not conceal its alarm and fears that Mr Shultz may invoke Camp David only to go even farther.

It must be admitted, however, that Mr Shultz, successor designate of a pro-Israel secretary of state, who is known for his business ties with Arabs, could not say more in front of senators on whom his confirmation during a preelection period depends.

His statements can be appraised only if you gauge the distance already covered and the distance which remains to be covered. The Security Council's 1967 Resolution 242, which the international community considers to be a basis for seeking a solution, ignores the Palestinian problem; it merely recognizes a "refugee problem."

RENEWAL OF APPEAL FOR IRAN-IRAQ CEASE-FIRE

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, July 16 -- The Italian Government intends to renew its appeal for a cease-fire between Iran and Iraq and to favor a negotiated solution along the lines of the declarations made by the European Economic Community (EEC) in this context in May, sources close to the Foreign Ministry revealed here.

Italy also intends to urge both nations to conform to United Nations Security Council Resolutions 479 and 514.

The entrance of Iranian troops in Iraqi territory is seen by the Italian Government as a new and serious development capable of bringing more destruction and suffering and accentuating security risks in the region.

The Foreign Ministry reportedly underlined that just as Italy deplored Iraq's violation of the Iranian frontier, it now expressed much regret for these dramatic events involving two nations with which Italy maintains friendly relations of close collaboration.

In a moment in which, the ministry said, the entire area is profoundly unsettled, with serious risks for world peace, all conflicting nations should be aware that it is illusory to seek the realization of their own objectives through military means in the belief that the crisis can remain isolated.

Meanwhile, the Italian ambassadors in Baghdad and Kuwait have informed the ministry that Italian citizens resident in the area near the Iraqi city of Basra have not suffered any consequences in the development of hostilities between Iran and Iraq.

The embassies are maintaining constant contact with the Italian community there.

It was also reported that the fighting has so far been confined to the eastern side of the Shatt-al-'Arab waterway and is not therefore threatening the area in which Italian technicians continue to work undisturbed.

DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER VISITS ETHIOPIA

[Excerpt] (ANSA) -- Addis Ababa, July 17 -- Italian Deputy Foreign Minister Roberto Palleschi arrived here today at the start of a seven-day visit to Ethiopia during which he is expected to review areas of development cooperation with Ethiopian authorities.

Palleschi, the first senior Western official to visit Ethiopia this year, heads a delegation that will tour Italian-assisted projects in various provinces.

He was greeted by the deputy secretary-general of Ethiopia's development and planning authority, Taye Gulilat, and Rome's ambassador here, Oliviero Rossi.

Palleschi's trip is seen as a step in a long process of strengthening bilateral cooperation between Rome and Addis Ababa. Ethiopian Finance Minister Teferra Wolde Semayat journeyed to Rome in 1978 to bag a 15 million-dollar credit from the Italian authorities.

REPORT ON DO AMARAL'S 16 JULY TV ADDRESS

[Text] "The first change arising from the abolition of the Council of the Revolution consists of the definitive abolition of the body that exercised political and military tutelage over the regime. The second change established the universally accepted principle of the subordination of the armed forces to the legitimate political powers. Both have the profound significance of finally enshrining the arrival of complete democracy in Portugal after 50 years of dictatorship and 8 years of transition in a supervised democracy."

After this introduction Prof Freitas do Amaral spoke in some detail about the legislative initiatives to be presented by the government to the Assembly of the republic, with particular reference to the constitutional tribunal and the law on national defense. He disclosed, for example, that the government has already drafted the bill on the creation of the constitutional tribunal and has already acquired the premises where it will sit. He also said that the government is in the process of resolving the administrative problems arising from the disappearance of the Council of the Revolution.

With regard to the law on national defense, Prof Freitas do Amaral began by giving the government's definition of the concept of national defense. At one stage, on the question of the specific mission of the Portuguese Armed Forces, he stressed:

"The government has full confidence in the Portuguese Armed Forces' loyalty to the democratic institutions and in their devotion to legality. But the government deems it inadvisable to provide anyone with legal pretexts that might one day be invoked to justify appeals for the intervention -- or support -- of the military in the resolution of internal political problems by means strange to democracy and to the Constitution. "A second point of the utmost importance is that of the subordination of the armed forces to the civil power and the terms on which such subordination should be based. Our Constitution -- and it is as well that it should be pointed out -- has since 1976 stipulated that the armed forces are subordinated to the organs of sovereignty, as stated in Article 274, Paragraph 3. But the question arises of the definition of the organs of sovereignty. It has already been stated, and I make a point of reiterating it now, that the government is neither in favor of the presidentialization, nor of the parliamentarization or the governmentalization of the armed forces. Our view with regard to the armed forces is that the president of the republic should have the functions that befit a head of state, the Assembly of the republic should have the powers that one would expect of a parliament, and the government should exercise the jurisdiction that goes with the role of the executive."

Freitas do Amaral went on to refer to the government's views on the internal life of the armed forces, with particular reference to the role of the Supreme Council of National Defense, particularly with regard to the promotion of senior officers:

"The legitimate and necessary subordination of the armed forces to the democratic civil power chosen by the people does not preclude the suitable recognition of a high degree of internal autonomy for the military institution.

"The armed forces are part of the state; they obey the organs of sovereignty; they participate in the implementation of national defense policy and carry out tasks alloted to them by the authorities so empowered. But none of this entails or justifies the interference of political or partisan criteria in the internal life of the armed forces. As stated in the Constitution, they are at the service of the Portuguese people and are strictly nonpartisan."

Throughout his televised address the deputy prime minister and minister of defense stressed the government's desire to engage in dialogue both with the president of the republic and the military, mainly through the chiefs of staff and the chief of the General Staff with regard to the latter. Toward the end of his address he also spoke of the need for medium-term planning for the future of the armed forces in order to reequip them gradually, bearing in mind that military expenditure must be carefully pondered in view of the country's present economic crisis.

NAVY STUDYING FUTURE OF SUBMARINE FLEET

[Knut Falchenburg report: "Refurbishment of Older Submarines To Be Investigated"]

[Excerpt] The Norwegian Navy was instructed last week to assess whether the life of the aging Norwegian submarine fleet can be lengthened. If modernization of the old Kobben class submarines turns out to be possible, it could lead to the postponement of the planned purchase of new submarines, the armed forces' largest purchase since the F-16 aircraft. On Wednesday [14 July] a further exploratory meeting will be held in Bonn, AFTENPOSTEN has been informed.

Negotiations for the major submarine deal with West Germany were completed in November 1980. However, the contract was never signed, and since the negotiations events have pointed only in one direction -- the implementation of the contract has become increasingly uncertain. Even though a number of details have been resolved since then, the eventual outcome still seems as uncertain today is it did a year ago. The original idea behind the agreement was that Norway would order a new submarine fleet from German shipyards and in return the West German Navy would make use of advanced Norwegian direction-finding equipment when modernizing its own 206-class submarines. Since then German budget problems, together with a few other reservations, have led to a situation in which the Germans are unwilling to use Kongsberg Vapenfabrikk direction-finding equipment in the modernization of their 206-class submarines. They have chosen a simpler and cheaper solution. To make amends the Germans have put forward the idea of using the the Norwegian equipment instead in a new generation of submarines, the 200X, which they plan to build nearer the end of the century. For Norway the question is whether the German authorities are in a position to give a guarantee of what Norwegian equipment will be needed in a construction program so far in the future.

While the talks with the Germans have continued to drag on, budget problems have begun to build up in Norway too. A current problem is how many submarines Norway can afford. When the Kobben class was built in the sixties the navy took delivery of 15 vessels. One has already been taken out of service. When the defense commission presented its recommendations it mentioned 10 submarines, and in more recent studies the navy has been offered the realistic hope of receiving eight new boats when the fleet is replaced. The war in the Falkland Islands has shown how important submarines are in an area where the threat from the air against surface ships is great.

Sources in the Defense Ministry admit the new fleet must have a certain minimum size; if the number of vessels is too small each individual submarine will be disproportionately expensive. And from the military viewpoint Norway must have a certain minimum number for the submarines to make a real deterrent contribution. For even if the new submarines will be able to carry twice the present torpedo load, the Norwegian coast is long and submarines slow.

The Defense Ministry's interim solution in a difficult economic situation is the decision to investiage possible modernization of the Kobben fleet at a cost of 50-60 million kroner per boat. Then in a transitional phase these boats would be used side by side with the new ones. The construction of new submarines would then be able to take place over a number of years stretching into the nineties, depending on the country's economic situation.

At present this is all at the idea stage. According to information given to AFTENPOSTEN the navy supply command will present its interim report on the technical aspects of the proposal by the middle of August. One of the questions to be answered is whether the submarines' hulls will able to withstand the pressure during further years of service.

Khaddam on Palestinians

JN170358 Damascus Domestic Service in Arabic 2115 GMT 16 Jul 82

[Text] 'Abd al-Halim Khaddam, deputy prime minister and foreign minister, stated in Nicosia today that Syria cannot in any way accept the Palestinian strugglers, because this would mean the liquidation of the Palestinian revolution and question. In a statement to Cyprus Television broadcast tonight, Khaddam said that Syria has clearly defined its position on this subject and stressed that it is the right of the Palestinians to remain where they are and to continue the struggle to regain their legitimate national rights.

Khaddam added that forcing the Palestinians to live in any Arab country is considered a third unbearable exodus and that Syria believes that the Palestians should be given freedom of action in all the Arab countries, including Lebanon.

Asked what he expected of the Nicosia [nonaligned] conference, Khaddam said that the conference must adopt urgent measures, not just statements in support of the Arabs. Khaddam stressed: We need actions to impose sanctions on and boycott Israel in the political, economic and military fields to put pressure on all countries supporting Israel, headed by the United States, and force them to halt aid to Israel.

Iraqi Delegate's Address

JN161928 Baghdad Domestic Service in Arabic 1800 GMT 16 Jul 82

[Text] Ahmad Husayn, minister of youth and head of the Iraqi delegation to the ministerial conference of the Nonaligned Movement Coordination Bureau being held in Nicosia, has called on the nonaligned states to take effective, practical measures and to draw up a program and definite basis on which to confront the treacherous Zionist aggression against Lebanon. In a speech at the conference today, Ahmad Husayn said that the Zionist invasion of Lebanon is aimed at liquidating the Palestinian resistance movement and the Palestinian cause and bringing the Arab nation and the struggle of the Palestinian people under imperialist pressures with the aim of controlling them.

The Iraqi delegate reviewed the Zionist entity's expansionist schemes of aggression such as the annexation of Jerusalem and the Golan Heights, the attack on the Iraqi nuclear reactor and the current plans aimed at wiping the Palestinians out of existence. Ahmad Husayn referred to the connections between the Zionist invasion of Lebanon and the continued Iranian aggression against Iraq which are being carried out at the same time. He said that the Zionist entity, in cooperation with the Iranian regime, aims at weakening Iraq and engaging it so that it cannot take part in confronting the Zionist aggression. He stressed that the Iranian regime's insistence on continuing the war reaffirms the nature of the premeditated designs drawn up between the Iranian regime and the Zionist entity against Iraq and the Arab nation. Husayn asserted that the Zionists had exploited the current circumstances in the region and launched their aggression against Lebanon. He said that the Zionist entity would not have carried out such an adventure without exploiting the circumstances in the region which paralyzed numerous Arab resources that would have certainly been placed at the disposal of the Arab struggle against the Zionist invasion.

Velayati Address

LD162142 Tehran IRNA in English 1929 GMT 16 Jul 82

[Text] Nicosia, July 16, (IRNA) -- "The Palestinian cause is like the sun which could never be hidden behind the clouds, and the Zionists and their imperialist supporters know that the Palestinian cause...can never be destroyed," said Dr. Velayati, the foreign minister of the Islamic Republic in a speech addressed to a gathering of non-aligned foreign ministers last night here. Dr. Velayati said that after only a short period which has passed since the last meeting of the non-aligned ministers in Kuwait (to discuss the Golan Heights annexation), the issue of the Zionist aggression was getting more dangerous each day while the world was facing "a more frightening calamity and the most deadly silence by parties which have an interest and a responsibility in the Palestinian issue."

The Zionist aggression, he said, seemed to be a new plan of the colonialists to smother any revolutionary fire in the region, savagely purging the Palestinian revolution right in front of the startled eyes of the people of the world. "With utmost regret," he continued, "international reaction against this new crime has been weak and ineffective like the previous reactions made towards the expansionist policies of the Zionist regime."

"4 -- [numbering as received] The necessity to expose and destroy the conspiracy of world arrogance to bringing down [as received] and humiliate the Arab people, the Muslim peoples and the non-aligned countries, which is evident in the occupation of Lebanon. The Non-aligned Movement must stress on the security and the territorial integrity and independence of a united and non-aligned Lebanon and guarding the Palestinian revolution against the Zionist and imperialist enemy. [sentence as received]

"5 -- Giving full support to the Palestinian Liberation Organisation and Syria against the aggressions of the Zionist regime.

"6 -- To fully strengthen the "[word indistinct] Army" whose establishment has been announced by the Islamic Republic recently and the participation of all Muslim countries in this army.

"7 -- The non-aligned countries which have not so far broken off their diplomatic relations with the Zionist regime must do this at once.

"8 -- The establishment of a commission in the Coordination Office of the Non-aligned Movement for the purpose of following and studying actions to punish those countries which are the supporters of the Zionists."

Speaking further on the Zionist aggression upon Lebanon, the Iranian foreign minister said that the Islamic republic was the only country which quickly sent its forces to Lebanon to fight alongside the Palestinian and Lebanese strugglers and he said that the Islamic republic would continue to stand unconditionally [word indistinct] these strugglers. He said that the firm stance of the Islamic republic had led to the kidnaping of five staff members of the Iranian Embassy in Lebanon, who are continuing to be kept by Zionist agents.

Further in his speech, Dr Velayati said spoke [as received] concerning the Iraqi imposed war and the recent developments in the warfronts and said that given the Iraqi devastation of Iranian cities of Khorramshahr, Qasr-e Shirin, Dezful, Abadan, Naftshahr, Musiyan, Mehran, Bostan, Shush, Hoveyzeh and Ilam, along with some 1,200 villages in the west and south of Iran, and the occupation of several strategic regions of Iranian territory, the Islamic republic had every right to stop the artillery shelling of Iranian border regions by the Iraqi forces and to obtain the full rights of the Iranian Muslim people. He added that any action necessary would be taken to achieve these rights while emphatically stressing that the Islamic republic harboured no territorial designs on any other country.

Malmierca Thanks Cyprus

[Text] Mr Chairman, Esteemed Colleagues, Distinguished Heads of Delegations: I am confident that I am expressing the most unanimous feeling from all the participants at this historical and combative extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of the Nonaligned Movement and having the privilege of presenting to the plenary session of this meeting the following resolution of recognition [of the] people and the government of the Republic of Cyprus.

The extraordinary ministerial emergency meeting of the Coordinating Bureau of Nonaligned Countries held in Nicosia from 15 to 17 July 1982 expresses its most heartfelt appreciation to the Government of Cyprus for having generously offered the sister nation -- homeland of the unforgettable Archbishop Makarios, president of the Republic of Cyprus -- which so profoundly contributed to the development of our movement and who made such a valuable contribution for the attainment of its main objectives as venue for the extraordinary ministerial emergency meeting of the Coordinating Bureau on the question of Palestine, devoted to the analysis and adoption of appropriate measures regarding the very serious issues generated by Israeli aggression against Lebanon and the deep sorrow of the Palestinian people and civilian Lebanese population. It expresses deep gratitude to the people and the government of the Republic of Cyprus, and in particular to His Excellency President Spiros Kiprianou for the warm and friendly welcome extended to us, which has decisively and broadly contributed to the objectives of this important meeting.

Furthermore, it expresses its full support and solidarity with the people and the government of the Republic of Cyprus towards its independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity, unity and nonalignment. It particularly appreciates all the arrangements and facilities provided to the participants in this meeting as well as the quality of the services rendered at this meeting.

It enhances the fact that such facilities and excellent organization has been achieved despite the fact that the Cyprus Government had only 6 days to organize this meeting. It recognizes that such effort is a sign of the Cyprus Government's decision to dedicate its greatest and best energeies and resources to an effective solidarity with the combatant people of Palestine. It salutes this lofty gesture of the people and government of Cyprus as an important contribution to the heroic and unyielding struggle of the Palestinian people for the attainment and exercise of their national inalienable rights under the leadership of the Palestinian Liberation Organization -- its sole and legitimate representative. Thank you. [applause]

Rolandhis Closing Address

[Text of 17 July closing address by Nikolaos Rolandhis, foreign minister of Cyprus, at the closing session of the extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Coordination Bureau of the Nonaligned Movement on the Palestinian question in Nicosia, Cyprus -- live]

[Text] We have now reached the concluding stage of the extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Coordinating Bureau on the question of Palestine. Although the notice given to the members of the bureau and the other members of the movement about this meeting was extremely short, 67 delegations attended the meeting, 59 of which are member states of the movement, 3 observer and 5 guest states or organizations. Twenty-nine delegations were headed by a minister. The above numbers are indicative of the degree of support and solidarity of the Nonaligned Movement with the cause of the Palestinians and of concern at the crisis in the Lebanon.

The plight of the Palestinian and Lebanese people, the heroic resistance of the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization and its members and the courageous efforts of the Syrian Government to resist the Israeli aggression have touched off a universal mobilization and an immediate response of the movement of the nonaligned countries.

The presence among us of the president of the General Assembly of the United Nations has been symbolic of the apprehension of the international community about the tragedy which the valiant resistance of the defenders of West Beirut reflects.

Cyprus is proud to be hosting this very important and crucial meeting. The drama of her own people makes the Government of Cyprus a better recipient of the messages of bravery and courage from the besieged city of Beirut.

In my opening statement of 15 July I said that we are here to consider the question of Palestine and most importantly to delve into the aspect of extending practical and pragmatic help to our suffering friends of Palestine and the Lebanon and to pay tribute to the heroic efforts of Syria to repel the Israeli aggressor.

We are winding up this conference today after having adopted a 15-page communique which contains some measures which are indeed practical. The aggression of Lebanon by Israel and the abhorrent acts committed against the Palestinians and the Lebanese have been vehemently condemned and measures against Israel have been approved. It is also declared that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the question of Palestinian and the Middle East conflict. Such a settlement under the auspices of the United Nations must be based on the relevant United Nations resolutions; ensure the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem; and which will enable the Palestinian people under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization to exercise their inalienable rights, including the right to return to their homes and land, the right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of their own independent sovereign state in Palestine.

Furthermore, some practical steps will be taken. I think it suffices to read to you the relevant paragraphs containing the action program decided which reflects the resoluteness of the movement to espouse the cause of our suffering friends.

It has been decided to establish a ministerial committee consisting of eight nonaligned countries and the current chairman of the movement, with the following mandate:

1. To follow closely the developments affecting the Palestinian people and their representative the PLO, particularly in Lebanon, including a visit to Lebanon in order to hold consultations with the Government of Lebanon and the leadership of the PLO and to verify the crimes perpetrated by the Israelis, and suggest measures of concrete support and assistance to the Palestinian and Lebanese people.

2. To maintain continuous contact with the president of the United Nations General Assembly, the president of the Security Council, the secretary general of the United Nations, the chairman of the committee on the inalienable rights of the Palestinians, the permanent and other members of the Security Council with a view to finding an immediate, just and comprehensive solution to the current aggression and the question of Palestine and not to broaden the support and assistance of the world to the Palestinian people.

3. To prepare a special declaration on the question of Palestine for the consideration of the seventh conference of the heads of state or government of the nonaligned countries in Baghdad in September 1982, expressing the political support and solidarity with the Palestinian people and its representative the PLO and containing comprehensive recommendations for measures of assistance to them.

4. To ask the chairman of this meeting, Mr Nikos Rolandhis, the foreign minister of the Republic of Cyprus, to transmit the final communique of the meeting of the five permanent members of the Security Council, drawing their attention to the positions and recommendations contained therein and to request them to enable the Security Council to take urgently all the necessary measures to bring about an end of the current critical situation in Lebanon and to affirm the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people under the leadership of the PLO, including the right of self-determination and independence and to the establishment of their own state in Palestine.

A nine-member ministerial committee has already been appointed consisting of the ministers of foreign affairs, of Cuba, India, Sri Lanka, Benin, Senegal, Guyana, Nicaragua, Yugoslavia and Cyprus.

As chairman of this meeting, I have already given instructions to have messages sent to the President of Syria, His Excellency Mr Hafiz al-Asad; to the president of Lebanon, His Excellency Mr Ilyas Sarkis; and to the leader of the PLO, Mr Yasir 'Arafat, announcing the details of the above action program and seeking their cooperation for the fulfillment of the mission of the ministerial committee in regard to the visit to the Lebanon. The committee proposes to proceed promptly to Beirut after contacting the governments concerned.

I would like to conclude by saluting the unparalled fortitude of our Palestinian friends and by assuring them that the Nonaligned Movement is standing by their side.

Before I conclude this meeting I would like to thank and express my deep appreciation and gratitude to all ministers and to all other heads of delegations, to all members of delegations, to all the officials of this meeting and to all the secretarial and technical staff who have worked, literally, on a round the clock basis to make the success of this important ministerial meeting possible.

We have now reached the conclusion of our work, and I declare this session and this meeting as closed. [prolonged applause]

Meeting Closes

NC172225 [Editorial Report] Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek at 1845 GMT on 17 July broadcasts a live relay of the closing session of the extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Nonaligned Coordinating Bureau at the Hilton Hotel, Nicosia. The announcer introduced the program stating that this is the closing session and recapped the work conducted by the meeting and the decisions that were made.

At 1850 GMT, Rolandhis, the foreign minister of Cyprus, proclaimed the last session of the meeting open and called on the representatives of the four geographic regions to address the meeting. This was done by Christian Remi Richard, the foreign minister of Madagascar, who spoke on behalf of the African group; Alex Sceberra Trigona, the Maltese foreign minister, who spoke on behalf of the European region; speaking on behalf of Latin America was Ambassador Carlos Ozores Typaldos, the Panamanian permanent delegate to the United Nations and former Panamanian foreign minister; and speaking for the Asian group was Abdullah Kamil, the Indonesian permanent delegate to the United Nations. All four speakers profusley thanked President Spiros Kiprianou, the government and the people of Cyprus; reaffirmed the solidarity of the nonaligned countries with the people of Palestine and Lebanon; and strongly condemned the Israeli aggression supported by the United States.

Faruq Qaddumi, the head of the PLO Political Department, then came to the rostrum at 1913 GMT and, speaking in Arabic followed by a simultaneous English translation, thanked President Kiprianou, the government and the people of Cyprus for the excellent organization of the conference on such short notice; he also thanked Cuban President Fidel Castro and Malmierca, the Cuban foreign minister, for convening the conference in response to a request from Yasir 'Arafat. Qaddumi then emphasized that despite the sophisticated Israeli weaponry and the support the aggressor has received from the United States, the resolve of the Palestinian fighters to continue the struggle until final victory remains unchanged, stressing that the people of Palestine will continue their struggle until their lands are liberated and they have established their own independent state in Palestine. He went on to note that the Palestinian fighters, as a result of their brave struggle, have earned world respect and have brought world condemnation on the U.S. supported "Zionist" aggressor. Faruq Qaddumi closed his remarks by repeating the PLO's and the conference's thanks to the brother people of Cyprus and their government for hosting the conference. Foreign Minister Rolandhis then called on Malmierca, the Cuban foreign minister, to address the conference at 1926 GMT. Malmierca devoted his remarks to thanking Cyprus over its handling of the conference. Following Mamierca's statement, Rolandhis addressed the conference at 1932 GMT, summarizing the accomplishments of the nonaligned meeting on Palestine and outlining the final communique. After his concluding remarks, Rolandhis then declared the nonaligned confernce's special session on Palestine closed at 1944 GMT.

The meeting also had the privilege of hearing messages sent by the chairman of the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, H.E. Fidel Castro Ruz, and by H.E. Yassir 'Arafat, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestine Liberation Organization. The meeting was addressed by H.E. Ismat al-Kittani, President of the 36th session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, and H.E. Isidoro Malierca, minister of foreign affairs of Cuba. Chairman of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-aligned countries, who proposed H.E. Nikos A. Rolandhis, minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of Cyprus, as chairman of the meeting. Mr Rolandhis delivered a statement.

A message to Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the Executive Committee of the P.L.O., was adopted by the plenary. Messages were also addressed to H.E. Ilyas Sarkis, president of the Lebanese Republic, and H.E. Hafiz al-Asad, president of the Syrian Arab Republic.

4. On the proposal of the head of the delegation of Jamaica, it was decided that full texts of those statements and messages should be circulated as official documents of the bureau.

5. The ministers adopted the following communique and programme of action:

The Israeli aggression of the Lebanon constitutes an affront to all non-aligned countries and the international community as a whole, since it violates, in a particularly brutal manner, the basic norms of international law, the purposes and principles of the United Nations Charter as well as the fundamental values and norms of international conduct. This aggression constitutes one of the most ignominious pages in human history. The decision to convene an extraordinary meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau on the question of Palestine demonstrates the movement's deep concern at the grave and critical situation in the Middle East and the world at large.

The decision also demonstrates the movement's solidarity with the Palestine Liberation Organization, the suffering people of Palestine and the government and people of the Lebanon as well as its commitment to the national liberation struggles of peoples under colonial and alien domination, an essential element of its efforts to bring about effective international security and order, in a world free from aggression, foreign domination, oppression and exploitation.

6. The ministers considered the traumatic developments brought about by the Israeli invasion of the Lebanon and particularly Beirut, evaluated their consequences to and implications for international peace and security and considered ways and means for the safeguarding of the lives of the Palestinian and the Lebanese people and the realization of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and the further strengthening of the international status of the P.L.O.

7. The ministers condemned Israel for its aggression against the Lebanon and the Palestinian people and their representative, the P.L.O., as a continuation of the policy followed by Israel since its creation, a policy aimed at expanding its territory at the expense of its Arab neighbours and at exterminating the Palestinian people.

The implementation of such an expansionist policy has been made possible by the massive military, financial and political support given Israel, particularly by the United States, in the context of their permanent alliance and which has been firmly condemned by the non-aligned countries. Such a policy has led to the holocaust of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples.

The ministers therefore called on the United States Government to reconsider its policy and to exert all efforts to ensure the prompt and unconditional withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the Lebanon.

8. The ministers, in expressing their grave concern and indignation at the explosive situation in the Middle East, which is the result of Israel's acts of aggression against the Lebanon, the violation of its sovereignty and Israel's devastating and genocidal actions against Palestinian and Lebanese civilians, condemned Israel's aggression as well as the Israeli atrocities and all other inhuman actions against the Palestinian people and its sole and legitimate representative, the Palestine Liberation Organization.

9. The ministers underlined that the Movement of Non-aligned Countries could not remain indifferent in the face of this abominable crime against the Lebanese and Palestinian people, and considered that the impunity of the aggressor and its expansionist goals will only lead to further aggression against the neighbouring Arab countries.

10. The ministers reiterated once again their strong condemnation of Israel's continuous measures and practices in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, especially the continuing settlement-building programme; the alteration of the occupied Palestinian territories' demographic and geographic features, particularly in Jerusalem; the dismissal of the elected mayors and municipal councils; and the ongoing process of depopulation of the occupied areas with the aim of implementing the Zionist Israeli plans for settling the population of the occupied Palestinian areas outside the borders of their homeland in Palestine.

11. The ministers recalled the declarations of the summit conferences of the non-aligned countries, including that of Havana of September 1979, as well as the declarations of the ministerial conferences held in New Delhi in February 1981 and at the headquarters of the United Nations in September 1981; of the extraordinary ministerial meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau on the question of Palestine, which was held in Kuwait in April 1982; and of the ministerial meeting held in Havana from 31 May to 5 June 1982. They reaffirmed once more that the question of Palestine is the core of the Middle East problem and together with the continued occupation by Israel of Arab territories is the root cause of the Arab-Israeli conflict, and reiterated their full commitment to the decisions of the Kuwait meeting.

12. The ministers also recalled Security Council Resolutions 508 of 5 June 1982, 509 of 6 June 1982, 512 of 19 June 1982 and 513 of 4 July 1982 as well as Resolutions ES-7/2, ES-7/4 and ES-9/1 of the sevenths and ninth emergency special sessions of the U.N. General Assembly and Resolution ES-7/5 of the emergency special session of 26 June 1982.

13. The ministers condemned Israe for its refusal to comply with the provisions of the aforementioned resolutions and noted with deep concern the failure, so far, of the Security Council to take effective and practical measures in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations to ensure implementation of its Resolutions 508 (1982) and 509 (1982).

14. The ministers demanded that Israel comply, without any futher delay, with all provisions of Security Council Resolutions 508 (1982) and 509 (1982) as well as with those of Resolution ES-7/5 of the seventh emergency special session and cease immediately all military activities within the Lebanon and across the Lebanese border and withdraw forthwith and unconditionally all its military forces to the internationally recognised boundaries of the Lebanon.

15. The ministers called upon the Security Council to authorise the secretary general to make all necessary endeavours and undertake urgently also practical steps aiming at the implementation of the provisions of Resolutions 508 (1982), 509 (1982), 512 (1982) and 513 (1982).

16. The ministers recalled paragraph 58 of the final communique of the ministerial meeting of the Co-ordinating Bureau of the Non-aligned Countries held in Havana in 1982 and, in view of Israel's contemptious disregard for all principles and norms of international law and its refusal to comply with United Nations resolutions and the provisions of the charter, called upon the Security Council to convene immediately in order to impose the measures prescribed in the Charter of the United Nations against Israel for its failure to comply with the aforementioned resolutions and for gravely endangering, through its actions, international peace and security.

17. The ministers also called upon all member states of the movement and also upon all other states to take appropriate measures by severing diplomatic, economic, cultural and other relations with Israel.

18. The ministers expressed their grave concern about the increasing collaboration between Israel and the racist regime in South Africa, in particular in the military and nuclear fields, and strongly condemned such collaboration and cooperation which have enabled the facist Pretoria regime to unleash repeated aggression against African front line states, particularly Angola.

19. The ministers condemned the misuse of the veto by the United States, which impeded the Security Council from adopting a unanimous resolution calling for the implementation of the cease-fire and from taking action in support of the Lebanon's sovereignty, for the protection of the Palestinian people and the realization of their inalienable rights.

20. The ministers expressed the conviction that Israel's record and actions, especially during the recent past few weeks in the Lebanon, have established conclusively that Israel is not a peace-loving state but a blatant aggressor, and that it has not carried out its obligations under the charter and other international instruments to which it is a party.

21. The ministers called upon all countries and peoples to refrain from giving Israel any military, material or other support which would allow it to persist in its hostile policies.

22. The ministers welcomed the positive and encouraging attitude taken by a number of member states of the European Economic Community in relation to the latest developments in the Lebanon, especially their stand on Resolution ES-7/5 of the seventh special session of the general assembly, and called upon all other members of the European Community to adopt a similar position and assist the Palestinian people in exercising its inalienable rights as identified and affirmed by the United Nations resolutions and to recognize the Palestine Liberation Organization as the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

23. The ministers acknowledged and expressed their appreciation for the consistent and positive support which has been extended to the just cause of the Palestinian people by a number of countries outside the Non-aligned Movement.

24. The ministers called upon all states and international agencies and organizations to intensify further their efforts to provide the most extensive and effective humanitarian aid possible to the victims of the Israeli invasion in the Lebanon.

In this respect, the ministers strongly condemned Israel for its indiscriminate shelling of civilian areas as well as the use of cluster and phosphorous bombs and toxic gases and reaffirmed Israel's international responsibility to pay compensation and reparations for the loss of life and property. The ministers further demanded that Israel respect the 1949 third Geneva convention relative to the protection of civilians in time of war and to lift its blockade of West Beirut and to allow the supply of food, medicine and water and electricity services, the denial of which by the Israeli occupation forces is causing massive suffering to the civilian population.

25. The ministers hailed the Palestinian, national Lebanese and Syrian Armed Forces who, through their tenacious resistance, have prevented the execution by Israel of its devious and ignominious plans. The ministers also expressed appreciation to all those forces, organizations and personalities the world over, including in Israel, who have expressed their opposition to and condemnation of the Israeli aggression.

26. The ministers, after evaluating the extremely serious situation resulting from the continuing Israeli aggression, declared once more that peace in the Middle East is indivisible and must be based on a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the question of Palestine and the Middel East conflict. Such a settlement, under the auspices of the United Nations, must be based on the relevant UN resolutions and should ensure the complete and unconditional withdrawal of Israel from the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem, and which will enable the Palestinian people, under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Oragnization, to exercise their inalienable rights, including the right to return to their homes and land, and right to self-determination, national independence and the establishment of their own independent sovereign state in Palestine.

While reaffirming once again their total and unconditional support for the struggle of the Palestinian people under the leadership of the P.L.O., and expressing their solidarity with the neighbouring Arab countries in confronting Israel's expansionist and aggressive designs, the ministers:

A. Urge all countries and organizations to reaffirm their full commitment to the just cause of the Palestinian people and its struggle under the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization, the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people, and undertake to react urgently, concretely and effectively against the genocidal attempts of Israel at exterminating the Palestinian people.

B. Undertake to substantially increase their moral, political, diplomatic and material support for the Palestine Liberation Organization, in order to enable the latter to effectively resist the Israeli aggression and to protect the lives of the civilian population, ensure their survival and adopt concrete measures contributing to the implementation of the programme of action contained herein.

C. Call on all members of the movement to undertake similar commitments and to respond rapidly and effectively to appeals for solidarity and action by the Movement of Non-Aligned Countries, in order to meet the present dire needs of the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Palestinian people.

D. Call for the intensification, by national and international means, of the campaign for political and economic as well as mandatory sanctions against Israel, in accordance with paragraph 8 of resolution number 2 of the declaration of the summit conference held in Algiers, in 1973, and further call upon all countries to take whatever action they may deem appropriate against those states which encourage and assist Israel to pursue its policies and practices.

E. Stress the manifest need of the Movement of Non-Algined Countries to reiterate its support and solidarity at the highest political level with the just cause of the Palestinian people and its struggle under the leadership of the P.L.O. as well as to make its full contribution to the achievements of peace and stability in the Middle East.

F. Decided to establish a ministerial committee consisting of eight non-aligned countries and the current chairman of the movement with the following mandate:

1. Follow closely the developments affecting the Palestinian people and their representative, the P.L.O., particularly in the Lebanon, including a visit to the Lebanon in order to hold consultations with the Government of the Lebanon and the leadership of the P.L.O. and to verify the crimes perpetrated by the Israelis and suggest measures of concrete support and assistance to the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples.

2. Maintain continuous contact with the president of the UNGA [United Nations General Assembly], the president of the Security Council, the secretary general of the United Nations, the chairman of the committee on the exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and the permanent and other members of the Security Council with a view to finding an immediate, just and comprehensive solution to the current aggression and question of Palestine and to broadening the support and assistance of the world to the Palestinian people.

3. Prepare a special declaration on the question of Palestine for the consideration of the seventh conference of the heads of state or government of the non-aligned countries, in Baghdad, September 1982, expressing the political support to and solidarity with the Palestinian people and their representative, the P.L.O., and containing comprehensive recommendations for measures of assistance to them.

G. Asked the chairman of this meeting, H.E. Mr Nikos Rolandhis, foreign minister of the Republic of Cyprus, to transmit the final communique of the meeting to the five permanent members of the Security Council, drawing their attention to the positions and recommendations contained therein, and to request them to enable the Security Coucnil to take urgently all the necessary measures to bring about an end of the current critical situation in the Lebanon and to affirm the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people under the leadership of the P.L.O., including the right to self-determination and independence and to the establishment of their own state in Palestine.

27. The ministers further:

They reaffirmed their firm position that no negotiatons or any other steps in the current situation or otherwise must take place without the full and equal participation of the P.L.O., the sole and legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

V. Decided to request the president of the 36th session of the UNGA to resume the seventh emergency special session of the UNGA on the question of Palestine not later than the end of August.

VI. Appeal to all governments, organizations and individuals -- in particular to the members of the Non-aligned Movement -- to substantially increase their assistance to the victims of the Israeli aggression in the Lebanon as a concrete expression of universal solidarity with the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples through the International Committee of the Red Cross and the specialized agencies of the United Nations which have already demonstrated their concern and capacity to organize and channel such assistance.

VII. Call upon the Security Council to recognize the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people as defined in General Assembly Resolution ES-7/2 and to endorse the recommendations of the United Nations committee on the exercise of the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people as endorsed by the General Assembly in Resolution 31/20 of 2 November 1976.

VIII. Call on the member states of the United Nations to review the decision contained in Resolution A/36/120 of 28 January 1982 concerning the convening, under the auspices of the United Nations, of an international conference on the question of Palestine with universal participation, with a view to advancing its date to 1983 and allocating the necessary resources in time.

IX. Call upon the Security Council to apply, as a matter of urgency, comprehensive and mandatory sanctions against Israel, under the provisions of Chapter VII and particularly Article 41 of the United Nations Charter, until Israel fully carries out the decisions and resolutions of the United Nations relevant to the question of Palestine.

X. Urge all members of the movement to use the means at their disposal to counter the insidious campaign and psychological war launched by the Israeli and other mass media aimed at weakening world solidarity with the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples."

PLO'S QADDUMI ON ISRAELI INVASION OF LEBANON

NC172240 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 17 Jul 82

[Interview granted by Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO Political Department, to Dhimitris Andreou of the Cyprus Broadcasting Corporations; date and place not given; questions and answers in English -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Your Excellency, what does it really mean to be a Palestinian today?

[Answer] The Palestinian is a freedom fighter: He is fighting for freedom, liberty and justice. He is fighting against Nazism -- that is, against Zionism, against the invasion of Arab land and defending human rights. The Palestinian, although exposed to the war of genocide, resists and stands bravely and courageously in the face of this terrorist invasion and barbaric attack by Israel.

[Question] Would you like to give us an assessment of the troubled situation in Lebanon and in Beirut, of course?

[Answer] The Israelis invaded Lebanon, occupied half of it, annihilated both peoples -- the Lebanese and the Palestinians -- destroyed cities and villages, levelled the refugee camps. But regardless of this, both peoples -- the Lebanese and the Palestinians -- stood against the invasion and fought bravely and inflicted heavy casualties. The overwhelming majority of all nations back the Palestinians and the Lebanese in their fight and condemned and denounced these barbaric activities -- military activities -- of the Israelis. The Security Council passed its resolution for the cease-fire and the Israeli pullout from Lebanon.

[Question] What is the real aim of the aggression?

[Answer] It is well known that the Israelis have their own plan to annex part of Lebanon. This is an expansionist and aggressive policy by Israel -- as they claim -- destroying the infrastructure of the PLO -- aiming at the stronghold of the PLO. This means the annihilation of the Palestinian problem. This is another Nazi movement [words indistinct] like that which happened during the Second World War when Hitler invaded Czechoslovakia and Poland and destroyed Warsaw. Now they are besieging Beirut and shelling Beirut, killing hundreds and thousands of people -- civilians.

[Question] There has been a lot of discussion about the possible evacuation of the Palestinian fighters from Beirut to other Arab countries. Can you comment on that? What is your position?

[Answer] We are there to stay. We are in Lebanon because we had been expelled by the Israelis from our homeland. If we want to leave Lebanon, we have to go to our homeland -- to Palestine. I am from Jaffa. I have to go back to Jaffa because the foreigner is occupying my place there, occupying my home. We are there not because we want to be there. Our presence there is due to the fact that we had had no place to go to when we were expelled from the occupied territories to Lebanon, to Syria, to Jordan, to Kuwait, to all parts of the Arab world and elsewhere. Therefore, we should not go out unless the Israelis withdraw from our homeland and we go back to our homeland. The question is to be or not to be.

[Question] We spoke before about international solidarity, UN resolutions; but at the same time, we feel that you have been left alone, you are fighting alone.

[Answer] I do not think that we are left alone. Most or all the peace-loving nations stood with us, the Security Council passed a resolution to the effect that the Israelis should pull out of Lebanon. When we see that all the nations of the world, the Nonaligned Movement, the Islamic Conference, the African organizations, the European Community denounced and condemned the aggression and some of them imposed some sanctions on Israel. We are not left alone; Israel is being isolated and the United States, who gave the green light, the real butchers of the Palestinians and the Lebanese -- they are isolated.

[Question] Would you like to comment on the stands of the two superpowers?

[Answer] Well I should say that first of all the Soviet Union is a friendly country which stands with the Palestinians, with the Lebanese; it denounces and condemns the aggression and the USSR gave its warning to Israel and to those who stand behind. But the United States gave the green light to Sharon, the Hitler of today, in order to butcher the Palestinians and the Lebanese. It provided him with all the sophisticated arms, F-16s, heavy tanks and heavy artillery to destroy the cities, and then continued to support them with financial aid, economic aid, and even blocked any resolution to denounce the aggression within the Security Council by vetoing all such resolutions just to give the Israelis the opportunity to continue their attack. See how we compare between two superpowers: One who cares to find a peaceful solution to the problem and stand against the aggressor and the other who is destroying all opportunities for peace -- it is the United States.

[Question] And from this nonaligned conference, what do you expect?

[Answer] I think that the Nonaligned Movement, as a whole, stands with the Palestinians, supports them with all means in the United Nations, in the political arena; and then they are trying to activate and elaborate on their expected resolutions: to have committees go to Beirut as a factfinding committee; to keep in contact with all the permanent members of the Security Council; and others -- to put pressure over the United States and over the Israelis. I think that the Nonaligned Movement can do many things.

[Question] Do you expect any sanctions on Israel?

[Answer] Well, some individual sanctions are expected. We leave this to the individual countries to impose the necessary sanctions on Israel or against it.

[Question] Your Excellency, Cyprus is facing a similar problem: invasion and occupation, would you like to comment on that also?

[Answer] Well, I know the situation in Cyprus and we keep on saying that Cyprus should be an independent country and should maintain its nonaligned position, should be free from foreign bases and we support the independence and the territorial integrity of Cyprus.

[Question] Thank you very much, Thank you.

KHADDAM DISCUSSES ISRAELI INVASION OF LEBANON

NC161856 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1650 GMT 16 Jul 82

["Text" of interview granted by Syrian Deputy Prime Minister 'Abd al-Halim Khaddam to Dhimitris Anreou of the Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation -- date and place not given; recorded, questions in English, answers in Arabic]

[Text] [Question] Your Excellency, would like to give us an assessment of the present situation in Lebanon?

[Answer] The present situation in Lebanon is extremely dangerous and complicated because of the Israeli invasion. This invasion, during which the ugliest and worst means of annihilation and destruction have been used, has clear political goals that aim at controlling Lebanon and changing the nature of the political system in the country, which is a member of the Nonaligned Movement and the United Nations, and at liquidating the Palestinian presence in Lebanon and, consequently at dealing a military blow to Syria. All this is within the framework of creating a certain situation in the Middle East that will enable Israel to impose it plans and policies in successive steps in the direction of establishing an Israeli state extending from the Nile to the Euphrates. There is no doubt that such a dangerous and complicated situation in Lebanon and the region would have not have existed but for the military, political and economic support which the United States is giving Israel.

[Question] There has been a lot of discussion about the possible evacuation of the Palestinians from West Beirut to other Arab countries. What is your position? What is your attitude?

[Answer] We have issued a clear-cut statement on this question. We believe that the Palestinians have the right to stay where they are and to fight where they are for the sake of their legitimate national rights. If the Palestinians are forced to leave a certain Arab country, this departure will be the third exodus. It is impossible to bear such a development or to imagine its consequences. In 1948, some Arab rulers told the Palestinians: Leave and you will return in a few days time. Indeed, they left but they have not yet returned.

We believe that the Palestinians must be allowed to operate in all the Arab countries, and naturally in Lebanon. Consequently, Syria does not agree in one way or another to receive the Palestinian fighters on its territory, because this will constitute a step within a program to liquidate the Palestinian revolution and, consequently, the Palestinian cause.

[Question] And from this conference here in Nicosia, the conference of the nonaligned people, what do you expect?

[Answer] Naturally, we expect this conference to adopt serious stands in support of the Arab stand. These stands must not be confined to verbal support, but must contain actions to boycott and impose sanctions on Israel in all fields -- political, military and economic -- and to exercise pressure on the states which support Israel, above all the United States, to stop their support of Israel.

[Question] Your Excellency, Cyprus is next to Lebanon, next to the Middle East, and Cyprus is facing a similar problem of aggression and occupation. Would you like to comment on that?

[Answer] We in Syria have always stood by the side of Cyprus' unity, and we have been supporting its independence and sovereignty. We have always supported the solution of the Cyprus problem in accordance with the UN resolutions and in a way that will safeguard Cyprus as a united country, a UN member and a member of the nonaligned movement. In conclusion, I must express thanks to the Cyprus Government for its initiative in hosting this conference and for its stands in support of the Arabs. I also express the thanks of the Syrian people to the Cyprus people, on behalf of the Syrian Government to the Cyprus Government and on behalf of President al-Asad to President Kiprianou.

FILL TO 'ARAFAT MESSAGE TO NONALIGNED MEETING

NC161145 [Editorial Report] (Clandestine) Voice of Palestine in Arabic at 0905 GMT on 16 July broadcasts the message of PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat read at the Nonaligned Coordination Bureau Conference in Nicosia, Cyprus, on 15 July, carried by Athens Domestic Service and published on p R 4 of the Cyprus section of the 16 July Western Europe DAILY REPORT. The Arabic broadcast permits the following fill of the indistinct passage in paragraph one:

[Text] Brothers and sisters, members of the Nonaligned Movement Coordination Bureau: Greetings of the revolution; I salute you and convey to you greetings from all the members of the Palestine Liberation Organization and all the sons of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples who have been courageously facing for 5 weeks an Israeli-Zionist invasion supported by the United States. This invasion has reached the extent of laying a siege on Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, and the occupation of large parts of Lebanese territory. Among these parts is the area of the presidential palace. [words indistinct] the battles being fought around Beirut in an attempt to conquer it. The enemy is using his U.S. air, ground and naval war machine. Therefore, this invasion is the most dangerous aggression against sovereignty and independence and the fiercest campaign of annihilation waged by a military force without taking into considerations the simplest principles of international law and without showing any respect for the bases of international relations and the covenants on human rights.

It is not possible to specify in this letter the actual picture of this criminal invasion. It is enough to mention that the Israeli invaders, who are using the most modern weapons of destruction and annihilation, which have been provided by the United States, have so far destroyed 3 big Lebanese cities — Sidon, Tyre and An-Nabatiyah — more than 30 Lebanese villages, 14 Palestinian refugee camps, killed or wounded more than 30,000 Lebanese and Palestinian people, rendered homeless more than 800,000 persons, and detained and captured thousands of Palestinian and Lebanese civilians, most of whom are not yet 15 years old.

The invasion and occupation forces are now setting up a concentration camp near the city of An-Nabatiyah similar to the notorious (?Auschwitz) concentration camp. These forces have announced that they will put all the Palestinian and Lebanese prisoners in it.

The steadfast Beirut is still under air, naval and groun bombardment. Its inhabitants are steadfast in the face of a strict food and supply siege, including water, electricity and medicine.

TA171059 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 17 Jul 82

[Text] The draft constitution has been submitted to the Consultative Assembly chairmanship. Constitution committee Chairman Orhan Aldikacti and committee members called on Consultative Assembly Speaker Sadi Irmak at 0930 this morning and submitted the draft constitution composed of 200 articles. Aldikacti later held a news conference and gave information on the draft resolution.

Aldikacti said that they tried to prepare a constitution which would insure peace and tranquillity in the community, that will gather a great majority of the people around itself and that will guide for a long time those who will govern the country. He continued: We do not believe that a constitution can have an unlimited life. Of course, the needs of our community will develop. There will be new problems. Then the constitution will be amended naturally. However, our hope is that this constitution will be one of peace and tranquillity, that it will eliminate the ideological quarrels which have created enmity and that it will guide us in accordance with the Ataturk principles on the road to Western civilization.

Aldikacti said that the most prominent feature of the draft was the increase in the authorities of the president and the strengthening of executive powers. He added that thus the presidency will no longer be an organ that will transmit to the public the decision made just as would a notary and that it will be a power that will have an effective role in the organization of state activities. He said that the authority granted to the cabinet in the 1961 Constitution to declare a state of emergency when necessary and to issue decrees with the power of a law during a state of emergency has been expanded. Noting that the part of the constitution dealing with human rights and freedoms has been reorganized without touching the spirit of the 1961 Constitution and that various gaps and drawbacks have been eliminated, Aldikacti added: The order which we have prepared has nothing to do with curbing freedoms.

Pointing out that the social state concept stipulated by the 1961 Constitution has been preserved and that they made attempts to further it, Aldikacti continued: We have tried to create a situation in which all the nation, especially those working and contributing to production and all those trying to increase the wealth and income of the country, will be able to continue their life struggle fraternally, without enmity, in union and in tranquillity. Aldikacti added that with this goal in mind the draft stipulates certain new institutions. Noting that these institutions were the state consultative council, the economic and social council, the high arbitration council and the state control, council, Aldikacti added that in addition the draft also stipulated the establishment of a Turkish linguistic academy.

Aldikacti said that according to the draft constitution the high tribunal has been brought under the supreme court of appeals and that a delegation composed of the heads of the general broad of the criminal panels of the supreme court of appeals will fulfill the functions of the high tribunal.

According to the draft constitution the president will be elected by the Turkish grand national assembly for a period of 7 years. The presidential election will be held through a secret ballot and it will be completed in 20 days. The draft also stipulates that the Turkish Grand National Assembly be composed of 400 members. The elections will be held every 5 years. A deputy who has resigned from his party will be able to continue their membership only as an independent deputy for that term. In case he becomes a member of another party or a minister his membership in the assembly will be cancelled.

The voting age remains 21 as in the 1961 Constitution. The draft constitution which states that political parties are the inalienable factors of democracy, adds that political parties that aim at defending and establishing in Turkey the principles of class factors, communism, fascism, theocracy or any kind of dictatorship can not be established in Turkey.

The draft constitution stipulates the establishment of a state consultative council with the aim of counseling the presidency. In addition an economic and social council will be established. The draft also stipulates the establishment of a high arbitration council. Furthermore, it stipulates the establishment of a state control council.

According to the draft constitution, labor unions will not be able to pursue political goals, engage in political activities, receive support from political parties and will not be able to support political parties in return. Labor unions, associations and professional establishments having the nature of public establishments and funds will not be able to act in union for these purposes. According to the draft constitution, in case of disagreement on collective wage agreements the sides will have the right to strike and lock out.

Draft Constitution

TA171215 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1135 GMT 17 Jul 82

[Text] Ankara, 17 Jul (AA) -- Here is the unofficial translation of some of the key articles of the new Turkish constitution, which will soon be debated by the Consultative Assembly and later by the ruling National Security Council before being put to a nation-wide vote in November:

Article I -- The Turkish state is a republic. . This provision of the constitution shall not be amended, nor shall any motion therefore be made.

Article II -- The Turkish Republic is a democratic, secular and social state governed by the rule of law, dedicated to Ataturkist nationalism and respectful to the human rights in a spirit of national solidarity and justice.

Article III -- The Turkish state is an indivisible whole comprising its territory and people. Its official language is Turkish. Its flag is the white-star and crescent flag as described in the revelant law. Its national anthem is the Anthem of Independence. Its capital is the city of Ankara.

Article 5 says that sovereignty is vested in the Turkish nation without reservation and condition. The nation shall exercise its sovereignty through the authorised bodies as prescribed by the principles laid down in the constitution.

Under Article 7, legislative power is vested in the Turkish Grand National Assembly and this power shall not be delegated.

According to Article 12 of the draft, basic rights and freedoms shall only be restricted with a view to safeguarding the integrity of the state with its territory and people, national security, public peace and order, public morals and health and to protect the rights of others. Article 13 says that none of the rights and liberties embodied in the constitution can be exercised with the intention of destroying the indivisible integrity of the state with its territory and people, endangering the existence of the Turkish state and the republic, destroying human rights and liberties, bringing about class hegemony or creating language, race, religion or sectarian separatism and establishing a state order based on communism, fascism or religious beliefs.

On important clause of the new constitution says that basic rights and liberties can be suspended in cases of war, proclamation of martial law or in other emergencies provided that obligations arising from international law are not violated.

These restrictions have been incorporated into Article 14 of the draft. Article 15 says that the same restrictions of basic rights and liberties can also be applied to foreigners by law in line with internal law.

A new insertion, which is part of Article 16 on the protection of individual's life says that in certian cases of self-defense, supression of riots and rebellions and in conformity with the orders issued by authorized persons when an emergency or martial law have been proclaimed, occurences of killings may be treated separately. This means that shoot-to-kill orders may be issued and security forces acting upon such orders to quell a riot or to prevent an escape may not be held responsible before the law if there is legitimate reason.

Part two of the draft deals with basic rights and liberties and is incorporated under such headings as immunity of domicile, freedom of communications, freedom of travel and residence, freedom of thought and belief. On the freedom of thought, the draft says that every individual is entitled to have his own opinion and to think freely, he is free to express his thoughts in various ways. But this freedom can be curbed for the sake of preventing crimes, to protect official secrets and to avert untrue and premature news that may have a direct bearing on the economic life of the country, and to safeguard the youth against dangerous and alien trends and habits.

Article 28 says that the press is free and cannot be censored.

Turkey's new constitution aims at strengthening the role of the executive organ in running the affairs of the country, Professor Orhan Aldikacti, the chairman of the committee which drafted the basic law of the land told a press conference Saturday.

He said he hoped that the new constitution would bring lasting peace and order to Turkey and would help eliminate differences of opinion, which in the past almost led Turkey to the brink of collapse and civil war.

According to the draft, the government will have the right to proclaim a state of emergency in cases which warrant such a move. [words indistinct] emergency is declared. The government will have the power to issue decrees in the force of the law.

In reply to a question, the professor said basic rights and freedoms were not curbed under the new constitution. On the clause that would bar trade unions from engaging in party politics, Aldikacti said any union which would threaten to stage a general strike against, say the creation of state security courts would be considered as having committed a crime.

He made it clear that all the deeds of the president and the Council of Ministers would be subject to the scrutiny of the [legislative] organ. The final say would be up to the legislators, who would be the representatives of the people.

He said the new draft contained no clauses of the rights of elective office. These rights would be regulated by law later on.

The present of the republic would no longer be a figurehead, someone who would put his seal on laws legislated by parliament and with no real powers at all.

On industrial relations, the law says that the check-off system, under which monthly premiums of unionized workers would be cut off from their pay cheques automatically is being waived off. (?members) will pay their dues directly to the union. All strike funds will be kept at national banks.

[Text] The draft constitution was submitted to the Consultative Assembly chairmanship this morning. According to the draft, the Senate is abolished and the Turkish Grand National Assembly is comprised of 400 deputies. The president will be elected at the Grand National Assembly for a period of 7 years. The president will be elected through a secret ballot and the election will be concluded within 20 days. A person cannot be elected president for two consecutive terms. According to the draft constitution, the president is charged with overseeing the implementation of the constitution and the smooth and harmonious functioning of state organs. In addition, if the Council of Ministers is overthrown by the legislative assembly through a nonconfidence motion and a new government is not formed within 30 days, the president will be entitled to request new elections. The draft constitution stipulates that the Turkish Grand National Assembly may convene when a third of the total number of deputies is present and make decisions through a simple majority vote of those present at the session. However, the number of votes sufficient to make a decision cannot be less than one quarter of the total number of deputies.

The draft constitution states that political parties are the inalienable factors of democratic political life. According to the draft, political parties that advocate the defense and establishment in Turkey of the class principle, communism, fascism, theocracy or any kind of dictatorship cannot be instituted in Turkey. Political parties will not be able to join forces -- financially or morally — with associations, unions, funds or professional organizations of a public nature with the purpose of pursuing or enhancing their own politics.

The draft constitution envisages the establishment of a state consultative council with the aim of counselling the president.

The former president, former constitution court presidents and former chiefs of the General Staff will be natural members of the state consultative council. In addition, the president will appoint 20 members who have loftily served the state and the nation. The natural members and the 20 members appointed by the president will elect 10 more members. The state consultative council members will enjoy the same immunity as the legislators.

The draft also stipulates the establishment of an economic and social council as well as a state control council.

According to the draft constitution, workers and employers will be entitled to form unions and higher organizations without asking for a permit. Workers and employers will not be able to become members of more than one union. Unions will not be allowed to pursue political goals or engage in political activities. They will not be able to receive support from political parties or support political parties in return. Union, associations and professional organizations or funds of a public nature will not be able to act in union for these purposes. Union members will pay their dues directly to the union. Unions will not be entitled to use their incomes for purposes other than their declared goals and they will keep their strike and lock-out funds, which will be determined in their statutes, in national banks.

Collective wage agreements will not be allowed to include provisions that violate the laws, amend or cancel them. More than one collective wage agreement cannot be signed or implemented in the same work place during the same period of time. In case of disagreements during the course of the collective bargaining, the sides have the right to conduct strikes or lock-outs. The rights to strike or hold lock-outs cannot be used in contrary to the rules of good faith or in a way to damage the community or the national wealth. If a strike or lock-out is banned or deferred, the discord will be resolved by the high arbitration council. The draft constitution bans strikes and lock-outs with political goals, solidarity or general strikes and lock-outs, occupation of a work place, reduction of productivity and resistances. The work of those who do not participate in a strike cannot be obstructed in any way. Furthermore, unions, associations and professional organizations of a public nature cannot organize or participate in meetings or demonstrations outside their own area and goal.

OUR RADIO COMMENTARY VIEWS PRESIDENT'S POWER

TA170945 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0500 GMT 17 Jul 82

[Station commentary: "Extraordinary Powers"]

[Excerpts] The junta's constitution grants extraordinary powers to the President. This president, who is equipped with extraordinary powers from head to toe, does not even assume power through elections. He assumes power in an extraordinary way. Thus, the military dictatorship thinks it has ensured its presence for 7 years. Has it secured just its own safety? No it has also secured the safety of the NATO partnership as well. How? Among the extraordinary powers granted to the presidency that appear in the junta's constitution there is the following article: The president will be able to employ his extraordinary unlimited powers in the event the state's international obligations are under a (?close) and serious threat.

If we view the struggle of patriotic forces in the past and present we can understand which international agreements are considered to be under threat. The international agreement threatened by the people, the struggle for national independence and the patriotic movement is the one on NATO membership.

The junta has now formulated a constitutional article in connection with guarding NATO. The junta states that those who oppose NATO will be attacked by [presidential use of] extraordinary powers. The junta, has thus [word indistinct] the principle of national independence. Let us think, let us think of the days when the cries of "no to NATO" extended from one end of our country to the other. The patriotic forces and organizations were screaming that dependence on NATO was tantamount to destruction for our people, dependence on imperialism and especially slavery to American imperialism.

Let us ask ourselves what we need more. Do we need hospitals, kindergartens, milk and bread or arms? These arms are for the armed forces which are under the command of NATO. These arms are directed against our neighbors, the Soviet Union and the Arab peoples, on command from U.S. imperialism. Of the 119 NATO bases in the Mediterranean 61 are on Turkish soil. The Turkish people and army can not check on these bases and nuclear arms depots. The U.S. press has reported that activities at the bases stop as soon as Turkish officers approach these bases and that information on the bases is not given to Turkish officers. Each and everyone of these bases means death to our people. They represent a primary target in a nuclear war.

Why did we explain all this dear listeners? Because guarding NATO is becoming a constitutional article. It is being introduced in disguise. It comes in the following form: If our international agreements are threatened the president will be able to use his extraordinary powers. Then let us cry louder, no to NATO. No to the junta's constitution and no to NATO.

USSR CUTS BACK TELEPHONE LINKS 15 JULY

AU161932 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 16 Jul 82

[Text] In Vienna yesterday at 1910 hours local time it was registered that 20 of the 24 lines to Moscow have been idled by the Soviet postal service. Only four lines are now available for automatic dialing. This is far too few, according to the experience of the Austrian postal service, since a minimum of 15 are needed on the average. In many cases phone calls through manually operated exchanges are the only way out, and delays must be expected. The postal service explains the fact that no major delays occurred today, the first day of the cutback, by pointing out that many subscribers are using telex communications following the publications of press reports about the cutbacks.

[Text] Spain is to sell the Egyptian Navy 6 warships costing a total of $500 million. Two are to be Descubierta-class frigates and the other four are Cormoran-type fast patrol craft. The frigates have guns, missile-launchers, torpedo-launchers and rocket-launchers, and sophisticated electronic equipment including five different tracking systems. The most notable feature of the patrol craft is their great speed -- 36 knots. The six vessels for the Egyptian Navy will be built at Bazan yards.

EXPLOSIONS IN BASQUE CAPITALS REPORTED

[Text] Some 20 devices exploded last night at official buildings in the Basque capitals and Pamplona. Bombs went off at some 15 buildings including the navy headquarters in San Sebastian and the Institute of Social Security in Bilbao. There was only a small amount of damage as a result of the blasts and no one was hurt. These terrorist attacks were apparently carried out by ETA Politico-Militar.

An agency report just in says that two of the devices planted in different capitals have still not been exploded.

EEC'S HAFERKAMP CITED ON FRICTION WITH U.S.

PM200817 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 20 Jul 82 p 4

[Text] A serious worsening in the already fraught relations between the Common Market and the United States is in prospect EEC foreign ministers were told yesterday.

Reporting on talks last week between EEC Commission officials and the Reagan administration in Washington, Mr Haferkamp, the EEC commissioner for external trade policy, said the American response was "totally negative."

He is reported to have told the ministers that America remains inflexible on all current trade disputes and was thus "seriously mortgaging America's future relations with its European allies."

Mr Haferkamp was speaking on attempts by Community negotiators to reach a compromise with the Americans over the steel and pipeline disputes.

The Reagan government has effectively given the EEC until the end of the week to come up with a scheme to limit its steel shipments in American markets or face the prospect of punishing levies on its exports.

The United States claims that EEC steel companies benefit from unfair subsidies enabling them to undercut domestic producers and injure the American industry.

At the same time the United States has acted to bar the export to the Soviet Union of European gas pipeline equipment which involves the use of American technology. The ban has provoked outrage in Britain, Germany and France where it is feared it could lead to the loss of thousands of engineering jobs.

Mr Haferkamp said that the United States was "adamant" that even existing contracts could not be filfilled until Poland restored full respect for human and union rights.

Retaliation Possible

On steel, where duties of 40 percent, are proposed on shipments by British Steel Corporation among others, the Community has proposed a voluntary limitation in sales based on "traditional" levels.

The EEC foreign ministers will discuss the situation in detail today and may issue a formal protest, There is also the possibility that the Ten might take some retaliatory action by raising the question of tax concessions for American companies engaged in exports and even possibly threatening to boycott the new round of trade liberalisation talks due to begin in Geneva later this year.

Meanwhile efforts for a compromise will be continued in the next few days. The German economics minister, Count von Lambsdorff begins visit to the United States today and will be followed by the Italian Foreign Minister Sr Colombo, who will be meeting the American foreign and trade secretaries.

Herr Schmidt, the German chancellor, is to make a private visit to Mr Shultz, the American secretary of state and later in August the Danish Foreign Minister and President of the EEC Council Mr Olesen, is to make an official visit.

Mr Pym, the foreign secretary, is also planning to meet Mr Shultz in the near future.

KREISKY ON U.S. SANCTIONS, POLAND, MIDDLE EAST

AU191200 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 19 Jul 82 pp 1-2

[Thomas Chorherr report on exclusive interview with Chancellor Bruno Kreisky in Vienna -- no date given]

[Excerpt] The conversation now turns to foreign political aspects. The chancellor vehemently objects to the attempts of the Reagan administration to force the Soviets to their knees through a trade war that also involves the Europeans. "The economic West-East dependence is far too great for us to be able to afford to renounce cooperation." Rather, the logical consequence of a convulsion of the East bloc caused by trade embargoes would be the possible establishment of military dictatorships in other communist states as well, with unforeseeable consequences for world peace. "Trade repression merely strengthens the position of dictators," Kreisky argues.

That is why the West should seek to launch comprehensive economic aid to Poland, and this should be done through the ECE in Geneva, in which the Soviets also participate. "The ECE should be instructed to work out a plan for restoring Poland's viability, and in these endeavors one should not renounce Soviet participation," the chancellor says. He adds that it is virtually paradoxical that Poland finds itself in such desperate straits considering that it is one of Europe's richest countries in terms of natural resources and agricultural production potential.

Quite generally Kreisky takes a critical view of U.S. policy vis-a-vis Europe but advocates a "permanent dialogue."

The more the United States acts without concern vis-a-vis the Europeans -- for example in connection with the pipeline deal -- the more independently the European states are bound to proceed, he says. "But it is wrong to judge U.S. policy by European standards." What matters at present is to bridge the gap between the American and the European concepts.

Kreisky takes a pessimistic view of the Middle East situation. There, he says, it has been demonstrated -- and this can also serve as a yardstick for Austria's foreign policy -- that no big country comes to the aid of a small state that has been attacked. This can now be seen from the example of Lebanon and the PLO: "Even the Soviet Union does not help it; even the Soviets are fighting only for themselves."

Another lesson to be drawn from the Lebanon campaign is that while it is easy to start a war it is difficult to end it. "That has been experienced by the Soviet Union in Afghanistan, and that is now being experienced by Israel." In this context, Kreisky says he wants to "destroy a legend" that has been circulated by Israeli propaganda -- namely, that there was no chance for negotiations. "There have been many opportunities to negotiate, the most concrete of them was the Fahd plan by the present Saudi king. But the Israelis did not want to negotiate."

As far as the newly flared-up Gulf war is concerned, Kreisky also pins part of the blame on Israel: "They have supported Iran against the Iraqis with arms and equipment, and thus made possible the Iranian successes. Now no one knows where the Prophet's banner will be set up next. The people in the West have no idea what religious fanaticism means -- it involves a death wish."

And where does he see the motives for the Israeli support of the mullah regime? The chancellor resorts to a modified quotation of a saying attributed to Axel Oxenstjerna, famous Swedish chancellor in the Thirty Years' War: "The world does not know how much stupidity often reigns in it."

LAMBSDORFF ON WASHINGTON TALKS, U.S. EMBARGO

DW191039 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1800 GMT 17 Jul 82

[Interview with Minister of Economics Otto Graf Lambsdorff by reporter Schawer prior to departing for the United States; place not given -- videotaped]

[Text] [Question] President Reagan has prohibited the supply of American turbine parts for the Soviet gas pipeline to Europe. What role will this ban play in your talks in the United States?

[Answer] There is a large number of points I have to discuss, particularly in the economic and trade policy fields. This problem, on which public attention is particularly focused, will certainly also play an important role in the talks with the American Government and with U.S. congressmen.

[Question] What do you expect to result from the European Community's joint note addressed to Washington on this subject? What are the chances the ban will be lifted?

[Answer] I don't think the chances are great that the ban will be lifted in the near future. The European Community note, however, was correct and necessary because we must clarify our position politically as well as legally.

[Question] Is there any way to produce these turbine parts in the Federal Republic and thus circumvent the embargo?

[Answer] Up until now we have relied on buying such things in the United States, so there are no installations for such a production in our country. However, the Federal Republic is naturally capable of producing turbines and motors, and that would not be circumvention. Of American licenses were used in one way or an other, this would be circumvention; independent production of such technology is not cirumvention.

GENSCHER ON MIDDLE EAST VISIT, SOVIET ROLE

DW191203 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1710 GMT 18 Jul 82

[Interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher by reporter Peter Ellgaard in Cairo; date not given -- videotaped]

[Excerpt] [Question] Mr Minister, what chances do Western efforts [to solve the Middle East problem] have if the Soviet Union isn't included? What role does Moscow have to play in the search for a long-term solution to the Middle East problem?

[Answer] A long term, permanent and comprehensive peaceful settlement will certainly also have to be discussed with the Soviet Union. In the Middle East area, however, the Arabs must first agree among themselves. Therefore, King Hussyn and President Mubarak are interested in a meeting of Arab statesmen to find a common position. Then it is necessary for the West to say something so as to convince Israel that its security and existence will best be ensured in the long term through good and friendly relations with all Arab states. This naturally includes the implementation of the Palestinians' right to self-determiniation.

An increasing number of voices in the Arab camp demand mutual recognition by the PLO, on the one hand, and Isreal, on the other, so as to clear the way for substantial negotiations. This all shows that those forces in the Arab camp which see the way out in peaceful and political solutions have gained considerable ground.

If there is a country which has set an example in this respect, it is Egypt where we now are. Egypt has peacefully regained its territory through the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty. Other states, too -- such as Jordan, Saudi Arabia and many others -- also favor a moderate policy, a policy aimed at a peaceful solution, that is at safeguarding peace in this region.

[Question] Mr Minister, there is always the demand for the Palestinians' right to self-determination. Isn't there the danger that this demand could become an empty formula? I mean, how should it be concretely implemented? The question is where the Palestinians should go.

[Answer] Our views agree with those of the Arabs who do not consider it an empty formula at all. If you define what is behind all this, it means that the Palestinians themselves must decide on their future. Neither the Europeans, the Israelis, the United States nor anybody else can do this. Therefore, the necessity of withdrawing from the occupied territories is always linked to this demand.

Talks With Mubarak

DW161043 Cologne Deutsche Welle in German to Western Europe 0610 GMT 16 Jul 82

[Interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher by reporter Manfred Mueller-Witte in Cairo; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Minister, what do you consider the most important aspect of your talks with President Mubarak with which you concluded your Middle East visit to Jordan and Egypt?

[Answer] These talks confirmed once again our view that it is necessary particularly now to give the Palestinians a sign of hope, a political perspective for implementing their right to self-determination. Nothing would be more dangerous than creating the impression that a solution to the Lebanon problem and to the current Beirut problem will also bring a solution to the Palestinian problem. No, now is the time when these basic problems of the Middle East must be solved. [sentence as heard] We absolutely agree on this with the Jordanian leaders as well as with the leaders here in Cairo.

[Question] Are there any concrete indications regarding the political perspective of a solution with regard to the Palestinian movement?

[Answer] I believe that all Arab leaders, or most of them, are interested in a summit meeting at the moment to define the Arab position. We, the FRG as a member of the European Community, must try particularly at this time to outline our basic position with regard to the right to self-determination because under no circumstances must estrangement between the Arabs and the West be allowed to occur. The European Community must play an important role in this respect, and naturally we are interested in coordination with our American friends to work out a common position for the West. President Mubarak, as well as King Husayn, told us expressly that they are not interested in a confrontation between Europeans and Americans. Quite the contrary, they want the Europeans to be successful in convincing the Americans of the European position, which the Arabs consider to be realistic position.

[Question] The Egyptian president used your joint press conference to address an appeal, an initiative, to the Arab world. Can you say what motives lie behind this?

[Answer] The concern that by merely solving the Lebanon issue, as important as it is, the problem would be geographically shifted, so to speak. In other words, new instability would arise as well as radicalization in the Palestinian Arab camp. Nobody is interested in this.

Thus I believe that it would be reasonable for responsible statesmen of the Arab camp to say: Now we must get together, now we must see how we can work out a peaceful solution.

[Question] In connection with the war between Iran and Iraq and in connection with the new Ethiopian-Somalian conflict, the Egyptian president said that a game of the big powers is involved here. Were you asked about this problem? What is your opinion?

[Answer] I was not asked about it. You could certainly put it another way. If it had been possible to achieve stability here in the Middle East through a lasting, comprehensive and stable peace process, other problems would concern us less than they do now.

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON DISARMAMENT TALKS

[Excerpt] Augsburg, 19 Jul (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has called on the Soviet Union to give a signal in the current U.S.-Soviet disarmament negotiations on intermediate-range missiles in Europe and on long-range weapons. In an interview for AUGSBURGER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG, he expressed the expectation that the Soviet Union would at long last be prepared to consent definitively to the American President's proposal for a meeting between President Reagan and General Secretary Brezhnev.

Genscher said that the USSR bears a "considerable responsibility" for the success of the disarmament negotiations. He left no doubt that in the event of their failure the NATO alliance would have to modernize its arms.

He thinks that by the early summer of 1983 it will be clear whether the Soviet Union is prepared to accept the "zero option" we have proposed for eurostrategic weapons. A renunciation by both sides of land-based intermediate-range missiles would, in Genscher's view, be "a tremendous advance because, for the first time, we would be removing altogether a new weapon from the arsenals of both sides."

REPORT SEES SHIFT IN EUROPE'S MILITARY BALANCE

[Text] Bonn, 19 Jul (DPA) -- In view of the current tensions and conflicts in the world, efforts to achieve arms control and disarmament are, in the federal government's view, more necessary that ever. The limited concrete results of such efforts in recent years are unsatisfactory, says the federal government's first report on "the state of efforts to achieve arms control and disarmament and changes in the military balance of power in 1982." The report was published in the Bundestag today. Parliament requested it last March.

According to the Bundestag press center, the report says that because of the "unprecedented conventional and nuclear arms buildup" of the Warsaw Treaty and the relative restraint of NATO, the numerical balance of power has shifted in favor of the Warsaw Pact. NATO land forces in Europe number 2.6 million men are facing 4 million Warsaw Pact soldiers. Promising arms control negotiations are possibly only on the basis of a manifestly adequate defense capability and preparedness.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ON STRUCTURAL CRISIS

[J. Juergen Jeske editorial: "Incapable of Changing"]

[Text] The convulsions of the structural change in the federal republic are becoming increasingly evident. Last year nearly 12,000 companies had to declare bankruptcy or seek a settlement with their creditors -- a sad postwar record. This year the number will be much greater, probably about 15,000 companies. In this process an increasing number of structures are collapsing which years ago people considered to be impressive, stable constructions. Now, the number two German electrical corporation, AEG-Telefunken, which has been ailing for years, is on the brink of disaster and can be kept going only with public emergency assistance.

Many people are reminded of the 1931 crisis. This crisis likewise became acute through large-scale bankruptcy -- the collapse of the Nordwolle Textile Corporation as a result of ill-conceived speculation, which, after an abortive attempt by the state at the time to save the company, also pulled the Darmstaedter and National Bank (Danatbank) along into the abyss. A settlement or a bankruptcy of the AEG would also entail consequences in the circle of the financing banks. It is hard to say how dangerous these consequences would be. It would be serious if they would coincide with other risks of the credit institutes. Dangerous rumors about an alleged staggering of a German bank already have made the rounds on the extremely sensitive international financial markets in the past few days.

The oversensitiveness of the financial world is understandable, because it is not the federal republic alone where signs of crisis are discernible. There are the risks emanating from credits granted to East bloc states and Latin American countries. In the United States the decrease in the oil price made the exploration boom collapse; this leads to credit losses by U.S. banks. In Canada a surveyer company, the Dome Petroleum, had to undertake a huge refunding operation. The watch industry in Switzerland is in a crisis. In Italy the biggest private banking group, the Ambrosiano, is a basket case. In Austria the Semperit tire manufacturer needs state assistance.

If we add to all this the insecurity of the economic cycle, then there are indeed some oppressing parallels to the situation of 1931. By the same token, however, there are as many differences. Grossly simplified, the world economic crisis was an extremely vehement cyclic reaction to a preceding, exaggerated economic expansion; the whole thing was aggravated by the belated consequences of World War I. What we are dealing with today is a profound structural adaptation. This development is being intensified by measures aimed at counteracting inflation and by a worldwide crisis of state indebtedness. Both entail a high interest level which makes the burden of adaptation even heavier. History simply does not repeat itself, and crises can well be talked into existence. The belated experiences of the past nevertheless may well serve as an early warning today.

Then and now the question was and is what and how the state should intervene. Interventions probably would be imperative if the purging crisis also threatened sound companies. But this has hardly been the case to date. In the case of the AEG the call for the state involves an ailing enterprise which, what is even worse, operates in areas where excessive capacities exist. Federal Economic Minister Graf Lambsdorff said in the past few weeks: "Structures must constantly change, and this can only mean that companies have to go which are not adequately capable of assimilation to a changing environment." Thus, what we still have today is that in the very same branch, folding companies are offset by flourishing corporations, the AEG and Siemens providing a case study.

As strong a structural change as that taking place in the federal republic means that the cases of emergency will rather amass. The shipbuilding branch has been subsidized for years. Now the ailing steel industry on the Saar and Ruhr (which also is a victim of wrong European economic policy, however) is receiving subsidies with amply uncertain chance of long-term successes. Even if we leave the principles of the economic system aside, we nevertheless cannot but wonder where all this is supposed to end up. Constantly more funds for companies and branches in distress? The public coffers are empty anyway. Is the end supposed to be a matted, state supported industry like in Italy?

What primarily makes the present situation so oppressive is the obvious loss for answers. Everything is deadlocked somehow: a rien ne vas plus, a "no more action" of its own particular nature. The wheel of credits is turning constantly more slowly because new credits are primarily used for repaying old debts. We allow 15,000 companies with nearly 500,000 jobs go bankrupt without making any great fuss about it, but on the other hand we are reluctant to let a combine like the AEG, which grew by the erroneous purchase of other companies, to fall apart again. The trade unions wish to preserve jobs but refuse to make any concessions. We pursue a social policy which blocks the enterprising flexibility which is so very necessary in the structural change. We curtail the risk bonuses for enterprises at a time when risk constantly increases. The assimilation crisis is not our fate; what could become our fate though is a lack of ability to adapt to this crisis.

WEST BERLIN COURT ACQUITS POLISH HIJACKERS

[Excerpt] Berlin, 19 Jul (DPA) -- On Monday a West Berlin court, for the first time in a trial concerning a plane hijacking, acquited two Poles, including the pilot who had redirected the plane himself. The court gave as its reason the fact that in view of the political situation in Poland the accused had fled out of excusable necessity. The Lot airplane had been rerouted to West Berlin while on a domestic flight on 12 February.

COLOMBO SAYS U.S. MUST REVISE DECISIONS

AU191928 Rome ANSA in English 1920 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Brussels, July 19 -- At the end of the foreign ministers meeting here today the Italian diplomatic chief Emilio Colombo stressed that although the essential nature of relations between the EEC and the United States was underscored at today's session, "no one can negotiate in our name and in our assent on problems that affect us".

This was in particular reference to the Soviet gas pipeline and export credits.

Prior to his departure for Rome, Colombo said that the European Economic Community was ready to open "a constructive dialogue" with the United States starting with a unitary and global vision of these relations.

He stressed the "essential importance" of EEC-U.S. ties, both in themselves and in the context of East-West relations. However, this relationship must be among equals, he said, adding that this entails a revision of recent Washington decisions which have harmed European interests.

SOCIALISTS SUPPORT LEBANON FORCE INVOLVEMENT

PM191335 Rome AVANTI in Italian 16 Jul 82 pp 1-2

[Apparent text of 15 July "PSI Directorate Statement"]

[Text] The PSI directorate approves the party secretary's report on the complex and in many respects tragic situation in Lebanon and the Middle East.

The PSI agrees with the idea of Italy's participation in a multinational military peace force which, if accepted by all the sides involved in the current conflict, could facilitate the solution of the present very dangerous situation as well as put an end to all military interference and provide new conditions for a future of peace and restored national sovereignty for Lebanon and for the start of a new constructive phase based on negotiation and mutual recognition. It must be carefully assessed on this basis and on the basis of clear conditions and objectives, encouraged. Italy should immediately state its full willingness in principle.

Very serious anxiety and alarm are prompted by the developments of the Iran-Iraq war, with the present total of deaths, the further destablization of an extremely sensitive region and the more than potential threat of a flareup of fanaticism and of a conflagration which, unless brought under control right away, could spread and involve a vast geographical area.

The PSI directorate stresses the need for Italian and European peace initiatives with respect to the very delicate Middle East chessboard and in this same direction supports the initiative that must also involve the Socialist International.

FOREIGN MINISTRY DETAILS 1982 FOREIGN AID

[Text] (ANSA) Rome, 17 July -- Seventy-nine percent of the funds Italy has set aside for Third World development aid in 1982 has already been committed, according to a note released here today by the Foreign Ministry. The ministry also gave the following figures in terms of funds Italy has allocated to development cooperation.

The seventy-nine percent already committed for this year amounts to over 1,200 billion lire (or around 950 million dollars).

The total allocated for this year is 1,530 billion lire, with 677 billion going to multilateral aid and 853 billion going to bilateral aid. The latter includes 422 billion in food aid and cooperation funds and another 430 billion in aid credit.

As to the geographical distribution of this assistance, the Farnesina noted said that 50.2 percent of the food aid and cooperation fund and 63 percent of the aid credit was earmarked for countries in Sub-Saharan Africa. Moreover, 35.5 percent of the fund and 43.4 percent of the credit is earmarked for the less developed countries.

The figures testify to the actions of the ministry's department for development cooperation in the context of Italy's greatly heightened aid contribution to the Third World over the past four years (226 billion in 1979 compared to 1,530 billion in 1982).

SPADOLINI TO RESIGN IF MEASURES NOT PASSED

[Excerpts] (ANSA) Rome, July 19 -- After a week of relative calm within the government majority, polemics have broken out again. Premier Giovanni Spadolini has asked his ministers to refrain from making any statement with regard to measures under study to present to the parliament by July 31. These measures have to do with financial legislation and the state budget for next year.

However, the ministers seem about ready to forget Spadolini's request for a temporary blackout. Liberal Party Secretary Valerio Zanone told Sunday's concluding session of his party's national council that the ministers seemed to be surrounded by an atmosphere more conducive to a barroom brawl.

Social Democrat Luigi Preti noted that the polemics were often only a pretext to fight, and that unity was now needed if the government was to meet its July 31 deadline.

Spadolini himself said that if the financial legislation did not pass then, he would resign on August 1st, Turin's "LA STAMPA" wrote Sunday. This is a phrase he has never hazarded before, observers noted.

POLISH FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES IN ROME

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 19 -- The Polish Foreign Minister, Jozef Czyrek, arrived in Rome this morning for talks in the Vatican on the upcoming visit to Poland to be conducted by Pope John Paul II.

Informed sources at the Holy See said that the foreign minister will meet today with the Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, and will be received by the pope tomorrow.

Czyrek is expected to remain in Rome until Thursday when he will return to Warsaw accompanied by the Polish Roman Catholic primate, Msgr. Jozef Glemp.

Also on the diplomatic chief's schedule for today is a meeting with the Italian foreign minister, Emilio Colombo.

Pope's Visit to Poland

NC191600 Paris AFP in English 1540 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Text] Vatican City, July 19 (AFP) -- A meeting here today between Polish Foreign Minister Jozef Czyrek and Vatican Secretary of State Agostino Cardinal Casaroli brought unofficial confirmation that Pope John Paul II would probably have to put off his planned visit to Poland, which he had hoped to make next month.

Informed sources here said that the hour-long meeting, held shortly after Mr Czyrek flew in from Warsaw today, had been entirely devoted to the pontiff's travel plans.

According to the sources, it now appears out of the question that Pope John Paul will visit his homeland on August 26 due to the difficult domestic situation there. The trip had been planned to coincide with the 600th anniversary of the Black Virgin of Czestochowa.

Mr Czyrek is to meet John Paul II tomorrow at the pope's summer residence in Castelgandolfo. He will return to Warsaw Thursday, accompanied by Polish Primate Jozef Glemp, who has been in Rome since July 5.

VATICAN BANKER ALLEGEDLY INVOLVED IN ARMS DEALS

AU171855 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 17 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 17 -- American Bishop Paul Marcinkus, the director of the Vatican Bank, appears to be indirectly involved in arms deals with South America, according to the Rome daily LA REPUBBLICA.

In a long article appearing in today's issue, the paper analyzed the complicated relations between the Vatican Bank and Roberto Calvi, the president of Italy's largest private sector bank whose corpse was found hanging from a London bridge one month ago.

Marcinkus, a native of Cicero, Illinois, also acts as the pope's bodyguard on papal trips abroad and organizes the trips, including the recent Papal peace mission to Britain and Argentina.

The arms deals with which Calvi's Banco Ambrosiano was involved -- as implicitly was the Vatican Bank and its director -- have allegedly "embittered and perhaps irritated and disgusted the pope who withdrew to his summer residence three days ago", the paper said.

The reports of arms deals involving the Vatican, and which purportedly continued through the Falklands war, did not crop up purposefully at this moment, the paper added, but were first denounced one year ago in the Italian parliament.

The paper went on to cite another episode which has added to the shadow enveloping Marcinkus: An "odd stopover in Nassau" during the Pope's visit to Mexico three years ago which even surprised the pilots. LA REPUBBLICA said the stopover must be linked with "the questionable initiatives taken by the director of the Vatican Bank: Nassau is the headquarters of one of Banco Ambrosiano's subsidaries on whose board of directors Marcinkus sat until one month ago when he was forced to resign under Vatican pressure".

Another episode cited by the paper took place in New York when Marcinkus went to organize the pope's visit to the United Nations. Asked by UN officials whether the pope wanted to begin the session with a prayer, Marcinkus is quoted as having said, "Let's skip it. Let's get down to business".

The paper concluded saying that the pope "certainly regrets not having listened to secretary of state Cardinal Agostino Casaroli when he advised him not to appoint Marcinkus governor of the Vatican state".

PCE CENTRAL COMMITTEE PASSES RESOLUTION

PM191517 Madrid MUNDO OBRERO in Spanish 9-15 Jul 82 pp 16-18

[Apparent text of 3 July PCE Central Committee resolution]

[Text] I -- For Peace, Disarmament and People's Independence

The PCE Central Committee expresses its anxiety about the increasing exacerbation of international tension and the dangerous arms race in which the military blocs are involved. It deems it necessary to promote, together with the other sectors of opinion, a great mass movement for peace and disarmament. It declares itself in favor, as intermediate stages in this process, of mutual and controlled denuclearization measures in Europe and in the Mediterranean area.

The Central Committee resolves to condemn with the utmost vigor the aggression against Lebanon and the Israeli genocide against the Palestinians, which have been possible because of U.S. complicity, and to promote specific actions of solidarity with the PLO's courageous fighters, who are defending their people's survival as such and their inalienable right to possess a state of their own.

It believes that Spain should act in the international sphere in favor of a negotiation which will restore sovereignty over the Malvinas to Argentina; in favor of solutions guaranteeing the right to independence and freedom for the peoples of Latin America, oppressed today by tyrannies supported by the United States; for a solution ensuring for the people of the Sahara the right to self-determination; for peace in the Near East and between Iran and Iraq; for the peaceful reunification of the Korean nation, and, in general, for respect for and noninterference by some countries in others' affairs and for the negotiated resolution of all the conflicts endangering world peace.

The Central Committee believes that the course taken by the Reagan administration in adopting economic measures hostile to Europe's interests and in attempting to lead the European peoples into a trade war against the Soviet Union and into an increase in the nuclear arsenal with a view to a "limited war" on our continent constitutes a grave threat to peace and cooperation. Under these conditions, the decision to join NATO appears even more undesirable and dangerous for our country. The PCE pledges itself to demand in the next Cortes the interruption of the procedure for joining NATO and the calling of a referendum to enable the Spanish people to express their wishes on this issue.

The Central Committee rejects the agreements between the government and the U.S. administration for the continuation of the U.S. military bases on our territory negotiated at the end of the parliamentary session and without the slightest publicity.

The PCE declares itself in favor of a policy favorable to the simultaneous dissolution of the military blocs, the removal of foreign military bases and the elimination of all remnants of colonialism, including the occupation of Gibraltar by Britain.

The PCE declares itself in favor of a Spanish policy of active neutrality.

The Central Committee believes that the most nobly human and, at the same time, most revolutionary task today is to preserve world peace at all costs, ending through negotiation the conflicts threatening it.

II -- A policy of a Democratic Front

In examining the national situation, the Central Committee believes that we are in the presence of the danger of a grouping of the rightwing forces around the popular alliance and Mr Fraga Iribarne -- a grouping helped by Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo's policy. A victory for the right would entail the danger of a revision of the most progressive aspects of the Constitution and of an intensification of social tension through attempting to resolve the economic crisis at the expense of the workers and of the poorest social sectors; that is, a grave social and political regression which would weaken and endanger more gravely the democratic system.

The threat of the broad right has become something really disturbing and grave.

The broad right has caused the crisis in the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] and has facilitated the trend toward the bipolarization of Spanish political life. If this course is continued, the choice between a Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] which has moved toward moderate, more rightwing stances and which breaks its bridges with the PCE and other democratic forces, and a tough, traditional right, grouped around Fraga Iribarne, could appear as the only alternative confronting our people. Under these conditions a PSOE alternative, which, isolated from the democratic forces as a whole, would be in no position to withstand the pressure of the actual powers and the oligarchy, would not satisfy the desire for real change felt by the majority of our people and could serve as a pretext for any reactionary adventure.

The consequences of the lack of a policy of democratic concentration in the process of change are now being noted quite clearly. That policy, which was based on the need for a common front of the workers' and leftwing forces with the progressive bourgeoisie in order to surmount in depth the traditional obstacles to democratic change, had no champion but the Communist Party, which, however, because of the weaknesses in its work pointed out at the 10th congress, particularly its insufficient link with the masses, did not succeed in mobilizing the latter broadly in favor of that policy. The right opposed everything that meant an approach to that democratic front, as was already seen when Ferrer Salat denounced the Mongloa pacts from the United States, as if it were a matter of setting up Soviets in Spain. The right was seeking to keep all its institutional and economic redoubts intact, and largely suceeded, causing the disenchantment and disillusionment of considerable working class sectors toward the change.

The PSOE, without a clear idea of Spanish reality, believed that the approval of the Constitution had already turned Spain into an advanced and consolidated democracy, from which the dangers of regression had disappeared and in which a peaceful alternation in power between a social democratic party and a conservative right could be practiced. Despite the PCE's open and unitary stances and our real independence, the PSOE displayed from the beginning of the change a clear tendency to ignore the communists, the reduce us and disregard us, objectively helping the residual ideology of Francoism -- gut anticommunism.

These stances on the part of the PSOE changed only temporarily, at certain moments, on the one hand, when the 23 February -- [1981 -- date of attempted coup] it saw that its hopes about the disappearance of the regressive danger were unreal, and, on the other hand, when it found, following the municipal elections, that it needed the Communist votes to take over local government in very important cities and towns.

But the fact is that the PSOE never realized the need for cooperation between the left and the reformist bourgeoisie, and that it contributed to a dynamic of bipolarization unfavorable in short to real change.

With that dynamic and under the pressure of the actual and economic powers, the UCD shifted increasingly rightward, and Fraga, who had been contained in the 1977 and 1979 elections, now finds his elections prospects improving, thanks to the activity of Calvo-Sotelo, who has cleared his path of obstacles and difficulties.

In light of this situation the PCE Central Committee makes an appeal to the PSOE to reconsider the dangers entailed by the policy of bipolarization and to declare itself clearly in favor of a policy of a democratic front and of cooperation among all sincerely progressive and constitutional forces, without concessions to the gut anticommunism advocated by Francoism.

We make this apeal out of our desire for unity with the Socialists, which is necessary in order to secure a broad democratic front of forces.

The Central Committee also urges the people and sectors of the reformist bourgeoisie to realize the need for a center party free from rightist excrescences, capable of cooperating with the left and necessary for national democratic balance.

Another way to curb in the short-and medium-term the traditional right's return to the government and to guarantee the enhancement and consolidation of freedoms is unlikely to be found today.

In expressing itself in this way, the PCE is performing its duty of telling the people the truth about the situation and the dangers which it entails, without concessions to facileness, as it has always done; the PCE confirms its will to defend the Constitution, enhance and consolidate democratic freedoms and make progress in building the state of the autonomies.

III -- Changing the Course of Social Policy

One of the factors which has contributed to the exacerbation of the situation is the social policy of the UCD and its governments and the way in which it has tackled the problems of the economic crisis. The UCD has constantly yielded to the pressures of the Spanish Confederation of Employers' Organizations [CEOE]; has created grave obstacles to the trade unions' consolidation by denying them the restoration of trade union assets; has refused to practice a policy of national solidarity to tackle the crisis; has been stingy in retirement pensions and conservative as regards the growth of unemployment, and has displayed no imagination in seeking solutions to one of the gravest social problems -- youth unemployment.

Moreover, through the workers' statute and decrees such as that concerning seasonal work, they have done their utmost to facilitate unrestricted dismissal, agreeing to the CEOE's demands. The PCE expresses is opposition to this decree and will adopt the appropriate measures to secure its repeal.

The sole exception to this course is the national agreement on employment, imposed thanks to the united actions of the workers commissions and the general workers' union, with the workers parties' support, which could now be called into question by an early dissolution of the Cortes and which at any event would have to be supplemented with a plan of greater scope to provide more substantial and decisive solutions to the problem of unemployment. We certainly must emphasize the failure to implement the national agreement on employment in the point concerning the replacement of community work by unemployment benefit for agricultural workers.

The government's inability to control inflation, which will exceed 13 percent at the end of this year, represents a particular loss for social sectors and workers without half-yearly review of their wages. Such as, among others, pensioners and public administration workers. The Central Committee, in denouncing this fact, resolves to submit a question to the government, demanding measures to offset the losses represented for these sectors by the upsurge in inflation. Inflation also harms the small farmers, who find their purchasing power diminishing daily. Consequently, the UCD's social policy, too tied to the class interests of the employers' leadership, has led to increased unemployment, the rise in the cost of living and the reduction of the purchasing power of the workers, the middle classes and the underpriviliged sectors of the population, which feel unprotected. All this has resulted in dissatisfaction and disenchantment with the results of the change.

One of the aims of the course of a democratic front and of cooperation between the left and the reformist bourgeoisie must be a new economic and social policy, based on the principle of solidarity, which would approach the problems of the crisis in a progressive manner and facilitate the trade unions' responsible activity by restoring to them the resources necessary for that purpose.

The Central Committee makes an appeal to all workers and to party comrades to support resolutely in the process of the trade union elections now in progress the lists of candidates of the workers commissions' C.S. [as published] and that federation's success in those elections.

IV -- Defending the Autonomies Against the Organic Law on the Harmonization of the Autonomy Process

The organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process is one of the laws characteristic of the regressive policy practiced since 23 February.

The need to rationalize the autonomy process and lay down more clearly the channels and time limits for transforming the centralist state into a state of the autonomies was a widely shared conviction. Our party was the first to express this need, long before 23 February.

That is why the PCE took part in the first stage of the negotiations for the autonomy pact, although expressing its disagreement with the Catalonian and Basque nationalist minorities' absence from them.

But when the issue of the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process was reached and we were asked to sign it in order to take part in the agreements, we were excluded from the negotiation when we refused to do so.

The organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process entailed a revision of the statutes which had been approved and of Title VIII of the Constitution itself, with the effect of a reduction of the autonomies and of a regression toward centralism, which would create grave problems in the autonomous communities, hampering instead of facilitiating the process of creating the state of the autonomies.

Surprisingly, instead of being signed by the parties endorsing it, it was signed by the head of government in his capacity as such and by the PSOE secretary general.

And in these days, when it has been debated and approved in parliament, the absence and lack of interest of a large number of UCD deputies has contrasted with the presence and decisive participation of the SPOE, which has appeared as the principal protagonist of the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process.

But what confirms the PCE's reservations about the law is the fact that it s authors themselves have included an additional amendment which delays its implementation for 5 months, so that the constitutional court can advise on its validity.

This is the first time that the authors of a law have in fact acknowledged that it may not be constitutional.

But everything in the case of the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process is strange and unusual. Its introduction was concealed at the outset with a report requested from a group of experts, and, in the end, other experts -- the members of the constitutional court -- are asked to confirm or deny its validity. The image presented is that the Congress of Deputies and the majority parties endorsing it are unloading their responsibility on the experts; an image which certainly does not help strengthen the democratic institutions' prestige and authority.

The RCE Central Committee believes in short that what has happened justifies all those of us who have opposed that law. The organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process should be amended by a political agreement among all the parties concerned before it becomes the criterion for rationalizing the autonomy process.

V -- The PCE and the Next Election

The Central Committee believes that the general election should be held at the constitutional time -- that is, in the spring of 1983; that bringing it forward would give the country an image of dangerous instability and political insecurity capable of influencing abstention and the direction of the voting. It therefore instructs the Communist parliamentary group to make all the decisions within its power favorable to the constitutional time being observed.

At any event, the party should prepare itself seriously for a likely early election, which, in the opinion of the majority parties in the current parliament, could take place in mid-November.

In that event, the Central Committee deems it essential to draft previously an electoral law which will strictly respect the principle of proportionality enshrined in the Constitution and rectify the injustice of the decree under which the 1977 and 1979 elections were held, and which, with the D'Hont rule and the distribution of the minimum by constituencies, falsifies that principle.

The Central Committee resolves to appoint at this plenum a central election committee, whose role will be to begin to prepare the campaign, and specifically:

(A) Drawing up the election program.

(B) Organizing the preliminary election campaign.

(C) Studying the lists of candidates.

(D) Preparing the image campaign, using the modern resources appropriate for the purpose.

(E) Seeking the financial resources necessary to conduct an effective campaign worthy of the PCE.

The Central Committee will discuss the election program at one of its coming meetings.

VI -- The Last Election in Andalusia

In view of the prospect of a general election, the Central Committee deems it necessary to pinpoint some of the experiences of the last Andalusian election, in which the Communist Party lost a very considerable portion of its vote in favor of the PSOE.

The principal factors which, in the Central Committee's opinion, influenced this results are as follows:

(A) The whole atmosphere created around the election presented it to the public as a confrontation between the PSOE (well established in Andalusia, with the personality of Escuredo which we had helped strengthen and those of its national leaders -- Gonzalez and Guerra) and the right, which was embodied more specifically in the ruling party. This atmosphere helped create the psychosis of the useful vote and worked against us.

(B) In our tactics, as in those of the PSOE, the principal opponent was the UCD -- the ruling party -- whereas in fact this role was already being assumed by the popular alliance, which, despite its previous weak position in Andalusia, was becoming, with the employers' support, the center of attraction for the voters influenced by the right.

In concentrating our criticism and attacks on the UCD and in waging our campaign with the slogan "Together we can," and in favor, generally, of a triumph for the left, even though we place the Communist Party's role within it, we did so as complementary to that of the PSOE. In practice we were helping to increase the trend of the "useful vote" for the PSOE and to confirm the elections as a confrontation between the right and the PSOE. There were even speakers of ours who called for voting not for the party but for the left.

(C) The Communist Party of Andalusia [PCA] had a good program in general. But the electorate did not come to be acquainted with it; it was not in time. What became known most was the issue of the complete agrarian reform, which in some instances was not sufficiently explained, and this caused voters in the industrial areas and in service industries, the middle classes and the professionals not to become acquainted with our platform. At the same time, the achievements of the party's government policy in the municipalities were not used sufficiently in propaganda at the local level.

(D) The image campaign was very ill-advised and poor. It was not personalized sufficiently and was watered down excessively. Moreover, the financial resources at our disposal, compared with those of the PSOE, the UCD, the Popular Alliance, and even the Socialist Party of Andalusia, were so disproportionate that while those parties filled hoardings, press and radio, our presence did not go far beyond the campaign of rallies, and the great mass of voters who do not go to rallies did not learn what we supported and what we were proposing.

(E) In addition, the Communist Party's crisis at the national level has objectively helped the PSOE, especially because of the gross manipulation conducted on the basis of it by the news media. For months the image has been conveyed of an undemocratic communist party, on the one hand, anti-Soviet, on the other hand, opposed to renewal, Eurocommunist outwardly and Stalinist within, laborist and hostile to the forces of culture, as contrasted with the other leftwing party -- the PSOE -- whose aims seemingly did not differ so much from outs but whose democratic nature was not disputed, despite the fact that in reality it has been characterized by an administratively imposed monolithism.

The utilization of our crisis in this way had a very clear purpose, to reduce our area of influence, strengthen the PSOE and help the two-party system and bipolarization. And it must be acknowledged that that aim was achieved partly in Galicia and especially in Andalusia.

Moreover, the party's crisis in Andalusia had its own peculiarities, such as the indifference and lack of direct involvement in the campaign on the party of a good many very distinguished trade union communist cadres, who in other elections had been propagandists and even candidates.

In addition, the PCA's fundamental problems remained unresolved at the time of the election. The leadership headed by Comrade Felipe Alcaraz had little time and did not secure the minimum resources essential for running the PCA and implementing the second congress' organizational resolutions.

All these factors influenced the outcome, alhtough it would be unfair not to add that thousands of comrades made a self-sacrificing and enthusiastic effort and busied themselves fully, and that, despite the election setback, the PCA has a strength and roots which make it possible to contemplate an early recovery and progress, if the causes are corrected.

VII -- A PCE Linked to Society

The Central Committee, analyzing the consequences of the internal crisis, deems it necessary to make the greatest efforts to surmount them, bearing in mind, moreover, that we are confronted with the next general election.

For this reason the party must emerge from the position of withdrawal in which the crisis has placed it and go over to a far more offensive position.

The party must mobilize its forces and energies, which are many, homogenize its message, surmount the effects of demoralization and maintain a clear policy of openness.

Openness toward the forces of labor and culture: The Communists imbued with a traditional culture, who do not agree with the critical stances toward the system of the countries of so-called real socialism, have their place in its ranks, just like those who feel more boldly renewalist. The division and dispersal of the forces espousing the party's ideas currently helps only the class opponent and those advocating an attack on the democratic system.

The Eurocommunist conception approved years ago by a majority of the party -- a conception which this Central Committee meeting reaffirms -- excludes no sector of the party. Its doors are open for those who once left it to return without any humiliation and for all those who believe that a genuine socialist revolution, combining equality with freedom and socialism with democracy, is necessary, to join it.

The Central Committee regards as futile and negative all attempts to seek solutions in new groups or parties, which, despite their renewalist or unifying programs, contribute nothing, and, if anything, reduce the workers movement's prospects of progress.

The unity of the left and of the forces of progress at the national and international level cannot be more than the outcome of the actually existing convergence of currents and parties, with historical roots, and our party has demonstrated that it has the most advanced conception in this field with its proposal of the new political grouping.

The PCE must undoubtedly strive to raise the quality of work of its leadership bodies, and to achieve this, this Central Committee meeting is already adopting decisions which constitute a step in that direction. And at the same time it must work resolutely to implement the course approved at the 10th congress of bringing the leaderships and those elected by the people closer to the grassroots, and to insert the party as a whole more deeply into the social fabric, to assimilate the new phenomena and to guarantee constant democratic functioning. This should be the concern of each cadre and each member in his actual party work.

In view of the closeness of a general election, the Central Committee calls on all party members and all its supporters, wherever they are, to busy themselves fully in this battle.

The PCE will run in it with its program, with its image and with its candidates, and will call for the people's voting unequivocally for itself.

Voting for the PCE will mean voting for change, for progress, for the enhancement and consolidation of democracy and for the formation of a front of the forces of the left and of the reformist bourgeoisie, which, basing itself on the mobilization of the people, will curb the rightward shift and raise a barrier against the dangers of regression, guaranteeing the supremacy of the civil power; a front which will guarantee the defense of the Constitution, freedoms and peace -- the only formula capable of effecting a safe change in Spain.

PAPER REGRETS U.S. REJECTION OF SEA LAW PACT

[Editorial: "New Law of the Sea Without the United States"]

[Text] President Ronald Reagan's announcement that the United States will not sign the new UN law of the sea convention came as no surprise but is nevertheless regrettable because the announcement is undoubtedly a new setback for cooperation between the major industrial nations and the developing countries. Without U.S. involvement the convention cannot possibly be what it was originally intended to be — in particular the arrangements which regard sea bed resources outside coastal states' territorial waters and economic zones as "mankind's joint inheritance" and which formalize the international cooperation to be set up to exploit this inheritance. Only the United States has at its disposal the technology and capital needed for mining activities at great ocean depths in the foreseeable future.

Ever since it came to power the Reagan administration has viewed some of the new law of the sea proposals with great skepticism, especially the regulations intended to regulate mining on the sea bed. These state, for example, that for every field they open with a view to their own profits the large mining companies must mine a corresponding amount to benefit the poorer nations. In this connection a new international ocean bed authority is to be set up to administrate and check on mining activities. At the same time the convention calls for "the transfer of technology" from countries possessing expertise in sea bed mining to countries which do not.

These proposals give rise to notions of some sort of "global socialist ideology" among some of Reagan's advisors, and even though the President made no direct mention of these fears in his announcement, they were nevertheless apparent when he said that the arrangements would "hinder the future development of mineral resources on the sea bed" and that the proposed decisionmaking process would not "fairly reflect or protect U.S. interests." Reagan also said that the stipulations for "the enforced transfer of private technology" to the new ocean bed authority was unacceptable.

As far as the other sections of the law of the sea convention are concerned the U.S. President took a more positive view and said that the regulations on maritime boundaries, shipping and free peaceful passage through straits, for example, are in full agreement with the interests of the United States and of all nations.

U.S. reservations are shared — at least in part — by the three EEC nations, Britain, West Germany and Italy. But unlike the Americans the British, West Germans and Italians clearly take the view that all the possibilities of "improving" the treaty have not yet been exhausted. But the remaining possibilities cannot be particularly encouraging.

TWO-PART FRG SUBMARINE PURCHASE SOUGHT

[Knut Falchenberg report: "Submarine Purchase To Be Staggered, but the Price Will Rise"]

[Excerpt] "Our West German partners had no difficulty in accepting the new Norwegian plan for submarine purchases. We are now aiming at two-part purchase plan under which the first four, five or six submarines will be ordered in September while the rest of the series will wait until the mid-nineties," Defense Ministry Under Secretary Oddmund Hammerstad told AFTENPOSTEN after yesterday's exploratory meeting in Bonn.

In return for the billion-kroner contract the Germans have promised to buy advanced military technology from Norway.

After Wednesday's meeting in Bonn it looks as if the major new submarine project has come a step closer to reality. The previous mammoth agreement has been replaced by a purchase plan with a more moderate thrust. This means that the strain placed on the defense budget will be spread more evenly, so that there will also be room to begin other important projects to maintain Norway's defense capability.

The exact number of submarines to be ordered in the present round has not yet been decided. The naval supply command in Bergen will negotiate with the German shipyards in the next few weeks the purchase of four, five or six new submarines, Hammerstad said. In the next week or two supply command will also present an interim report on the possibility of modernizing some of our present submarine fleet. "When it has been established how many of these aging Kobben submarines could be modernized, we can decide how many new ones are needed," Hammerstad said.

According to information received by AFTENPOSTEN the ministry's objective is for the navy to have 10 submarines, in the first instance a combination of old and new. When the Kobben submarines have reached their maximum life at some point in the mid-nineties, they will be scrapped and replaced by new vessels.

Spreading the purchase with one order this year and one in the nineties will increase the price of each individual submarine. The fewer ordered from German shipyards in September, the more expensive each will be. Originally a figure of 4.2 billion kroner was projected as the total price of a one-off order of eight submarines. Of this 2.6 billion kroner would go to the shipyards will the rest of the sum would cover computer equipment, sonar, periscopes and new types of torpedoes. Norway's negotiators believe today that if Norway only orders six submarines this year, they will cost almost around 80 percent of the shipyard price of eight. And if only four new submarines are ordered, the price will be around 62 percent of that of eight. This means that each submarine would be several million kroner more expensive if only four at a time are ordered.

A decision must be made by 30 September if price increases in the West German tender are to be avoided. The first submarine from an order this year would be ready for launching before 1988.

DAGENS NYHETER HITS SOVIET VISA PROBLEM

PM191315 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 15 Jul 82 p 12

[Ann-Marie Asheden report: "Peace March — Visa Problems for DAGENS NYHETER Journalist"]

[Excerpt] On Wednesday [14 July] Sweden approached the Soviet Embassy about the case of DAGENS NYHETER journalist Disa Hastad. The Foreign Ministry wanted to know why Hastad has still not been given a visa to cover the Nordic women's peace march to Minsk in the Soviet Union.

"We are waiting for an answer from Moscow," was the reply given to Foreign Ministry Political Chief Lennart Eckerberg by the Soviet ambassador.

In his briefing Eckerberg referred to the Helsinki Declaration, which the Soviet Union signed, thus committing itself to facilitating the work of journalists in the country.

"This is the most we can make of the matter at present," Lennart Eckerberg said.

Sweden's formal interview with the Soviet Embassy means that the question of mass media coverage of the Nordic women's peace march in the Soviet Union has now reached the political level.

NONALIGNED COMMITTEE WILL NOT VISIT BEIRUT NOW

JN191726 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1655 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Text] Nicosia, 19 Jul (INA) -- In a statement to the INA correspondent here today, Cypriot Foreign Affairs Minister Nikolaos Rolandhis has stated that there is no possibility at the present time for the nine-member committee, which was formed by the ministerial conference of the Nonaligned Coordination Bureau which convened in Nicosia late last week, to visit Lebanon or to hold contacts for seeking a solution to the Zionist forces' withdrawal from the Lebanese territories.

The Cypriot minister said that the Lebanese authorities had informed the committee that it cannot guarantee the safety of its members, their safe and free movement or their entry to the various sectors of Beirut.

Rolandhis added that in light of these reasons the foreign ministers who are members of the committee left Cyprus today for their respective countries with the hope that better circumstances in the future will permit them to visit Beirut. He explained that he is holding intensive contacts with the Lebanese Government, the UN secretary general and the representatives of the five UN Security Council permanent members for securing better circumstances that would allow the nine members of the committee to visit Lebanon. In case these circumstances materialize, the members will come to Cyprus in order to leave for Beirut.

MALMIERCA INTERVIEWED ON NONALIGNED MOVEMENT

[Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca interview with the Cyprus Broadcasting Corporation on the occasion of his participation in the extraordinary ministerial conference of the Coordinating Bureau of the Nonaligned Movement on the Palestinian problem; date and place of interview not given -- recorded; questions in English with answers in Spanish with superimposed Greek translation]

[Text] [Question] Your Excellency, the Nicosia nonaligned conference has now concluded its work. Would you like to comment on the results and tell us what the next step will be?

[Answer] The extraordinary ministerial conference of the Nonaligned Movement's Coordinating Bureau on the Palestinian problem ended a few hours ago. We consider the results of this meeting to be very positive. The composition of the conference, the great number of ministers who headed delegations -- 29 ministers -- and the many other member-countries of the Coordinating Bureau and members of the movement which participated, despite the fact that they had received the invitation at very short notice -- only 6 days -- is an indication of the eagerness of the movement's member-countries to reaffirm and intensify their solidarity with the Palestinian cause, solidarity which the movement has had since its inception. The Palestinian and Lebanese peoples are currently confronting brutal Israeli aggression, aggression that brings shame on all of humanity at this time and which could only have taken place as a result of the massive military, economic and political help the aggressors —the State of Israel-- are receiving from the United States.

The conference examined the reasons for this aggression and condemned the barbaric acts the Israeli aggressors have committed against Lebanon's civilian population and Palestinian refugee settlements. The conference also honored the heroic struggle of the Palestinian and Lebanese fighters and the Arab forces, especially Syria, for resisting the Israeli aggression.

The conference reaffirmed the need for Israel to lift the siege of western Beirut, withdraw its troops from Lebanon's soil and to create conditions that will allow the Palestinian people to exercise their inalienable rights to return to their areas and establish an independent state. We think the conference specifically tried to define a program of action that would allow us to put our will into effect, express our complete solidarity with the Palestinian people and stigmatize the Israeli aggression. For this reason we approved several steps, some of which we shall immediately try to implement, such as the formation of a ministerial committee consisting of nine member-countries of the movement and which will include Cyprus, being the chairman of the conference, and Cuba, being the chairman of the Nonaligned Movement. The committee will go to Lebanon to discuss the situation with the Lebanese authorities and the PLO leadership. It will try to examine on the spot the consequences of the brutal Israeli aggression and will reaffirm the movement's solidarity with the fighters' struggle.

We also think that the committee's next step will be to pay a visit to the permanent and nonpermanent members of the Security Council to convey to them the resolutions of this conference and the need for the Security Council and the United Nations organization to take the necessary measures to keep aggression from achieving its goals. We appealed to the countries of the movement to take measures against Israel to put an end to its aggressive acts. We also appealed to all countries to strengthen their solidarity and to send humanitarian and other kinds of help to the Palestinian and Lebanese fighters who are suffering as a result of the Israeli aggression. These are the steps which we think should be immediately implemented, although the action program also includes other measures that will be implemented later.

[Question] Your Excellency, Cyprus is facing a problem similar to that of Lebanon -- a problem of aggression and occupation. Would you like to comment on that?

[Answer] The Nonaligned Movement has included Cyprus among its members ever since its inception more than 20 years ago. Archbishop Makarios, president of Cyprus, was one of the founders of the Nonaligned Movement and supporter of the movement's principal actions. At every summit conference, at every ministerial conference of its Coordinating Bureau, the Nonaligned Movement has systematically and permanently affirmed its solidarity with the Cypriot people's struggle for respect of their rights. It has supported the struggle for Cyprus' unity, territorial integrity, nonalignment, independence and -- to mention only one of the resolutions of the ministerial conference of the Coordinating Bureau which took place in Havana, Cuba, early last June -- it has stated that the true solution of the Cyprus problem should include the complete withdrawal of the foreign occupation troops from Cyprus' soil. Thus, by offering its capital, Nicosia, as the venue for the extraordinary conference of the Coordinating Bureau on the Palestinian problem, Cyprus has demonstrated how loyal it remains to the principles of the nonaligned and how steadfastly it expresses its solidarity with the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples who are currently enduring foreign aggression and occupation of their lands.

[Question] The Nonaligned Movement itself is facing a lot of problems, serious problems, problems of aggression -- Cyprus a few years ago and now Lebanon -- conflicts between member-states Iran and Iraq. How do you see the future of the movement?

[Answer] The Nonaligned Movement has been augmented with new members, especially with countries which attained their independence as a result of a long and difficult struggle against colonial and neocolonial and imperialist sovereignty. The Nonaligned Movement has a universal character. About 100 countries belong to the movement, and this is a fact that we should take into consideration when analyzing the existence of these problems. One of the movement's basic principles is solidarity with countries struggling for their independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty. In the Nicosia conference, as in every conference, the wish for the fulfillment of the movement's duties has been reaffirmed. In the case of the dispute between Iran and Iraq, the Nonaligned Movement has undertaken active efforts ever since the beginning of the war. Chairman Fidel Castro decided that action should be taken from the first day, when the most significant military activities took place late in September 1980. Since then, we have been trying to find a solution, a formula for a just and honorable political solution that would put an end to this dispute between two nonaligned countries.

Despite our constant efforts and the resolutions adopted early in 1981 by the ministerial conference, which formed a committee composed of the foreign ministers of Cuba, India, Zambia and the man responsible for the PLO Political Bureau, a committee which exerted every effort within the framework of its responsibilities for a solution to this problem, we have unfortunately not succeeded. Undoubtedly this is something that makes us very apprehensive. We shall continue our efforts to find means which will lessen contrasts among countries and our efforts in order that principles such as respect for sovereignty, independence, territorial integrity and nonintervention in the internal affairs of countries might prevail, principles which are included in our movement. We believe that through the Nicosia conference the movement has shown it knows how to find the means to maintain its cohesion and unity and to be an independent force capable of contributing to the solution of the principal problems of the international situation.

PAKISTAN'S ALI KHAN'S ADDRESS AT NOCISIA MEETING

GF191937 Karachi DAWN in English 17 Jul 82 pp 1, 12

[Text] Nicosia, July 16 -- Pakistan today urged the extraordinary ministerial conference of the non-aligned countries to call upon all the countries backing Israel militarily to stop their assistance to the Zionist entity forthwith for its brutal invasion of the Lebanon and for its expansionist and hegemonistic designs.

"The international community should sever diplomatic, political and economic relations with the terrorist regime in Israel," Foreign Minister Sahabzada Yaqub Khan told the second plenary session of the conference here this morning.

Addressing delegations from about 50 non-aligned countries and half a dozen observers, Sahabzada Yaqub said if Israel was not restrained now by its friends and by those who carried influence with it the consequences for regional and global security and peace would be incalculable.

The conference, he stressed, must discuss all measures in this regard, including the application of mandatory sanctions against Israel under Articles 41 and 42, Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter.

Sahabzada Yaqub said the challenge posed to international community must be squarely, fearlessly and fully met by the Non-aligned Movement. The intolerable state of affairs in Lebanon must be terminated immediately, he said, adding: "The nightmare for the people of Beirut must come to an end". The Pakistan foreign minister warned that history must not judge that the NAM [Nonaligned Movement] failed at the most crucial moment.

The international community, Sahabzada Yaqub noted had stood by helplessly while the Palestinian blood was being shed. Yesterday it was Afghanistan and Kampuchea, today it is Lebanon, he said, and warned that tomorrow it might be another small non-aligned state threatened and laid waste by a larger country pursuing strategic aims of its own or acting at the instance of one of the super powers.

He went on to say that the non-aligned countries must stand by each other if they were to preserve their independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. They must not permit themselves, individually or as a group to fall prey to the designs and machinations of one bloc or the other.

"On behalf of Pakistan, I would like to reiterate our full support and total commitment to the principles of non-alignment in their true sense, which have guided the organisation since its inception," the foreign minister told the conference.

Giving the Pakistani reaction to the Israeli invasion, Sahabzada Yaqub said since the beginning of the Israeli aggression, Pakistan had repeatedly condemned the brutal carnage inflicted on Lebanon. Pakistan, he said, had demanded the immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon. Relief items had been rushed for the victims of the aggression. President Ziaul Haq established a special fund for Palestine which had met with an immediate and generous response from the people of Pakistan. The people of Pakistan had observed a Friday as a day of solemn solidarity with the Palestinian people in their heroic struggle against Zionist expansionist aggression.

In his message on this occasion, President Ziaul Haq reaffirmed complete support for the Palestinian cause stating that this support was an article of faith with the people of Pakistan.

Continuing, the Pakistan foreign minister said that President Ziaul Haq had sent urgent messages to the heads of state and government of the five permanent members of the Security Council calling upon them to bring about an immediate Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon and appealing to them to join in concerted efforts towards the attainment of the just and inalienable rights of the Palestinian people.

Separately, he said, Pakistan had made demarches to the United States Government urging it to take effective steps to deter Israel from its aggressive and expansionist policies.

He said Pakistan believed that it would be appropriate for the NAM to consider concrete measures to ensure that Israel was made to withdraw its forces from Lebanon. "We must convince the public opinion .n the United States and in all Western countries that support of Israel, whether explicit or tacit, has encouraged the pursuit of its expansionist objectives without fear of reprisal or sanction," the foreign minister said.

Paying rich tributes to the Palestinian Liberation Organisation for its valiant fight in the face of the Israeli invasion, Sahabzada Yaqub said "the PLO cannot be destroyed," and asked: "How can the flame of liberation, fed by the blood of countless martyrs, ever be extinguished."

He noted that the heroic freedom fighters of the PLO, who although hopelessly outnumbered, facing fearful odds and denied food and water, were fighting courageously in defence of principles "that we all share". [punctuation as published]

The foreign minister reiterated Pakistan's firm commitment to the principles of non-use of force in international relations and non-permissibility of acquisition of territory through the use of force.

He told the conference that his delegation would be prepared to work closely with all other delegations to express the determination of all the non-aligned states that Israeli aggression against Lebanon must be vacated immediately.

He said it was a matter of profound concern for all civilised peoples that never before in the history of the United Nations had its resolutions been flouted with such contempt and impunity. Israeli forces had marched through the United Nations peace-keeping forces in Lebanon. Never before had principles of human rights and civilised conduct been trampled upon so conspicuously, he added.

Apparently reacting to the condemnatory remarks against Turkey in the speeches of President Spiros Kiprianou and Foreign Minister Nikolaos Rolandis of Cyprus during the opening session Sahabzada Yaqub stated that conference had been convened for the sole purpose of discussing the Israeli aggression in Lebanon. But, he said, his delegation had noted with regret that other issues had been referred to and certain opinions were expressed which were not shared by all delegations and certainly not by the Pakistan delegation. The foreign minister said the considerations of delicacy and hospitality demanded that he should not elaborate on that subject.

However, Sahabzada Yaqub said since subjects other than the Israeli aggression had been raised in the conference he would briefly refer to the recent deplorable developments in the Horn of Africa where a Non-Aligned Islamic country was being subjected to outside intervention.

Pakistan, he declared, stood by Somalia in its defence of its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

Kuwaiti Delegate's Address

LD161510 Kuwait KUNA in English 1149 GMT 16 Jul 82

[Text] Nicosia, Jul 16 (KUNA) -- The Non-Aligned Movement should initiate international action for implementation of the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions on Lebanon specially Security Council Resolution 508 and 509, Kuwait demanded today.

Israel's continued defiance of the will of the international community manifested in the General Assembly and Security Council resolutions was perpetually [word indistinct] and invoked by the United States, leader of Kuwait delegation to the Coordination Bureau of the Non-Aligned Movement, Muhammad Abu al-Hassan added.

The United States has been in constant use of its veto right in favour of Israel which it also keeps fully equipped with modern and most sophisticated weaponry including the internationally banned cluster bombs and nerve gas against Arab citizens, he told the emergency session [words indistinct] Bureau here.

This American attitude is solely responsible for Israel's expansionist policy and criminal practices and the whole of the Middle East crisis, the session heard the leader of the Kuwaiti delegation say.

Abu al-Hassan said the situation calls for a concerted stand coupled by the use of all available means to press and influence the United States into (?realising) the grave consequences of its blind support for Israel on the destiny of world peace and security.

He urged the meeting to try to reach agreement on the venues and procedure to be adopted to ensure immediate withdrawal of the Zionist force from Lebanon and protect the Palestinian and Lebanese people against the barbaric genocide to which they are subjected.

The Non-Aligned Movement should insist on the unconditional evacuation of the Zionist forces from Lebanon before any negotiations on a political settlement, he added.

Sanctions and severe boycott and isolation by all peace-loving nations will compel Israel to submit to the will of the international community and respect international laws and norms.

The Non-Aligned Movement is one of the pillars of the struggle for liberation and played important roles in supporting the just causes of the peoples and in resisting aggression everywhere in the world, he said.

Abu al-Hassan thanks the Executive Bureau of the movement for its prompt attention to the case of Lebanon and wished them success in securing just peace and security for world peoples.

KHRISOSTOMOS INTERVIEWED ON ATHENS-NICOSIA RIFT

NC181039 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 18 Jul 82 p 5

["Exclusive interview" granted on 14 July by Archbishop of Cyprus Khrisostomos to O KIRKAS Correspondent Andonis Markidhis]

[Excerpts] Question: Your Beatitude, some question and even deny the Ethnarch's role as head of the Cyprus church after the Zurich and London agreements and the independence of Cyprus, arguing that this role has become superfluous. What are your views on this matter?

Answer: When there is freedom in a country, the church's ethnarchy ceases to exist. As we know, however, today Cyprus is neither free nor truly independent. The invader holds a great portion of our land, and for this reason freedom and independence are limited.

Since in our case the Hellenism of Cyprus is identified with the flock of the church it is natural that the archbishop should be interested in and should fight for the national survival of the church's flock, consequently of the Hellenism of Cyprus. [passage omitted]

Question: The view is cultivated among the people that the rift [between Nicosia and Athens] is the work of saboteurs who serve interests alien to the interests of the Cypriot people. Do you agree with this view?

Answer: The rift in Nicosia-Athens relations is most certainly the result of the efforts of saboteurs. The question, however, is: Who exactly are the saboteurs? Without a doubt in a rift in relations, and specifically in this case, we must find out "who" is undermining "whom." Are the saboteurs those who indentify with the line of the Greek Government, which the people support, or are they those who attempt to undermine this line and to curb it?

In answering this question we mention that Greek Prime Minister Papandreou is not so naive that he would be influenced by malevolent and selfish saboteurs in taking the position he took toward the so-called cooperation between AKEL and the Democratic Party. We believe that Papandreou has proved, both by words and by actions on our problem, that he is interested in placing the interests of Cypriot Hellenism above all else. This is why, even by sacrificing important Greek interests, he advises us and attempts to redefine the issue on a correct and nationally acceptable line until our position is justified. We believe that if the same political line were diligently followed by Nicosia on our national issue, there would be no problem of a rift between the two governments.

Consequently, the existing rift is due to the fact that some people in authority altered the line which was agreed upon between Athens and Nicosia. Both President of the Republic Spiros Kiprianou and Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou have recently and frequently spoken of close cooperation and of friendly relations between them. It would be impossible for us to accept that Papandreou would ignore this close cooperation and friendly relations under the influence of any saboteurs if there truly was a conscientious dedication to cooperation and identity of views on the line of redefinition of the problem as it was agreed, on the part of Cyprus.

Question: Your Beatitude, we would like you to define for us the exact reasons for the rift.

Answer: The rift between Athens and Nicosia is not so much due to a difference of opinion on the promotion of the Cyprus problem. It is, rather, primarily due to the breaking of promises. Everyone has the right to have his opinion on the processes involved, and although it could cause disagreements, it would not create a rift. In our case this rift is the result of certain broken promises on the part of the Cypriot leadership. Without a question this, together with the position adopted by certain other Cypriot elements which cooperate with the government and could, perhaps, want such a rift did contribute to the rift between Nicosia and Athens.

Question: To whom are you specifically referring when you say "certain other Cypriot elements?"

Answer: We refer to the AKEL leadership, which at this moment is cooperating with Kiprianou and whose position on the national issue is diametrically opposed to the line of redefinition which is being followed by today's responsible leadership in Greece.

Question: What, in your opinion, are the reasons why the AKEL leadership is seeking a rift in Athens-Nicosia relations?

Answer: In my opinion there are two basic reasons:

We consider the difference of opinion between AKEL and Papandreou on the processes which must be followed in order to lead to a solution of the Cyprus problem as the primary reason. Specifically, the AKEL leadership, in contrast to the current Greek prime minister, did follow, after the invasion and much more so after the death of Makarios, a line of concessions on our national issue. This line consists of an effort to find a solution to the Cyprus problem at all costs through the intercommunal dialogue, while ignoring the fact that a fundamental and effective dialogue cannot be conducted in the presence of the invasion forces and the thousands of colonists brought from Turkey to Cyprus. In supporting this policy the AKEL leadership did not hesitate to repeatedly encourage acceptance of conditions which separate Cyprus into a north and south as well as to call for, as it stated, "courageous steps," which means ceding away the rights of Cypriot Hellenism without any fundamental concession from the Turks in exchange.

In pursuing this line, the AKEL leadership ignores the essence of the matter, which is not a problem between two communities but is purely a question of the abolition of the independence of a state brought about by invasion by an alien country --Turkey. It also ignores the fact that as long as Turkish troops and thousands of colonists remain in Cyprus, neither the Turkish Cypriots nor we can freely discuss the form of settlement of the Cyprus issue. This is because on the one hand the Turkish Cypriots are forced to do what Ankara dictates to them while we, under the fear of a possible advance by the Turkish forces, are forced to make continuous concessions which are contrary to the principles of justice and the U.N. resolutions and which threaten our peoples' survival.

Apart from this, however, there is another reason, perhaps even more important, why, in our opinion, AKEL wants a rift with Athens. By saying AKEL we do not refer to the mass of people who vote for AKEL. We specifically refer to the AKEL leadership. We must not forget that from the point of view of world theory, AKEL never ceases to be an internationalist party. It only accepts the concepts of Fatherland and nation in the conventional sense. Consequently the AKEL leadership would be pleased if the peoples' Greek national soul were destroyed and a national disorientation were brought about.

Question: Your Beatitude, a great deal of AKEL's polemics is directed against you personally. What, in your opinion, are the reasons which propel AKEL into such polemics?

Answer: We are of the opinion that these polemics are not directed at us personally but rather at the church, and we are greatly grieved over this. We preach Christ and Greece in contrast to AKEL's leadership, believes neither in Christ nor in Greece. This is the very reason why we are in opposition. Many may wonder why this opposition did not exist at the time of Makarios. Makarios was the chosen of his people, and whether AKEL liked it or not, Makarios would have remained in authority. This is why they were forced to vote for him and to adopt a position toward him that would not hinder their aspirations.

Closing our reply on the position of the AKEL leadership we once again reiterate that we make a distinction between it and the mass of people who vote for AKEL. We believe that the masses of AKEL voters have both patriotism and a national and religious conscience but that due to a lack of enlightenment, they fail to understand the contradictory and inconsistent policy of the AKEL leadership. The church, in any event, also considers the followers of AKEL as members of its flock, because the great majority of them are religious and take part in church ceremonies and observances. This is why we accept them as members of church committees, cooperate with them and appreciate their contribution.

LABOR CONFEDERATION CRITIZES CONSTITUTION

[Text] Ankara, 19 Jul (AA) -- The Turk-Is (Turkish Labour Confederation) Executive Board issued a statement Monday severely criticizing the recently-made public draft constitution elaborated by the Consultative Assembly committee involved: "In case this draft is adopted, a healthy democracy cannot be established and people cannot look to the future with confidence, we are deeply worried," Turk-Is said, stressing that "the draft restricts the right to strike and renders impossible the conclusion of collective contracts. There is an attempt to dry out the financial resources of the labour unions."

Expressing hope that the Consultative Assembly floor and the National Security Council would "correct the errors in the draft," Turk-Is is deplored that "lockout," which is a crime against humanity, is cited in the draft as a right, there is an attempt to turn the social (welfare) qualities of the state into empty words. All those arrangements are in line with the desires of the employers. Trying to adopt measures to strengthen the state, some errors have been made. The strength of the state comes from the pluralist, liberal democracy based on respect for civil rights and liberties and the adoption of balanced, rational and egalitarian measures in the economic field. This requires a democratic, free labour movement. The constitutional draft lacks such qualities to a great extent.

Aldikacti Defends Draft

[Text] Ankara, 19 Jul (AA) -- Chairman of the Constitutional Committee of the Consultative Assembly Orhan Aldikacti defended the draft constitution Monday, saying: "Let them confront us with factual objections and not indulge in vague criticism." Talking to the ANATOLIA reporter, Professor Aldikacti said: "The nation will adopt and accept this constitution, because this is a constitution of tranquillity and peace. I do not think that it is a "constitution of reaction" although we naturally made use of the experiences we have lived through (in the pre 12 September 1980 military intervention period).

"I definitely do not agree that labour union rights are being destroyed. Let us not exaggerate."

FOREIGN MINISTER TURKMEN ON BEIRUT, GREECE

TA191553 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1530 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Text] Ankara, 19 Jul (AA) -- Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen resumed his duties Monday following a kidney operation in London and the period of recuperation. In a statement to ANATOLIA, Turkmen said: "This nightmare over Beirut must lift. We wish that the Beirut tragedy will be resolved urgently by way of a balance and just agreement.

On Turco-Greek relations, he said, a "more moderate climate arose in these relations following the Turkish prime minister's speech at the NATO summit. Relying on that temperate climate, we want to east bilateral relations and resume, if possible, the negotiating process. But of course this will also depend on Greece's attitude. The contacts being made in Athens are aimed directly at improving bilateral relations on a general basis.

Turkey has remained neutral in the Gulf war, and intends to maintain her peace efforts through the Islamic Conference, he added.

CHEYSSON SUMMARIZES EEC VIEW OF LEBANON CRISIS

[Text] The foreign ministers of the Ten [EEC countries] FBIS have decided in Brussels that a European initiative in the Lebanese crisis is not desirable as long as the United States is playing a different game. This is what external Affairs Minister Claude Cheysson told our reporter Quintin Dickinson:

[Begin Cheysson recording] It was seen that the choice is unclear at present, since it is impossible to understand how progress can be made along the lines proposed by the Americans, namely an evacuation of all armed Palestinians to an Arab country. And it was also found that the line proposed by the Community at the last meeting of the European Council, attended by President Mitterrand and the heads of governments of the other nine countries, was not followed by the Americans. Let me recall that this line consisted of recognizing the political rights of the Palestinian people, the role of the PLO in the negotiations. This has not been accepted by the Americans and for this reason we cannot demand that the Palestinians pass from an armed phase to a political one, to disarmament, as it had been possible previously since it was offered by Yasir 'Arafat in particular to us, the French. This has not been accepted by the Americans and this road is closed at present. Therefore the Ten consider that there is nothing new to be said today on this issue, unfortunately. [end recording]

UNITED KINGDOM

SHULTZ PROMISES 'COHERENT' U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

PM190853 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 17 Jul 82 p 12

[Editorial: "Shultz to the Rescue"]

[Text] When Mr Haig unexpectedly resigned as American secretary of state three weeks ago, the Reagan administration lost its only senior member with much experience in foreign affairs. Mr George Shultz, who was sworn in yesterday as his successor, after his nomination had been unanimously confirmed by the Senate, has wide international experience, mainly on the economic and business side. This will stand him in good stead as he shoulders the burden of shaping a comprehensive, intelligible American foreign policy, something which has been painfully lacking during the first 18 months of the Reagan presidency. Mr Haig had strong, generally sound, views on what the policy ought to be, but seemed to spend much of his energies on internecine warfare inside Washington. He clashed frequently with the defence secretary, Mr Weinberger, and with Mr Reagan's White House staff. The result was discord, upsetting for America's allies and foes alike.

Mr Shultz starts off, therefore, with one great advantage, denied to Mr Haig: He will work harmoniously with Mr Reagan and the other members of the President's team. This is something not to be sniffed at (even though the expression "team player" acquired an unfortunate connotation during the latter days of the Nixon presidency). Mr Reagan, with his instinctual, somewhat inchoate approach to policy making, needs men around him who are simpatico, which was how Mr Shultz himself described him. This does not mean he will be a yes-man. But it does mean that, if he disagrees with something, he will be able to make his point on its merits, without relying on fireworks or displays of temperament.

Mr Shultz held senior cabinet appointments in the Nixon administration. It is symptomatic of his standing that Chancellor Schmidt of West Germany is holidaying shortly at his California home -- they got to know each other well when they were both finance ministers. He has already indicated that he will favour a more even-handed approach to the Middle-East, as between Israel and the Palestinians. He is in general against the use of trade embargoes as a foreign policy weapon. He is a thoughtful, practically-minded man who, if anyone can, should be able to produce a coherent foreign policy for Mr Reagan to back.

TRADE BALANCE DEFICIT REPORTEDLY DECREASES

DW191249 Zurich NEUE ZUERCHER ZEITUNG in German 17 Jul 82 p 11

[Excerpt] Bern, 15 July -- Compared with the same period last year, the deficit in the Swiss trade balance during the first half of 1982 decreased by 40.4 percent or 1.57 billion Swiss francs, to 2.31 billion Swiss francs. According to additional data supplied by the Swiss Supreme Customs Directorate, the value of imports in the report period amounted to 28.8 billion Swiss francs while that of exports was 26.5 billion Swiss francs. Compared with the first half of 1981, this represents an import decrease of 850 million Swiss francs, or 2.9 percent, and an increase in exports of 718 million Swiss Francs, or 2.8 percent. In real-value terms both imports and exports showed an increase of 1.0 and 1.7 percent, respectively. Computed on the basis of the average-value index, the prices of the import goods during the semiannual period under review decreased by 3.9 percent while export prices rose by 2.7 percent. Barring precious metals, precious stones and jewels as well as pieces af art and antiques, the imports were nominally 2.0 percent below last year's level and actually by 1.9 percent above last year's level, whereas export growth amounted to 3.3 percent nominal and 0.6 percent actual.

REPORTS ON ARMY TRAINING FOR PLO 'FALSE'

[Text] Austria's ambassador in Tel Aviv, Otto Pleinert -- according to the Foreign Ministry -- has called at the Israeli Foreign Ministry in connection with press reports about an alleged air defense training of PLO members in Austria to find out more details about the origin of this rumor.

According to Ambassador Meroz, Europe-director at the Israeli Foreign Ministry, a check of the INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE report of 12 July has shown that there are no indications whatever of its being correct. Thus the report is false, he declared, adding that the Israeli Foreign Ministry has no explanation for how it was possible for such a report to appear in the INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

'SOLIDARITY' SYMPATHIZERS PUBLISH WEEKLY

AU191017 Vienna KURIER in German 19 Jul 82 p 3

[Text] In Vienna, traditionally a Western communications center for news from the East bloc, a few new publications have come out recently. Since 13 July there is a new monthly, POLNISCHE RUNDSCHAU [POLISH REVIEW] which is published by Polish "Solidarity" sympathizers in Austria. Although emphasis of the new monthly's reporting is on Polish events (making use of the underground press), it also carries news from the entire East European region.

Also new is the so-called "BIBOPRESS" which has now established its seat in Vienna and which mainly publishes reports and documents from our neighbor Hungary and about the Hungarian minorities in Romania, Yugoslavia and Slovakia.

The monthly GEGENSTIMMEN [OPPOSITION VOICES] which has existed for some time already, also carries significant reports and documents from the entire East bloc, mostly -- but not exclusively -- about dissident Marxists.

BRAZILIAN PRESIDENT ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL VISIT

PY201450 Brasilia Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Excerpts] After an 8 hour and 15 minute nonstop flight to Canada, President Joao Baptista de Oliveira Figueiredo arrived in Ottawa at 2000 local time yesterday for 4-day official visit to Canada.

On landing at Ottawa Airport, President Figueiredo was welcomed by Canadian Governor-General Edward Schreyer, who stressed that this is the first visit made by a president of Brazil to his country.

Thanking the Canadian governor-general for these words spoken on behalf of the people, President Figueiredo stated:

[Begin recording] Mr Governor-General: Emotionally touched, I thank you for your welcoming words which reflect the generous spirit of the Canadian people. I am greatly honored to be the first Brazilian president to visit Canada. Our countries have good relations of friendship and cooperation, and I am sure that this visit will contribute to strengthening these relations. [end recording]

Stressing the similarity between Canada and Brazil, President Figueiredo stated that with their large territories, the two countries are characterized by large distances and by the efforts they are making to promote national integration by means of daring economic undertakings.

President Figueiredo added that the dialogue between Brazilians and Canadians is developing in a frank and objective manner.

[Begin Figueiredo recording] The dialogue between Brazilians and Canadians (?began) with the visit to Brazil of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau in February 1981 and from several other high-level meetings, and is developing in a frank and objective manner. Your excellency has been correct on placing special importance on relations between Canada and Brazil, and it has been my desire to contribute to strengthening the friendship between our peoples.

Mr Governor-General: I am convinced that the meetings I will hold in this country, marked by a spirit of brotherhood which is the basis of our understanding, will also contribute to strengthening the close relations between Brazil and Canada, marking the starting point for the next stage of relations between these two large nations. [end recording]

After his speech President Figueiredo left the Ottawa airbase for the [name indistinct] Hall, where he is staying. At 0920 this morning, Ottawa local time, President Figueiredo met with Schreyer, and at 1000 he was received by Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau. After the protocol greetings, they held a meeting behind closed doors on the second floor. An hour later at the meeting hall the two chiefs of state held a 30-minute meeting with the members of the Brazilian delegation and of the Canadian Government. At the end of the meeting, Trudeau accompanied the Brazilian president to the main gate where they said good-bye.

Brazilian Foreign Minister Saraiva Guerreiro spoke to journalists about the meeting between Prime Minister Trudeau and President Figueiredo. [recorded passage indistinct]

Among other things Minister Saraiva Guerreiro said that the two chiefs of state did not discuss East-West problems very much and talked only a little about the Malvinas issue at the end of the meeting. [recorded passage indistinct]

At 1230, President Figueiredo went to the residence of Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, who hosted a luncheon during which the talks that began that morning at Pierre Trudeau's office continued.

This luncheon was attended by Ministers Saraiva Guerreiro, Amaury Stabile, Cesar Cals, Delfim Neto and Haroldo de Matos; head of the military household Danilo Venturini; head of the civilian household Leitao d'Abreu and Otavio Medeiros, head of the national intelligence service.

Carlos Atila, presidential press and information secretary, later spoke about the meeting between Joao Figueiredo and Prime Minister Trudeau and explained that the talks were divided into two portions. [recorded passage indistinct]

Carlos Atila said that an atmosphere of excellent understanding prevailed throughout the talks, which rapidly centered on concrete aspects of Brazilian-Canadian cooperation. [recorded portion indistinct]

According to Carlos Atila, President Figueiredo and Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau agreed that current international problems such as inflation, cost of living, urban employment, industrial development and expansion of [word indistinct] cannot be resolved by any single country. [recorded passage indistinct]

Atila added that regarding bilateral cooperation in the fields of agriculture, telecommunications and trade the two chiefs of government sought concrete agreements so as to improve the production and storage of foodstuffs and the systems of communications including the transfer of technology in these fields.

Dinner Speeches

PY210207 Brasilia Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 20 Jul 82

[Excerpts] Canadians and Brazilians share the same aspirations, hopes and dreams about the future, said Canadian Governor-General Edward Schreyer during a dinner given in honor of President Joao Figueiredo in Ottawa yesterday. The dinner was held at 2030, Ottawa time, in the [name indistinct] where President Joao Figueiredo is staying during his visit to Canada until Thursday when he returns to Brazil.

President Joao Figueiredo expressed his gratitude for the Canadian governor-general's greetings by saying that he found in the governor's words the expression of friendship and harmony which prevails in the relations between the two countries.

President Joao Figueiredo emphasized in his speech the importance of the bilateral mechanisms of consultations and spoke about the agreements, which were signed today, establishing a system of extensive and regular political consultations between the Governments of Canada and Brazil.

[Begin Figueiredo recording] Although the level of relations between Canada and Brazil is beyond what we could expect in view of their potential and characteristics, I am convinced that we are going to have an open mind concerning the identification of areas of possible exchange, which is already large.

Governor-General, our common beliefs are the strengthening of peace and the inalienable rights people have to chose their own destiny. The emergence of a new international order is going to lead Canada and Brazil, side by side, toward a promising future. I hope this visit to Canada will contribute to that objective. [end recording]

Preliminary Agreements

PY210138 Paris AFP in Spanish 1818 GMT 20 Jul 82

[Text] Ottawa, 20 Jul (AFP) -- Today Brazil and Canada signed a preliminary agreement to hold yearly consultations at the minimum.

This agreement was signed at the conclusion of a 2-day official visit by Brazilian President Joao Figueiredo to this country.

The agreement was signed by Canadian Secretary of State Mark MacGuigan and Brazilian Foreign Minister Ramiro Saraiva Guerreiro in the presence of President Figueiredo and Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau.

The signing ceremony held at the Canadian Parliament demonstrates the effective agenda of the second private meeting the two leaders held this morning on the second and last day of Figueiredo's visit to Canada.

The meeting began with a discussion on the Malvinas, which was actually started last night. It then progressed to broader areas particularly the interactions of the super powers in Latin America with the solid examples of Nicaragua and El Salvador.

Canadian sources indicated that although Brazil and Canada did not agree on the problem of the sovereignty of the Malvinas, they agreed, however, in condemning the use of force for solving international problems.

Regarding the situation of the continent of the Americas, the same sources said that there was agreement on the need to solve the economic and social problems of Latin America to overcome, in the long run, its latent instability.

Tuesday's activities also involved discussions related to bilateral trade and the signing of a series of agreements.

First of all, Canada is going to sell up to 1.5 million tons of wheat to Brazil from 1983 to 1985 for an approximate amount of $800 million.

The Canadian Society for the Expansion of Exports (SEE) extended the line of Brazilian credit to facilitate a series of Canadian sales in that country. Therefore, an agreement for $84.6 million was reached to facilitate the sale of two Canadian communications satellites and the modernization of 75 Brazilian locomotives by the Bombardier Society of Montreal will be carried out through a $36.6 million credit.

The sale of mining material and platforms for oil prospecting will be made through another credit of $4 million.

Two additional financial agreements of $30 million and $7 million will cover the transfer of goods and services for the Brazilian Petroleum Corporation (Petrobras) and electrical material for the Sao Paulo electrical distribution society.

The SEE line of credit for Brazil has reached a total of $342.1 million ever since Canada began this type of export financing for this South American country.

In addition to these loans by a government agency, Canadian private banks headed bank groups for financing some Brazilian projects.

The National Bank of Canada will head a first group which will provide $86.45 million for the modernization of Brazilian railroads while the Toronto Dominion Bank will head another group of bankers who will loan $45 million for the construction of 17 large warehouse grain centers.

Canadian sources said that a great deal of economic activity was carried out during this official visit since President Figueiredo arrived in Canada accompanied by 125 businessmen.

Tomorrow, Wednesday, in line with Figueiredo's private visit, the Brazilian president will be met by the Canadian governor-general, representative of the queen of England.

SCHMIDT TO RAISE 'DAMAGED RELATIONS' WITH U.S.

LD201814 Hamburg DPA in German 1711 GMT 20 Jul 82

[Text] Bonn, 20 Jul (DPA) -- In his own words, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt wants to raise in his talks in the United States the "generally damaged relationship" between the United States and all the European partners. Schmidt, who began a 10-day trip to the United States on Tuesday, said in an interview on ARD immediately before his departure that he believes the United States has to "discipline itself to listen to and consider the worries of its European partners." This applies to world politics, world economics and the natural gas pipeline deal between the Europeans and the Soviet Union.

On the tightening of the embargo conditions by Washington in the case of the natural gas pipeline deal the chancellor said that here an attempt is being made to extend American sovereignty to firms in France, Britain, Italy and Germany. "This is something we cannot accept in Europe", Schmidt said and gave in this connection employment policy reasons, particularly in view of the endangering of jobs in the German AEG company. However, Schmidt believes there is little chance that the American stance on this issue will be changed in the short term.

The chancellor will fly first to Houston, where on Wednesday he will speak to the Chamber of Commerce on the Atlantic alliance. The climax of his trip will be a visit lasting several days with Secretary of State George Shultz and leading Republican politicians near San Francisco.

In the view of SPD politician Egon Bahr the foreign policy balance-sheet of the American Government under President Ronald Reagan is "uniquely negative" after 18 months in office. In the SPD newspaper VORWAERTS Bahr points to Washington's difficulties with Israel, Beijing, Latin America, the Arab countries, Europe and Moscow. He takes the view that the "economic war" by the United States against Moscow will collapse because all the U.S. partners cannot be forced to act against their own interests.

Interviewed on Relations

[Interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt by reporter Friedrich Nowottny in Bonn 20 July -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] When your visit was agreed on, George Shultz was still a private citizen. Now he is the U.S. secretary of state. Doesn't this provide a good occasion to unload all the irritation and your sourness about the tough American attitude regarding the gas pipeline deal -- unload all this on the U.S. secretary of state?

[Answer] Not just German sourness is involved, but that of the Europeans. The governments in Paris, London and Bonn are equally involved; the workers in the three countries are equally involved and we are reacting in the same way. This is certainly a good opportunity to discuss this, but since the U.S. Government has taken a unilateral action without consultations with its European partners and since it has taken a very firm position, I see little chance for reconsideration in the short term.

[Question] Can things continue as they presently are between the United States and the Federal Republic? What do you think?

[Answer] I must repeat that there is no special relationship between the United States and the Federal Republic; I must repeat that relations have generally deteriorated between the United States, on the one hand, and all European partners -- including Canada -- on the other.

I believe that the United States must discipline itself to listen to and consider the worries of its European partners. This applies to world politics, the world economy and also the natural gas-pipeline deal.

[Question] There was ample opportunity for an exchange of opinions in Versailles and in Bonn. Can you explain how this tightening of the embargo occurred right after the departure of the American administration, of the American President, from Bonn?

[Answer] I can explain it, but that does not mean that I have great understanding for it -- I cannot say that, on the contrary. An attempt is being made here to extend American sovereignty to firms in France, England, Italy and Germany. This is something we cannot accept in Europe; we also cannot accept it for employment policy reasons. Just keep in mind to what extent jobs are threatened in the firm AEG anyway, and now there is the additional danger for AEG-Kanes. Things look exactly the same in France and England. You cannot just ignore this and carry on your daily routine.

[Question] As the German Government chief you cannot merely sell European soft ice cream over there. You must represent German interests, particularly German interests in the subject of the gas pipeline deal and in connection with high interest rates. Will you have an opportunity to do this?

[Answer] There will be ample opportunity, but I want to repeat that representing German interests means representing European interests. If we were alone, we would be poorly off. However, we are in one front with the Conservative British Government and the Socialist government in France.

RHINELAND PREMIER REFUSED ENTRY VISA BY GDR

[Text] Mainz, 21 Jul (DPA) -- Bernhard Vogel, premier of Rhineland-Palatinate (CDU), has been refused an entry permit to the GDR. According to land government spokesman Hanns Schreiner today, the premier wanted to make a private visit to the GDR for several days as he has done every year since 1977. This time he planned to visit Thurongia and, because of the 150th anniversary of the death of Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, also the city of Weimar.

According to Schreiner, the premier was simply told that "permission to enter the GDR" was not being granted to him. Various attempts to make the visit possible through the intervention of appropriate federal authorities have failed.

CDU Condemns Visa Refusal

LD211042 Hamburg DPA in German 0936 GMT 21 Jul 82

[Text] Bonn, 21 Jul (DPA) -- The CDU in Bonn has condemned the decision by the GDR authorities. CDU General Secretary Heiner Geissler told journalists that the GDR in this way is giving a negative indication for the further development of intra-German relations. If East Berlin treats the premier of a federal land in this way, then the planned visit to the federal republic by GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker does not augur well. Asked whether he is in favor of not allowing the Honecker visit to take place under these circumstances, Geissler said that "such people" should not, in the CDU's view, be welcomed with the pealing of bells and gun salutes "but one would prefer them to take a flying leap."

GENSCHER DISCUSSES RELATIONS WITH IRANIAN ENVOY

[Text] Bonn, 20 Jul (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher received Iranian Ambassador Mehdi Navab in Bonn today. According to the Bonn Foreign Ministry they discussed the state and prospects of German-Iranian relations.

GENSCHER DEPARTS FOR 2-DAY VISIT TO SFRY

[Text] Bonn, 21 Jul (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher departed Bonn today for 2 days of talks in Yugoslavia. His talks with Yugoslav Foreign Minister Lazar Mojsov will center on the state of East-West relations, the role of the nonaligned states and problems of the Third World. Genscher will also meet the new premier, Milka Planinc, in Belgrade on Thursday.

PLO ENVOY CRITICIZES ATTITUDE TOWARD PLO

[Text] Bonn, 20 Jul (DPA) -- The PLO representative in Bonn, 'Abdallah al-Ifranji, has criticized the federal government's attitude toward the PLO. Speaking to the press today in Bonn, Al-Ifranji stated that although federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher recognized the rights of the Palestinians on his recent visit to the Middle East, practical steps are missing. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Genscher should follow the example of the other EEC governments and establish official contacts with the Palestinians.

It is more prudent and would be more useful for Bonn to talk with the Palestinians instead of about them, said Al-Ifranji. He accused the federal government of having obstructed an EC decision to proceed with sanctions against Israel because of its invasion of Lebanon. Such an attitude is directed against the PLO.

Al-Ifranji, who says he is in daily telephone contact with the PLO leadership surrounded in Beirut, strongly opposed all demands for an evacuation of Palestinians from Lebanon to other countries. A political solution to the Lebanese conflict is only possible in conjunction with a political solution to the Palestinian problem. The only way is for the Palestinians to return to their homeland on the West Bank of the Jordan, the Gaza Strip and east Jerusalem which Israel should evacuate. A lasting solution is only possible with the backing of the United States.

The PLO representative warned Israel against insisting on a military solution to the Palestinian problem and ruining the chances for a political compromise. This would not leave Europe unaffected. Despite its military superiority, Israel will not be able to destroy the identity of the Palestinians. The 500,000 Palestinians in Lebanon, who have lived in refugee camps since 1948, have a right to a humanly dignified existence.

According to Al-Ifranji, the Israeli invasion of Lebanon has caused the deaths of 20-30,000 people, 95 percent of whom were civilians. At present 800,000 people are trapped in Beirut, including 5,000 PLO fighters. The Israeli army has 150,000 soldiers in Lebanon and acts ruthlessly above all against the Palestinian refugee camps. During the fighting, the Israelis use cluster bombs, phosporous bombs and gas which Al-Ifranji claims originated in West Berlin.

SPD'S BAHR ON 'NADIR' OF U.S. FOREIGN POLICY

[Text] Bonn, 20 Jul (DPA) -- In the view of SPD politician Egon Bahr, the record of American foreign policy after 18 months of President Ronald Reagan's administration is "uniquely negative". Under the heading "The Nadir of U.S. Foreign Policy", he writes in the SPD journal VORWAERTS that all along the line, in relation to all America's friends, things seem worse than at the end of 1980.

"If by a diabolical trick Moscow had placed an agent in an important place in Washington with such an assignment, it is doubtful whether he would have been so successful", Bahr says with reference to Washington's difficulties with Israel, Beijing, Latin America, the Arab countries, Europe and Moscow. The reason cannot be that all major partners, friends or adversaries of the U.S. are foolish or malicious. Whoever is planning foreign policy in America seems to believe that the U.S. can implement it without consideration for its friends or adversaries, without adequate information let alone consultation.

It is true, Bahr says, that America is very powerful economically and militarily and that almost nothing can be done in defiance of the U.S. but without its friends America would hardly achieve anything. Its "economic war" against the Soviet Union would collapse because the United States could not compel all its friends and partners to act against their own interests and to support, against their conviction, serious political mistakes on Washington's part.

MINISTER, PROSECUTOR ON THREAT OF EXTREMISM

[Excerpts] Bonn, 20 Jul (DPA) -- At meetings and wreath-laying ceremonies in Bonn and Berlin today leading personages commemorated the victims of resistance to national socialism in connection with the abortive attempt on Hitler's life on 20 July 1944, which was intended to put an end to the Nazi regime. Federal Minister of the Interior Gerhard Baum at a meeting of the Central Association of Democratic Resistance Fighters and organizations of persecuted persons in Bonn today praised the attitude and action of the men and women of the 20 July as one of the foundations of the Federal Republic.

Baum called for viligance regarding all dangers to the rule of law in the Federal Republic. It was alarming, he said, that the militancy of rightwing extremists in the Federal Republic has increased in recent years to the point of terrorist incidents. It is not only yesterday's men but also young people who feel attracted to neo-Nazi groups and ideas. Swastikas, the SS emblem and Hitler slogans have appeared in classrooms and school playgrounds. Even if they are on occasions due to a general desire to shock, it is frightening to see such thoughtless occurrences.

He is worried by the association of the rightwing extremism with animosity toward foreigners. He stressed that "the roots of rightist terror go deep in our country. We must not allow young people to be misled once again politically."

Speaking at the same meeting, Chief Prosecutor Kurt Rebmann said that it is the task of society as a whole to ensure internal security in the Federal Republic, which is threatened by political terrorism. As Baum had done, he said that extremism, left and right, is not at present a serious threat to the free and democratic system. But the danger of rightwing terrorism is beyond doubt.

In the short and medium term he classed the Red Army Faction and in the long-term the revolutionary cells as dangerous terrorist groupings. Self-styled autonomous groups are increasingly prepared to resort to violence.

FREE GERMAN YOUTH DELEGATION VISITS SAARBRUECKEN

DW201023 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 20 Jul 82 p 4

[Excerpt] Saarbruecken, 19 Jul -- At the invitation of Lafontaine, mayor of Saarbruecken and chairman of the Saarbruecken SPD land organization, as well as of the young socialists organization, a 30-member FDJ [Free German Youth] delegation has been visiting the Saarland capital of Saarbruecken since last Thursday. The young people -- workers, pupils and students -- will be guests of Saarbruecken until 22 July within the framework of a first official youth exchange program. Among other things, visits are planned to the house in Thier where Karl Marx was born, and to Neunkirchen where Honecker, chairman of the GDR Council of State, was born.

During a meeting with the chairman of the Council of State in March, Lafontaine suggested an intensified cultural exchange between both German states as well as the establishment of a youth exchange program between the city of Saarbruecken and the GDR. The model is a partnership existing since 1974 between Saarbruecken and Tbilisi, the capital of the Soviet Republic of Georgia, in the framework of which an official youth exchange program has been underway for 3 years.

AUTHORITIES SEEK EAST BERLINER SUSPECTED AS SPY

[Text] Karlsruhe, 20 Jul (DPA) -- The investigating magistrate of the Federal Court has issued an arrest warrant for a 36-year old East Berliner who is strongly suspected of working as an intelligence agent for a foreign power.

According to the federal prosecutor's office today, the accused man -- his name was given as Ulrich Konrad Kormann -- who entered the Federal Republic on an intelligence mission, was arrested in Hamburg on 18 July. He is said to have had forged identity papers and a large sum of money on him, Federal Prosecutor-General Kurt Rebmann has entrusted the federal criminal investigation office in Wiesbaden with the continuing investigations.

PREMIER MAUROY CRITICIZES U.S. ATTITUDE

[Text] Premier Pierre Mauroy, speaking at the National Assembly, has severely criticized the American attitude: It is impossible for a country to assume worldwide responsibilities while caring only about its national interests. Here is what Pierre Mauroy had to say:

[Begin recording] The government can only regret that the industrialized countries continue to exhaust themselves in savage competition rather than seek the way of healthy and lasting growth. The American attitude is particularly worrying. Yes, it is impossible for a country to assume worldwide responsibilities while being concerned only with its national interests. U.S. prestige in the world and the good functioning of the Atlantic alliance require that the American Government reestablish fairer relations with its partners and in particular with its allies. The principles of our trade relations are based on freedom of trade and not on trade control devised to suit the more powerful country. [end recording]

SECRET AGREEMENT CONCLUDED WITH USSR DENIED

AB211028 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in English 1010 GMT 21 Jul 82

["Franco-Soviet Protocol of 22 February 1980" -- Paris Diplomatic Information Service headline]

[Text] Statement of the Ministry for External Relations (16 July 1982)

It is dismaying to think that a leading figure who wants to remain anonymous but is said to be in a responsible position can put about such untrue allegations. [sentence as received]

We categorically deny that a secret agreement has been concluded with the USSR. A financial protocol was signed with that country in 1980 and the details were duly communicated to the OECD, therefore to the United States.

Statement of the Ministry for the Economy and Finance (16 July 1982)

Since 1966 the financing terms for French capital goods exports to the USSR have been laid down by outline agreements that are regularly renewed.

The latest outline agreement was concluded in February 1980.

It was duly notified to our OECD partners under the usual procedures for consultation between credit insurers.

This type of agreement, which is fully similar to those France concludes with other countries, does not feature any departure from the current export credit consensus rules applied by France's partners in their relations with the Soviet Union, in particular as regards the level of interest rates.

So the contents of this latest agreement have been known to our partners since 1980, and all necessary explanations concerning it were again given in the course of the Versailles summit preparation.

LE MONDE: CHEYSSON ON MIDEAST, CHAD, NAMIBIA

PM201037 Paris LE MONDE in French 18-19 Jul 82 p 3

[Unattributed report: "Mr Cheysson: How could any Palestinian accept that the center of his state should not be where he comes from?"]

[Text] A Radio-France Internationale "Third World Press Club" program chaired by Mr Herve Bourges, director of Radio-France Internationale, was to be broadcast on short wave on Saturday 17 July at 1700 hours and on Sunday at 2000 hours with the minister of external relations as guest.

Mr Cheysson stated that "self-determination for the Palestinians will sooner or later entail a state" and added: "Who can imagine that any Palestinian could accept that the center of his state should not be where he comes from, that is, obviously, in what used to be Palestine or, in other words, the occupied territories?"

After reproaching the "Giscard government" for its "ambiguity and equivocations" and remarking that "there is no country in the world where I find no marks of the completely contradictory positions held simultaneously by the previous government," the minister of external relations commented on the Soviet warning to France over Lebanon. In his opinion, Moscow "has probably gained the impression that we would serve as a cover for the Americans. This is rather hurtful to us." However, the Kremlin's first reaction "was aimed not at us but at the Americans." In fact, the USSR is "very anxious to ensure that no American troops arrive in Lebanon and lay down the law there." We "understand" its concern.

However, what Mr Cheysson mainly fears is a "near east Yalta": "For many months," he stated, "we have feared and been obsessed by the idea that in the absence of a direct settlement among the parties concerned in the Near East -- and I could say the same about Central America and other parts of the world -- well, everything could end with the Americans and the Soviets getting together and deciding between them where the line should be drawn."

In fact this is what could occur with respect to the Iranian-Iraqi conflict as a result not only of the ambitions of "Persia, which has already pushed west in the past" but also of the aims of the Iranian revolution, "for which I have profound respect." In the face of this "extremely grave" process, this "formidable threat," "we fear that the Americans and the Soviets could one day conclude an agreement stating: This is where we stop."

Furthermore, Mr Cheysson acknowledged President al-Qadhdhafi's "undeniable authority in his country, a big part of the Arab world and certain parts of Africa" and mentioned the problems connected with Tripoli ("some were minor -- they burned down our embassy and diplomats do not like this sort of thing") and stated that he found it "amazing" that he was the first French minister of foreign affairs to visit Libya since that country became independent -- "this is incredible, absolutely crazy," he stated. [Footnote: When he was premier Mr Chirac paid an official visit to Libya in March 1976]

After mentioning the fact that Mr Goukouni Oueddei's government in Chad "was driven out of Ndjamena and, finally, into oblivion," Mr Cheysson explained: "We did not arm Hisefnet Habre.... We will not intervene in any way." However, France supports the "present efforts to achieve reconciliation largely due to Mr Habre's initiative" and will continue to cooperate "under any circumstances."

Finally, referring to Namibia, Mr Cheysson expressed the view that it is "outrageous" that the departure of Cubans from Angola has been stipulated because "every country is sovereign and has the right to call in anyone it wants to." Similarly, "it is intolerable that any foreign country should presume to raise the question" of what would become of the national union for the total independence of Angola, the organization opposing the Angolan government, following a settlement in an adjacent territory. "Can you imagine anyone saying to President Mitterrand: "Listen, we are quite willing to cooperate with you but we want to know what you will do with Chirac?" -- he asked.

CHEYSSON STATEMENT ON LIBYAN RELATIONS CITED

LD192134 Tripoli JANA in English 1650 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Text] Paris, Ramadan 28, July 19, JAMAHIRIYAH NEWS AGENCY -- Mr Claude Cheysson, French minister for foreign relations, said the D'estaing [as received] administration has left behind unhappy relations with Libya.

Speaking to the Third World Journalists Club and broadcast by "France Inter Radio" yesterday Mr Cheysson said Libya is a sovereign country which chose its style of life and Colonel Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi has an indisputed place in his country and among the Arab and African countries.

He went on to say that this fact should be recognized and that is why when the new French administration took over it adhered to all commitments and contractual obligations toward Libya. He said: "We attach great importance to the Libyans: They are our neighbours and we have common interests in the Mediterranean and we are trying to avoid any misunderstanding with them".

On the outstanding problems between the Jamahiriyah and France he said: "There have been minor problems and differences but these have been eliminated at the present time and relations are in constant progress".

He described his recent visit to the Jamahiriyah as very important and dealt with several current issues of mutual interest to both countries.

KUWAITI PAPER INTERVIEWS CLAUDE CHEYSSON

GF211110 Kuwait AL-ANBA' in Arabic 20 Jul 82 p 2

[Report on interview granted by External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson to AL-ANBA' correspondent Samir 'Atallah in Paris -- date not given]

[Excerpts] All we can do for Lebanon is to assert former French commitments to having national coexistence among its communities and factions. Some of the Arabs blame us because we give priorities to other issues. This is not logical. We are convinced that when we want to solve the Lebanese issue, we have to first look for the external reasons that caused this problem. If we want to reach a durable solution to the Lebanese crisis, which insures the restoration of sovereignty over all the Lebanese territories, then we have to preserve its national unity. We have the problem of the contradictory foreign forces, whose rejected presence creates pain for Lebanon. The Palestinians, for instance, have neither a homeland nor a territory. Wherever they stay outside their homeland, they will remain unhappy and feel strange. Therefore, they are a factor or a side in the Lebanese crisis. But they are not the whole problem. The complicated situation of the other foreign forces is an important complex factor in this problem. So far, we still believe that there is a possibility of neutralizing Beirut through driving out all the foreign forces. Thus, we can avert the so-called "Beirut battle." We proposed the formation of a multinational force to be stationed in Beirut to serve in disengaging the combatants and to insure neutrality of the city. One day international neutrality of the whole of Lebanon could be announced. There is currently a persistent need to announce the neutrality of the Lebanese capital in the first place. We did not receive any response to our proposal, while the Americans moved in the direction of evacuating the combatant forces from Beirut. But they do not know where to take them, and besides, they cannot evacuate them by force. Therefore, a solution should be found that satisfies the Palestinians. Moreover, a clear solution should be found with them before disarming them." Claude Cheysson added: "No fateful final decisions can be reached now. In the horizon there are no quick solutions but a quick means of alleviating the pain of Beirut must be reached through drawing a future plan for the city that includes a political solution for the issue of disarming the Palestinians -- after reaching a solution regarding their future -- and the withdrawal of all foreign forces. If the Palestinians consent to leave Beirut -- and Syria agrees to receive them -- they will adhere to taking their weapons with them. In this case, Israel will not allow them to leave with their weapons, knowing that the Palestinians face problems in the Arab countries. The Palestinians have shown inclination to the political solution, but this has not been accepted by the United States and Israel. We regret that, but we are convinced that if the Palestinians do not get a political solution they have, in any case, to receive suitable humanitarian treatment.

I said: "Since you talk about the 'services', [as published] I would like to ask you: Do you really expect U.S. policy to change following the change in the U.S. secretary of state? Don't you think that the Americans reject everything, including the French role?" Then Mr Cheysson said: "I do not want to interfere in the internal affairs of any country, so how could I do this when it is an ally country? I will not be specific in answering your question, but I would like to say that the new U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz mentioned in his analysis of the situation in the Middle East an important factor for us. This factor is realization of the importance of seriously caring about reaching a political solution to the Palestinian issue, whereas former Secretary of State Haig called for the elimination of the PLO and consequently the Palestinian residence in addition to restricting the [Palestinian] issue to the issue of the refugees, as has been done since 1948."

I said: "While we talk now, there is another war that preoccupies the Arab nation. It is the Iraqi-Iranian war. What is France's stance on this?" He said: "The issue that has been preoccupying us during the past 3 weeks is whether Khomeyni will go further and try -- through using his armies -- to execute his idea of exporting the revolution. He has been undertaking these attempts since the beginning of the Iranian revolution. There are attempts to export the revolution in Saudi Arabia and Egypt. He is considering similar attempts in all the Arab countries. When issues are recorded by history they become very important and sensitive. Advancing in the direction of the West has been a known historic goal of the Persians." Cheysson continued by enquiring: "Is the latest battle of Al-Basrah for Al-Basrah itself? Or is it a step to advance toward the West? Will this cause further pain and problems and create new issues? Who can predict the results?" I said: "For years, the West said, 'the Gulf, the Gulf, the security of the Gulf, the safety of the Gulf, fleets, rapid deployment forces, petroleum, Gulf inlets and outlets.' What will the superpowers do now? How will they react toward this war?" Cheysson reiterated: "The superpowers are in a critical situation in light of this war. The smaller countries, like France, will do all they can. We have supported Iraq because we believe that this is necessary. We in France have a clear position. We support Iraq. We support its sovereignty and independence. This stems from our belief that the balance in the region entails having an independent Iraq. Besides, the Arab world needs an independent Iraq. The presence of the Iraqi regime is an Arab necessity."

Cheysson announced that France is ready to deploy a military force to Lebanon if this helps to maintain balance and calm down the situation. He added that the Phalangists, the socialists, the Maronites, the Shi'ites as well as the other Lebanese factions currently believe that France is entitled to help them and play a positive role in the of Lebanon.

USSR WARNS AGAINST GAS PIPELINE NONCOMPLIANCE

[Text] (ANSA) -- Moscow, July 20 -- Soviet Premier Nikolay Tikhonov today warned the president of the Italian Industrialists Association (Confindustria), Vittorio Merloni, about possible repercussions on economic ties between the two countries if Italy's business and industry fails to follow through on a big contract connected to the construction of the Siberian gas pipeline to Western Europe.

During a statement made to the Italian industrialists' leader in the Kremlin, the Soviet premier voiced the hope that "difficulties" caused by the U.S. embargo on parts for an Italian manufacturer, a state-owned concern, can be overcome for the completion of the 19 pumping stations contracted for the colossal pipeline project.

The American boycott has been applied to a number of components the Italian state-industry manufactures on U.S. license. Merloni and the premier also discussed the Italian balance of trade deficit run up in trade with the Soviet Union.

POPE RECEIVES POLISH FOREIGN MINISTER FOR TALKS

AU202010 Rome ANSA in English 1931 GMT 20 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Castel Gandolfo, July 20 -- The Polish foreign minister, Jozef Czyrek, travelled to the papal summer residence south of Rome today for a conversation with Pope John Paul II described by informed Vatican sources as a "positive" overview of relations between the Holy See and Poland, church-state relations in general, and the pope's upcoming trip to the Eastern European country.

John Paul was earlier expected to return to his native land for the 600th anniversary of the Virgin of Jasna Gora in August.

No official statement was released today at the end of the foreign minister's meeting with the pontiff but the date for the papal trip is expected to be made public soon after the return to Poland from Rome of the Polish primate, Msgr. Jozef Glemp, at the end of the week.

According to some Vatican sources, the trip might come next spring, in May.

Before going out to the summer residence of the pope, Czyrek met for the second time since his arrival here yesterday with the Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Agostino Casaroli. Also present for this encounter earlier today was the Polish primate, Msgr. Glemp.

Last night, the Polish foreign minister conferred with the head of Italian diplomacy, Emilio Colombo.

INTERIOR MINISTER DISCUSSES ANTITERRORIST FIGHT

PM201621 Madrid ABC in Spanish 9 Jul 82 pp 27-28

[EFE Interview with Spanish Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson: "Black Market, IRA, Red Brigades...Supply Basque Homeland and Freedom's Weapons"; date and place not specified]

[Text] Question: President Mitterrand said during his recent visit to Spain that "the Basque problem's roots are not in France" and that it is Spain's responsibility. How true is this? How important is French sanctuary for Basque Homeland and Freedom [ETA]?

Answer: I believe that President Mitterrand has come to realize that an essential part of the persistence of ETA's real potential stems from its proximity to the border and above all from the freedom with which ETA members move in France.

In my opinion, he left here with a more complete personal view and in this regard Mitterrand's visit to Spain may have been positive.

Question: Following the visit a number of specific measures were announced that the French Government undertakes to implement, such as the nonissue of refugee papers, the stepping up of police cooperation, confinement and the removal from the border of people suspected of involvement in terrorist activities.

Have any of these measures materialized yet?

Answer: We still have no news of new measures adopted in connection with the ETA organization in France. But in any case it was only recently that President Mitterrand visited Spain.

If France did what it has announced it would be a good thing, because a major lull in activity has been observed at moments when ETA members have experienced difficulties in their movements and been subject to inquiries.

Despite the improvement brought about by the army's cooperation, it is very difficult to supervise the whole border and therefore very difficult to prevent the entry of commandos, but nevertheless, when complemented by specific actions by the French police, this task is much more effective.

Question: Extraditions are perhaps the most conflict-ridden aspect of French-Spanish cooperation in the antiterrorist struggle. Over the past year Spain has requested 15 extraditions, none of which was granted by the French Government despite the fact that in some cases they were approved by the judicial authorities.

What are the problems with regard to granting extraditions?

Answer: The Spanish Government holds the theory that there are a number of crimes involving Basque citizens living in France and covered, we believe, by the present extradition treaty.

Against this theory there is the opinion, on the French side, that the crimes have a political element. I believe that murder, extortion and kidnapping are crimes defined in every country's penal code, and obviously the Spanish Government believes that the extradition treaty should apply in the case of such crimes, since they are common criminals, though they try to portray themselves as political idealists.

Question: To combat something you must first know it.

Has ETA been analyzed as a social phenomenon requiring income and including members who have to retire from armed activity at the age of 40?

Answer: This is one of the aspects being studied by the unified anti-terrorist command. There is not the slightest doubt that we are dealing with an established organization which operates violently but also economically and which under certain circumstances supports certain other organizations of an associative or even political nature.

Also in connection with terrorist finances, one should mention the impression gained by the police that the latest kidnappings, which are petty attempts at securing ransom, in fact confirm that the finances of that particular group -- politicomilitary ETA Eighth Assembly -- are weak, and there has clearly been a combination of events in recent months that reveal the precarious state of that criminal group's finances.

Question: The impression is that ETA uses different kinds of weapons in periodic cycles.

Is there any significance to this?

Answer: There is a specific approach that reflects revolutionary guerrilla tactics. For some objectives explosives are suitable, for others light weapons or grenade launchers, and in Europe it is relatively easy to find all kinds of weaponry on the black market.

There is also evidence of some exchanges with other terrorist groups. Specifically, the Spanish police is certain, as a result of its contacts with other forces, that there is an exchange of weaponry with the IRA and in some cases between ETA and the Red Brigades.

Question: Has any thought been given to using the method of "repentant terrorists" with Spanish terrorists as in the case of the Red Brigades?

Answer: This is not envisaged by Spanish law and, insofar as it could be used, I at least, would defend the possibility of its use by the courts, the district attorneys and the police, submitting each case to judicial appraisal. The fact is that ETA terrorism is slightly different from Red Brigades terrorism. Though ultimately they do coincide in their methods, they are different organizations.

Question: The Basque Government has appealed to the population to oppose terrorism, and this appeal invokes the progressive impoverishment into which the Basque country is sinking.

What is your opinion of this?

Answer: The Basque Government's appeal is a major step forward, and we must express our satisfaction with such actions.

What is at stake now is the Basque people's own reaction, because unless they make a determined contribution to the antiterrorist struggle, they will eventually be what the terrorists want them to be: a lumpenproletariat.

Question: Many people wonder how it is possible to permit the existence of political groups that everybody knows are an extension of groups committing terrorist activities.

Will nothing be done in this connection?

Answer: Such decisions must be taken by the judicial authorities. The government authorities have communicated a series of decisions to the attorney's office on various occasions so that procedure can lead to the prohibition of political activities that might have a certain criminal content. In this regard, action must be taken by the judicial authorities, and I am certain that this will happen.

PCE'S CARRILLO SPEAKS ON ELECTION PROCESS

LD191046 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 0600 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Text] The political focus yesterday was on the Casa de Campo in Madrid, where at 2100 Santiago Carrillo, secretary general of the PCE, made a long political speech lasting for an hour to close the PCE festival. Speaking to about 100,000 people, according to communist sources, Santiago Carrillo reviewed the present political scene and political forces in Spain. The PCE leader, who gave a clearly election-oriented speech, spoke of the election process.

[Begin recording] As we hold this festival we are in fact in a preelectoral period, and also in a situation of serious crisis in the process of democratic change. The coup d'etat of 23 February failed as such, but it had effects which cannot be underestimated. It pushed Spanish politics to the right. The Calvo-Sotelo government, formed following the soup, has striven to satisfy the demands of the great right. [end recording]

But it was not only the right which Santiago Carrillo was concerned with. The PSOE [Spanish Socialist Workers Party] was also attacked by the Communist leader who accused it of moderation as a consequence of the 23 February events.

[Begin recording] The PSOE itself has moderated its policies as far as it can, seeking to placate the de facto and financial powers, and it has actively collaborated with Calvo-Sotelo even over laws such as the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process which cut back the Constitution and the autonomy statutes, and they are so hesitant that even the originators have had to delay its application for 5 months while the constitutional tribunal rules whether it violates the Constitution. [end recording]

Santiago Carrillo made clear in his speech the need to see the present legislature to avoid a political polarization in Spain and early elections.

[Begin recording] To bring the elections forward will only favor polarization, and therefore the party's Central Committee has entrusted to the Communist parliamentary group the task of striving to ensure that the present parliament lasts until the end of the constitutional period, that is until 1983. [end recording]

Finally, Carrillo undertook a criticism of the party and spoke of the crisis the party has gone through and the attempts to manipulate it. However, the Communist leader made an appeal for unity among Communists, while to some extent banishing those who are not with him.

[Begin recording] We want unity among all those who feel they are Communists, because I believe that those who have been with the party but who leap easily into other parties don't feel themselves to be Communists. [end recording]

This is how the PCE festival ended. This festival, as on previous years, brought together members from all over the country and yesterday heard their leader Santiago Carrillo speak of politics and elections.

OID ON DOMESTIC POLITICS, FOREIGN POLICY, EEC

PA200427 Madrid OID Diplomatic Information Service in Spanish 2006 GMT 17 Jul 82

[Excerpts] Landelino Lavilla will spend the weekend reviewing and adjusting his program to revitalize the Democratic Center Union (UCD). The commentators believe that there may be a delay in implementing the decisions made by the new president pending Suarez' return and his political statement.

Lavilla met yesterday with Santiago Carrillo, the secretary general of the Spanish Communist Party (POE). According to the press, they may have discussed -- "so as to review and have a better idea of the outlook of the UCD and Spanish politics" according to Carrillo -- the current legislative and political situation. Abascal sees in the meeting a desire by the two men to carry the legislature through to the end of its term and comments that Carrillo "would be able to play an important role as an ally of the conservatives to help this legislature run its full term." Abel Hernandez believes that "the fate of the Centrists and Communists seems to be linked and will be the opposite of whichever fate befalls the Socialists and the Alliance." According to the columnist, "Carrillo, as well as Fernandez Ordonez, feel that for the legislature to move forward the participation of the most progressive sector of the educated bourgeoisie -- which is still part of the UCD and whose natural leader, in his opinion, is Suarez -- must be allowed to participate." In conclusion, he stresses that those who are predicting a speedy annihilation of the PCE are mistaken. Contreras writes: "Suarez is going to surprise us with an announcement that the center has to be reorganized and that he has decided to carry out the task."

The president of the People's Republic of Congo and the coordinator of the Nicaraguan junta of the government of national reconstruction ended their visits to Madrid yesterday. An OID communique on the visit of the Congolese president points out the political desire to stimulate bilateral relations. Regarding the other visitor, the Nicaraguan leader was pleased with the king's receptiveness to the problems of the Central American region and his interest in maintaining stability in the area. EL PAIS applauds Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez Llorca's suggestion to upgrade relations with Latin American countries that practice democracy, and his belief that the argument that the Sandinist Government is inexorably headed toward totalitarianism, should be held in abeyance until the facts demonstrate that there is no hope of stopping this. EL PAIS asks for efforts to be made to begin a dialogue on the American continent that would influence the Sandinist process. In conclusion, it considers that the airing of Eden Pastora's television interview during Ortega's visit was "an unnecessary gesture of hostility."

YA mentions the statement by the vice president of the European Commission, saying that "the opposition to Spain's entry into the European Economic Community in January 1984, as was decided in principle, is unbelievable." According to Tugendhat, "the problems that some of the member countries are mentioning to delay Spain's entry into the community have existed for some time."

DIARIO-16 publishes the statements made by Andre Chandernagor, French European affairs minister, explaining why France asked for a list of the problems that require the delay. According to DIARO-16, "the explanations lead to the conclusion that as of today, things are still up in the air."

YA publishes a lengthy interview with the foreign affairs deputy secretary. Ortega states that joining NATO means, above all, "anchoring Spain to the Western world and that, domestically, this should coincide with the definite consolidation of our democratic regime." He said that Spain should continue making diplomatic efforts to join the European Economic Community, and that Spain's participation in NATO and the EEC would help iron out our relations with France and Portugal. Ortega said "we are convinced that participation in NATO would be favorable for restating our claim to Gibraltar, and also positive from the viewpoint of defense of our full territorial integrity." He added that the Malvinas crisis had disrupted the equilibrium necessary to implement the Lisbon declaration and stresses that there are many other ways of reaching a solution. He also believes that Spain's complete identification with the West is not incompatible with its position in Latin America, the Arab world or Africa. Regarding Israel he said that "we do not accept the brutal formula with which Israel wants to ensure its own security. Our traditional friendly relations with the Arab countries are not an inheritance from the former regime or a blind position due to economic interests. But a moral stand by a sensitive European country that is open to the legitimate aspirations of the Arab community.

AKTUELT EXPECTS SHULTZ TO CHANGE U.S. POLICIES

PM201347 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 18 Jul 82 p 6

[Editorial: "Determined"]

[Text] There is no doubt that the new U.S. secretary of state will mean changes in U.S. foreign policy. Shultz has quite firm views on both Israel and the Soviet Union.

He considers the Palestinian problem to be the most important of all, and there is no doubt that the U.S. attitude toward Israel has cooled.

As far as relations with the Soviet Union are concerned Shultz has serious doubts about the usefulness of the economic sanctions which have Reagan's strong support.

It is still impossible to say how much the new secretary of state will be able to change the foreign policy pursued so far by Reagan. But Shultz has a reputation for being very determined, and the common view is that he must have made demands for changes in U.S. policy before he agreed to take over Haig's post.

SVENN STRAY DEEMS UN SESSION 'NOT IN VAIN'

PM200959 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 12 Jul 82 p 12

[Unattributed report: "Not as Expected..."]

[Text] "The second UN special session on disarmament did not lead to the results we had been hoping for," Norwegian Foreign Minister Svenn Stray said, commenting on the outcome of the special session in New York.

"The preparations for the conference and the work during the session itself have not, however, been in vain. All member nations are agreed that they should continue their work. Nor should it be forgotten that the final document from the first UN special session still stands and gives priority to disarmament work in the United Nations," he said.

The second UN special session on disarmament has been going on since 7 June. The first special session took place in 1978.

Foreign Minister Stray stressed that it is clearly in Norway's interest that it take part in the international work for disarmament in the United Nations and that it therefore gives this work its active support. "On the other hand we have to be realistic and recognize the limitations affecting this work in the United Nations," he added.

In the future Norway will try to help to ensure that the work begun by the special session is completed, in particular the work on a concerted disarmament program embracing nuclear and conventional arms, Stray said.

KIPRIANOU, ALEVRAS SPEAK AT NICOSIA RALLY

Kiprianou Address

NC202240 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1724 GMT 20 Jul 82

[Address by President Spiros Kiprianou to the pan-Cypriot rally at Elevtheria Square in Nicosia on 20 July -- live)

[Excerpts] Fighting Cypriot people: We have again gathered in Elevtheria Square to raise a voice of protest against the heinous crime committed against our country and people 8 years ago.

Today we express our admiration for the patient mothers, fathers and sisters of the missing persons and assure them that this purely humanitarian issue is uppermost in our thoughts and that we shall continue our efforts in all directions until the world forces Turkey to accept a procedure for tracing the fate of the thousands of missing persons. It is shame for humanity that this issue has yet to be resolved.

Eight years have passed and despite the many efforts we have exerted, there has been essentially no response on the part of the Turkish side. A dialogue has been going on for many years without substantive results. However, the dialogue continues because we have an obligation toward the world to exhaust all options in order to ascertain where we stand. When this stage of the dialogue has been completed we shall ask for a new discussion of the Cyprus problem at the next meeting of the UN General Assembly, not only to reaffirm old resolutions or to ask for their implementation but also to seek more practical ways for promotion of an honorable solution of the Cyprus problem and the tangible implementation of UN resolutions. Should the dialogue be discontinued, it will mean that we shall offer to Turkey the opportunity to make propaganda against us. However, by completing the phase of the dialogue, we shall ascertain the truth and we shall be able to proceed further. I again stress that carrying out certain activities, either in the UN General Assembly or in other areas will not mean denunciation of the dialogue, because this would mean denunciation of UN provisions and would also give the right to other people to denounce other provisions and destroy that which the Cypriot people correctly consider the political shield of their national cause.

We are most certainly not happy with the results so far nor is our goal dialogue for the sake of dialogue. For this reason we have never limited ourselves to dialogue, and we have always exerted efforts in all directions for the constant internationalization of the Cyprus problem. When I say internationalization of the Cyprus problem I do not mean only discussions at the United Nations, nonaligned conferences or other international forums but discussions in all arenas on a bilateral basis. This was the never-to-be-forgotten policy Ethnarch Makarios had adopted, and this is the policy we are currently following.

However, as I have repeatedly declared and again repeat this evening, the main support of our struggle is democratic Greece, the government, the political world, the Greek people and Hellenism everywhere. I want to stress the fact that within the framework of the sincere cooperation which exists between the two governments, the next steps have already been planned. Consultations continue to determine even further tactics for the promotion of a just solution to the Cyprus problem. Once again I want to praise the various initiatives of Greek Prime Minister Papandreou which we hailed from the outset and especially his efforts in the international arena and even more specifically his efforts in the European arena.

I firmly believe that through the close and sincere cooperation which exists between Greece and Cyprus many things can be achieved. Without such cooperation the national cause will be the only loser. However, as far as we are concerned, we shall always exert efforts to strengthen this cooperation and preserve it as something most desirable, as something that is most necessary for the promotion of our national cause. I would also like to specifically stress the Greek prime minister's proposal for the underwriting of the cost of a police force in Cyprus in case the occupation troops are withdrawn, a move that has been internationally hailed.

I think it is our duty on this black day for Cypriot Hellenism to communicate with the Turkish Cypriots and to give them the message that we do not consider them our adversaries. We consider Turkish chauvinism and Turkish expansionism to be our adversary. On the contrary, the Turkish Cypriots can live peacefully only with us, only in conditions of unity so that they may prosper within an entity as a happy people. We shall make all efforts to approach the Turkish Cypriots to convince even those who have not yet been convinced -- although I believe that the majority has already been convinced -- that their future is not going to be good under the boot of the Turkish Attila and the presence of the people Turkey has brought from the mainland.

Long live Cyprus' freedom! Long live democracy! Long live the victory of the unenslaved Cypriot people!

Alevras Address

NC202158 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1724 GMT 20 Jul 82

[Address by Ioannis Alevras, president of the Greek Chamber of Deputies, to the pan-Cypriot rally at Elevtheria Square in Nicosia on 20 July -- live]

[Excerpts] Brother people of Cyprus: At this moment representatives of all parties of the Greek national representation are before you to bring you a message of love, a message of support, a message from all of Greece, a message from all Hellenism. This message contains the will for every sacrifice until the final struggle for a free, independent, nonaligned and united Cyprus has been brought to an auspicious end.

After all, it is for this reason that we are before you, so that the voice of the Greek parliament can be heard, the voice of Greece. We are near you. We are codefenders and allies in your just struggle. For this reason, do not think that the drama you are living is limited to the borders of Cyprus. It stretches across the [Greek] nation, and for this reason Greece has made the Cyprus problem the principal issue of its policy. After all, national issues are not unrelated to the Cyprus case nor are internal developments in Greece, which are very closely influenced by the circumstances of the Cyprus issue. The close course and interdependence of the great issues of Greece and Cyprus are thus confirmed. At the same time, Turkish expansionism is intensifying, because in addition to occupying Cypriot soil, Turkey is threatening sovereign Greek territory. All these facts, all these impudent manifestations are taking place at a time when the international situation does not inspire hopes for relaxation.

Actually, on the contrary, near us in the eastern Mediterranean the situation is becoming explosive. Local wars, peaking with the ferocious invasion of Lebanon, are increasing apprehensions. Local wars and conflicts spread continuous agony to all the world, especially to our area. All these things lead to the inhuman indifference -- I do not want to say collusion -- of the international community and to the annihilation of the populations of Palestine and Lebanon. However, out of these affirmations and sad conclusions, a melancholy but rather instructive conclusion should emerge for us: That we must rely on our own forces and that we must defend our national issues only by holding each other's hand. We must make our foreign policy indivisible.

Greece, speaking for all of its people, has declared that the Cyprus problem is a central issue in its policy. The bonds of indestructible national identity and brotherly solidarity dictate this, and it is dictated by Greece's international obligations as a guarantor power. However, in addition to these national, emotional and conventional bonds, the Cyprus problem constitutes for Greece an issue that is directly linked with the more general problem of Hellenism, the problem of Hellenism's national independence and historic destiny. In this area Turkish hegemonism is brutally menacing the peaceful course and natural development of the Greek nation.

In such sad circumstances I think it is necessary for us to have a common course, starting with the fact that the Cyprus problem is an issue primarily of invasion and occupation. However, this fact dictates the corresponding positioning of the problem so as to stress the international position it indeed has, a position that legally necessitates the withdrawal of the Turkish occupation forces and the restoration of the sovereignty of the Republic of Cyprus.

The international campaign conducted by the Greek parliament and government has already offered a great deal of proof of its excellent reception. If we continue with daring and determination, we can transform international public opinion into dynamic support. It will decisively overcome Turkish negation and will defeat Turkey's unjust and cynical demands. Greece has made its decision with absolute unanimity.

My Cypriot Brothers, today's anniversary is a memory of hardships, pain and calamities. However, let it become a decision for fortitude and a campaign for hope dictated by human and national rights, as the duty of our free existence demanded by the heroic dead in exchange for their sacrifice. Let us carry out our common struggle armed with national and human rights and be sure that at the end of this difficult road we shall encounter success, because we should always remember that crucifixion has only one road, which leads to resurrection. Cyprus was crucified on 20 July 1974. For 8 years it has endured the martyrdom of its calvary, but tomorrow it will celebrate the triumph of resurrection, the resurrection of freedom. Justice will prevail; Cyprus will be free.

KIPRIANOU WELCOMES OPENING OF CYPRUS DOSSIER

[Statement by President of Cyprus Kiprianou on 21 July -- read by announcer]

[Text] I welcome Greek Prime Minister Papandreou's statement yesterday on his irrevocable decision to open the dossier on the treachery against Cyprus and its people. This treachery has had so many tragic consequences for its people who are still suffering. This, he added, is also a legal duty and a historic necessity, as Mr Papandreou stressed himself. The Cypriot Government, President Kiprianou emphasized, is always ready to fully cooperate with the Greek Government toward this aim.

DAILY SAYS U.S. OPPOSES NONALIGNED BEIRUT VISIT

[Text] Unforeseen obstacles have arisen in the face of the efforts of the ministerial committee that was established in the final declaration of the special nonaligned conference in Nicosia on the Palestine question to go to Beirut. In reply to the committee's request to be allowed to visit Beirut, the Lebanese Government specifically stated yesterday that although it is in favor of the visit, it is nevertheless unable to give the necessary guarantees for the ministerial group's security and freedom of movement in Lebanon and Beirut.

According to information, the U.S. is behind the whole question. Diplomatic circles have stressed that from the beginning the U.S. side has shown certain tendencies toward impeding the nonaligned initiative on the Palestine question.

The first encounter with these tendencies was the U.S. opposition to the invitation of Noel Sinclair, president of the UN Security Council to come to Cyprus and attend the nonaligned conference.

As is known, the nonaligned ministerial committee, in which Cyprus is represented, intended first to go to Damascus and from there by road to Beirut. However, this primary road is controlled at many points by the Phalangists and the Israeli invasion troops, whose political leaders are in accord with the United States.

Political circles have stressed that the United States opposes the ministerial group's visit to the Lebanon because the nonaligned initiative would possibly take away from the mediatory role of President Reagan's envoy, Mr Habib, in settling the crisis.

Following these developments, the foreign ministers who are members of the committee decided to adopt intensive actions toward various governments aimed at creating the necessary conditions that would allow a visit to Beirut.

In order to achieve this, the committee assigned specific instructions to Foreign Minister Rolandhis, who is working vigorously toward this end. Mr Rolandhis yesterday, among other things, had a telephone conversation with Lebanese Foreign Minister Butrus.

TURKISH CYPRIOTS MARK 'PEACE, FREEDOM DAY'

TA191109 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Text] The eighth anniversary of the Cyprus peace operation is being marked with ceremonies in the TFSC as the 20 July Peace and Freedom Day. The 20 July Peace and Freedom Day began today with a speech delivered over Bayrak Radio by the acting prime minister of the TFSC, Agriculture, Natural Resources and Energy Minister Irsen Kucuk.

In his speech, Kucuk noted that the peace operation terminated the 11-year long suffering of the Turkish Cypriot community, halted the Greek Cypriots' initial clashes, and paved the way for the establishment of peace on the island. Kucuk said that through the peace operation the Cyprus problem was to a great extent resolved, and the foundation was laid for a bizonal and bicommunal federal state. Explaining that the Turkish Cypriot community is taking a constructive attitude for a just and lasting solution at the intercommunal talks, Kucuk stated that the Greek Cypriots are not displaying the same approach.

The acting prime minister of the TFSC said that the Turkish Cypriot community is trying to prevent a return to pre-1974 conditions, adding that the Turkish Cypriots sincerely long for the existence of the two communities in Cyprus under conditions of equality and peace based on mutual confidence and for their cooperation in a bid to bring prosperity to our beautiful island.

Various ceremonies will be held in the TFSC on the occasion of 20 July Peace and Freedom Day. On behalf of the Turkish Government, National Education Minister Hasan Saglam is attending the celebrations, which will last 2 days.

[Text] The 20 July Peace and Freedom Day is being celebrated with ceremonies in the TFSC. The ceremony in Lefkosa [Nicosia] began in front of the Ataturk monument at 0900. Those who attended the ceremony laid wreaths at the monument and paid their respects. The special book at the monument was signed and then the honor guards were reviewed.

Then, TFSC President Rauf Denktas presented the Turkish Cypriot community's loyalty message to the motherland to Turkish Ambassador to Lefkosa [Nicosia] Inal Batu, to be transmitted to Head of State Gen Kenan Evren. In the message Denktas expressed gratitude to Evren and the Turkish nation on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community and on his own behalf. The message stressed that the Turkish Cypriots are determined to exert every possible effort to protect all that has been saved and gained through Turkey's great sacrifices and limitless support and help, and to attain further progress and beauty in accordance wtih the principles of Ataturk.

In turn, Evren's message was submitted to Denktas by Batu. In his message, Evren noted that the 20 July peace operation was realized by the Turkish Armed Forces and the Turkish Cypriot fighters working shoulder to shoulder. Evren noted that the operation proved once again the determination of the Turkish nation to safeguard its rights arising from international agreements within the limits of law and legitimacy. In his message, Evren added: While a just and lasting solution to the Cyprus problem is being sought in the current atmosphere of tranquility and freedom after the great injustices and pains suffered by the Turkish Cypriot community, I hope and believe that everyone has sufficiently realized that there will definitely not be a return to the pre-1974 conditions. Within this framework, it is our most sincere wish that the intercommunal talks -- which are being pursued by the Turkish Cypriot community with the full support of Turkey and which receive extensive approval from world public opinion as the only valid way to resolve the Cyprus problem -- yield positive results in a short time. Turkey will continue to follow with care its traditional peaceful and just national policy aiming to secure political stability in the region with regard to the talks between the two communities. As has been the case so far, the Turkish Republic will continue to support in every possible way the social and economic development moves of the Turkish Cypriots undertaken in an atmosphere of tranquility, freedom and security.

In the last part of his message, Evren congratulated the Turkish Cypriot community's Peace and Freedom Day and expressed his good wishes.

Later, Denktas delivered a speech at the ceremony. In his speech, Denktas said that even as world public opinion adopts a stand against the TFSC through a misjudgment of the Cyprus issue, the Turkish Cypriots will never take a step backward or drop the banner of freedom. He said: Both the world and the Greek Cypriots must know that the Turkish Cypriot community's efforts in good faith have continued for too long. As long as the Greek Cypriots continue their attitude, undermining the peace efforts, we will take the necessary measure. The responsibility for this will be borne only by them. We will not bear any responsibility for the measures we will adopt.

Speaking on behalf of the Turkish Government during the ceremony in Lefkosa, National Education Minister Hasan Saglam said that the patient and sincere efforts to establish a bicommunal and bizonal federal state on the island are fully and unshakably supported by Turkey. Saglam noted that an avoidance of basic principles in the settlement being sought to the Cyprus problem would adversely affect the intercommunal talks. Referring to the community's efforts to bring about social and economic development, Saglam said: Our only unrenounceable aim is to ensure that you live in everlasting peace and freedom in Cyprus. Every effort to be made by the Turkish Cypriot community toward economic and social development is, in our opinion, worthy of support. As in the past, we are determined not to spare any sacrifice to this end.

After the speeches, the ceremony was concluded with a military parade. The Peace and Freedom Day celebrations were attended by Denktas; Saglam; Batu; the commander of the Turkish peace forces in Cyprus, Lt Gen Kaya Yazgan; TFSC Legislative Assembly Speaker Nejat Konuk; TFSC Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay; and ministers and other military and civilian officials. Pakistani ambassador to Ankara was also present at the ceremony.

CAGATAY RETURNS FROM UK, MAKES STATEMENT

TA192050 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay returned to the island this evening after completing his contacts in London. He had gone there on 2 July. After completing his contacts there he went to Istanbul and spent last weekend there.

On his arrival at Ercan Airport, Prime Minister Cagatay said that his contacts in London were very constructive and useful. He said he was proud to see the activities being undertaken for the Turkish Cypriot Security Forces reinforcement fund. He pointed out that the efforts aimed at uniting all the Turkish Cypriot organizations in England had been intensified.

Cagatay noted that there was great potential in England to help the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus both politically and economically. He added that there was a great desire on the part of Turkish Cypriots living in England to make use of this potential and that a delegation of Turkish Cypriot businessmen living in England would arrive in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus on 1 August to look into investment possibilities.

Cagatay said that the invitation he had extended during his contacts both at the House of Lords and at the House of Commons was accepted on principle and that a five-man delegation from each house and representing all the political parties would arrive in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus soon. He added that the dates of the visit would be determined in the days to come.

Cagatay indicated that during his stay in London he also met the Turkish foreign minister, Ilter Turkmen, and made several contacts at the Turkish Embassy in London.

The prime minister said that during his visits to the Turkish Cypriot educational institutions in London he had observed that great efforts were being made to keep alive the national culture and traditions. Noting that this was a pleasing situation, Cagatay said that he would do all he could to strengthen the educational and cultural traditions of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus.

PAPANDREOU PLEDGES TO OPEN CYPRUS DOSSIER

[Excerpts] Last night Prime Minister Papandreou was declared the honorary chairman of the pan-Cypriot committee on missing persons of Cyprus at a special gathering held at the War Museum. The prime minister, who later inaugurated an exhibition of photographs and documents at the War Museum, was awarded a gold medal and a diploma from the Cyprus missing persons' committee. Replying to Reverend Father Khristoforos, chairman of the committee of relatives of missing persons of Cyprus, Mr Papandreou said:

[Begin recording] In giving me this great honor and this responsibility that you have placed on my shoulders I must confess that it is a very difficult moment for me. I would like to assure you that I accept this honor not only as prime minister of the Greek Government but also as a member of the political world and as a Greek. I would like to assure you that all the democratic politicians in our country are in the vanguard of your great humanitarian struggle.

It is true that in the 8-year ordeal of the Cypriot people nothing is more tragic than the missing persons question. Of course we live in a period when, unfortunately, human sensitivity has been blunted, a period when the right of the powerful often prevails, a period when human values have sustained a great deterioration. This is why we Greeks have a greater duty to hold high the torch of justice, freedom and decency. One of the blackest pages in our nation's history is 15 July 1974. It is true that the demand of both the Cypriot and the Greek people for a bright light to be shone on this great treachery of our time is just.

We have assumed the responsibility to open the Cyprus dossier. I would like to assure you that this will happen. [applause] This will happen because I must confess that irrespective of who then shoulders this very great historical responsibility, we must confess that our nation, in order to free itself from being a culprit, and it is blamed for this, is compelled to proceed with uncovering the issue.

I must confess to you that at the recent NATO summit conference I felt dutybound before the Cypriot and the Greek people to stress what while the entire West, without Greece being excluded, supported Britain when Argentina interfered in the Malvinas Islands, neither Britain nor the alliance performed their duties before Greece and the Greek and Cypriot people.

It is not the time to define the struggle's strategy to liberate Cyprus. But I would like to stress again that as much as the dialogue between the Greek and Turkish Cypriot sides is necessary, or it is considered to be necessary, we cannot and must not forget that the dialogue is always a dialogue between Nicosia and Ankara, Ankara which is present with tremendous military government to make the crusade you referred to -- the withdrawal of the Turkish troops from the Megalonisos -- a priority issue. [applause] Friends and allies must know that there are limits to a nation's patience, a nation which is asking for justice, freedom, independence. [applause]

I would like to assure you that both I and the government, and I am sure all the politicians in the country, will proceed with the crusade until, at last, Cyprus is liberated from its occupier. [applause] I would also like to stress that when I say that the first issue is the deliverance of the Megalonisos from the Turkish occupation troops, I mean it in relation to other methods of struggle for the liberation of Cyprus. [applause] Allow me to stress that the immediate, imperative and primary duty of all of us is to solve the great tragedy of the missing persons of Cyprus. [applause] [end recording]

TFSC REPRESENTATIVE CALLS ON ULUSU IN ANKARA

[Text] A delegation headed by TFSC Representative in Ankara Cemal Askin called on Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu this morning and expressed the gratitude of the Turkish Cypriot community to the Turkish Republic.

In a statement during the meeting, Ulusu said that the Turkish Cypriot community attained its freedom through the 1974 peace operation and started becoming politically, economically and socially strong after the establishment of the Federated State. Ulusu noted that Turkey will continue to grant every kind of help to the efforts ofthe TFSC toward economic self-sufficiency. The prime minister added that it is not possible for the Turkish Cypriot community to return to the pre-1974 situation.

In turn, Askin said that a free Turkish Cypriot community exists in Cyprus today thanks to the timely and legitimate peace operation. Askin pointed out that the operation saved the Turkish Cypriot community from annihilation and proved once more the strength of the Turkish Army to the entire world. Noting that the Turkish Cypriots are aware of the sacrifices made, Askin stated that they are making every effort to be worthy of this and protect the gains.

The TFSC delegation then visited Deputy Chief of Staff Gen Nocdet Oztorun and conveyed to him the gratitude of the Turkish Cypriot community for the Turkish Armed Forces.

FURTHER OPPOSITION TO DRAFT CONSTITUTION VOICED

Journalists Union Statement

TA201333 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1135 GMT 19 Jul 82

[Text] Istanbul, 19 Jul (AA) -- Turkish Journalists Union (TGS) President Nail Gureli issued a statement Monday criticizing the newly-announced draftconstitution as "reactionary and anachronistic," adding that they had already applied to Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu to have the chance for free public discussions on the draft.

"We find it impossible for the Turkish society and the Turkish worker to adopt the draft constitution which is regressive from many angles, especially in the case of basic rights and liberties, the union [president] said, adding that the draft severely restricts press freedom and labour union rights. "The draft includes details which could have been arranged through ordinary laws or government programs. The fact that the right to strike is being severely curtailed whereas lockout becomes a constitutional right is contrary to the constitutional article which says the state is a social (welfare) one," he added.

The article, which would ban the labour unions from "indulging in politics" was vague, limitless and open to arbitrary interpretations, effectively destroying free union activity, he added.

VOTCP Commentary

TA201021 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 20 Jul 82

[Station Commentary: "A Democratic Constitution Can Be Attained if a Struggle Is Waged to That End"]

[Excerpts] The reactions by the democratic forces to the new draft constitution exploded like a bomb as soon as the reactionary draft was published. Turkish Bar Associations Union leader Atilla Sav noted that the draft constitution grants opportunities to those who wish to establish an authoritarian regime. The Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] opposed the constitution of the junta because it is against the workers. In turn, political science professor and MILLIYET writer Mumtaz Soysal voiced his reaction to the new draft constitution as follows: The Turkish people are not sufficiently backward and anachronistic to deserve such a constitution in the last quarter of the 20th century. Thus, the forces that are opposed to the elimination of the 1961 Constitution adopted a stand against the reactionary draft constitution by the junta.

The reaction provoked by the publication of the junta's reactionary draft constitution shows that the forces that unite in defending the 1961 Constitution are not to be underestimated. The Turkish Communist Party [TCP] supports with all its might these forces that are opposed to tearing up the 1961 Constitution and that defend democratic rights and freedoms. The TCP Central Committee plenum, which was held last May, announced Communists proposals concerning the constitution and the urgent tasks before them. The current essential issue consists of organizing the united action of the broadest-ranging democratic forces -- for example, the forces that concur on the protection of the 1961 Constitution — and dealing a blow to the junta on the issue of the referendum.

The current polarization of the political forces demonstrates that from an objective viewpoint this aim is realistic. A wide movement for the constitution has already been formed in Turkey, and the forces necessary for an actual democratic front have emerged. However, these forces are not organized. They are not united. Regardless of how strongly the forces that defend the democratic gains of the 1961 Constitution declare their opposition to the constitution of the junta, the barrage of reactionism cannot be overcome unless these forces unite among themselves.

The existing constitution movement must engage in a struggle without wasting another moment. It will be too late if we wait until the day of the referendum and do not immediately begin the struggle to create an extensive atmosphere of discussion on the constitution, ensure freedom of thought, lift the censorship on the press, accord amnesty to political prisoners, enable all political parties -- except the fascist NAP -- to function freely and attain democratic goals in a bid to hold the referendum in a democratic atmosphere.

The task currently awaiting us consists of organizing a democratic campaign to reject the constitution of the junta. Now the propagandists of the reactionary constitution will take to the streets. Are only those who approve of the constitution going to appear in the streets? How will those who favor the 1961 Constitution and a democratic constitution and reject the junta's reactionary constitution express their opinions? That is why the only alternative is to launch a struggle now -- and not the day of the referendum -- for the democratization of the referendum atmosphere. Forces that unite in defending the 1961 Constitution and the democratic rights and freedoms can and must unite to create a democratic referendum atmosphere and to organize the 'no to the junta constitution' campaign.

OUR RADIO EVALUATES SUCCESSOR TO TURGUT OZAL

TA170950 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0500 GMT 17 Jul 82

[Station Commentary: "What will change for our people?"]

[Text] Adnan Basar Kafaoglu has replaced Turgut Ozal, who is known as the architect of the current economic policy. Kafaoglu has said: You can consider me the new head of the economy. He continues: We will make amendments in the basic elements of the current policy without changing its essence.

What does Kafaoglu mean by this statement? How can the basic elements of a policy be changed without touching its essence? No doubt, the essence of the economic policy will remain the same whether it is called the 24 January policy and whether it is amended or not. In other words, the policy of strengthening the monopolies will continue. The policy of exploiting and crushing the people will also continue. State resources will continue to be empoyed for the benefit of the monopolies. Kafaoglu has announced this upon assuming power. He also said that the transfer of public funds to the private sector will be accelerated. What are public funds? A large part of the allocations made to the people's social services and investments to the public economic enterprises.

Dear listeners, an official from the World Bank has confirmed these facts and has said that the military administration is the guarantee of the current policy. We have time and again stated that the 24 January decisions have no meaning other than bankrupcy for our people and country, that it will make Turkey more dependent on imperialism and will drag the Turkish economy to destruction and that it will further increase the burden of the people. All these predictions have come true one by one. The bottom line is that all the state's properties have been mortgaged to the World Bank. This is the basic reason Ozal has resigned. It has become apparent that our country and our people have gone bankrupt as a result of the 24 January decisions. The statement in connection with the results of public opinion polls conducted by the junta through the martial law commands has confirmed this fact. The statement says that it has been understood the people are not satisfied with the economic situation. The junta, which fears the people's reaction, is trying to distribute grains of hope through the changes in the government. However, the junta's constitution is one that will preserve the essence of the current policy and that will [word indistinct].

No matter what kind of economic policy is pursued, the results for the people will remain the same so long as relations with imperialist organizations such as the IMF and the World Bank are not severed, so long as Turkey does not withdraw from NATO and so long as Turkey remains under the yoke of these imperialist organizations. The economic crisis in Turkey will be exacerbated. The reason for the economic crisis is not the individuals but rather imperialism, dependence on imperialism, and the monopolies which are the collaborators of imperialism. As has been stated by a World Bank official, the guarantee of the current policy is the junta.

At a time when the referendum on the constitution is approaching, our people should bear in mind these realities.

PRESIDENT THORN ON ENLARGEMENT, BUDGET PROBLEMS

PM220943 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 16 Jul 82 p 45

[Soledad Gallego-Diaz undated interview in Brussels with EC Commission President Gaston Thorn: "I Am in Favor of Enlargement, But it Must Be Carried Out Lucidly"]

[Excerpt] Brussels -- Question: When the Council of Ministers asked the EC Commission for an inventory, many journalists had the impression that the commission was to some extent in disagreement.

Answer: If you want to know what the Council of Ministers wants, you will have to ask the council itself.

Question: I would like to know what the ministers of the ten EEC member countries asked the commission.

Answer: There is an essential distinction.... It is a fact that the commission has done its job since "operation enlargement" began some years ago. Sometimes the commission must receive instructions or possibly a go-ahead from the Council of Ministers. At present, following President Mitterrand's visit to Madrid, the Council of Ministers has decided, on the French president's initiative, that this enlargement must take place with the utmost lucidity. We have said that we love lucidity and clarity at all levels. According to the French president, there are certain problems that must be resolved quickly, irrespective of the problems posed by Spain's membership. The French president wants the influence of the enlargement on national economies to be examined, each one being taken separately as an indication of repercussions at a regional level. He cannot give his blessing to the enlargement until this task has been carried out, even if we in the commission have managed to complete the negotiations. Our reaction was to say: "Mr President, gentlemen, are you still in favor of the enlargement?" The answer was yes: They are all in favor. So we said that the commission would continue to contribute to the negotiations, as it has done hitherto. Of course we will comply with the wishes of the heads of state and government leaders and will compile a list of problems. We are still willing to further examine certain particularly complex aspects. I have sent a letter to all heads of state and government leaders asking them to better specify the particular matters that worry them. Deputy President Natali will head the working group created for this purpose, which, at the request of the EEC member states, will be able to visit the capitals to examine the problems and complete the list quickly.

Not a Matter of Years, But Not a Matter of Days Either

Question: How much time is there to prepare this list?

Answer: I do not yet know. The operation has just begun and vacations are not the best time, though so far we have not wasted any time. It will not take years, but it will not be a matter of days, either.

Question: In March we Spaniards had the impression that things were going somewhat better and that for the first time real negotiations were going on. What happened between March and June to make the Council of Ministers decide to request the list and halt the negotiations?

Answer: You ask questions and provide the answers yourself....Let us consider your questions. First, if you had the impression on 21 March that everything was resolved, I admire your enthusiasm but I do not share it.

I did not have that impression. I believe that the present chairman of the Council of Ministers, my friend Leo Tindemams, was more determined than others to impart the maximum thrust to the negotiations and he did his utmost. That is all. All ten would have had to show the same determination continuously. I have just said and I could repeat it six times, but we would be wasting time — that the commission decided not to halt negotiations and to conduct its examination or its inventory at the same time. Perhaps you are right if you believe that we will not gain the Council of Minister's approval until this task is complete. It is true, but that does not mean that negotiations are at a standstill. For 5 years I have been telling my Spanish friends, who wanted to sign right away — that very afternoon, if possible — that there is much work to be done, that they must not believe that because there is a crucial problem everything has been abandoned and nothing can be done. I regret that greater efforts are not devoted to preparing for the negotiations, on both sides — I stress, on both sides. I know how long negotiations with the UK lasted, and I also know that 10 years after its entry into the EEC we have still not resolved all the problems. Those in Spain who believe that everything will be resolved in 6 months' time are mistaken and will be greatly surprised, even though the signing could take place next January.

You asked what has changed. If you want to know what Mr Mitterrand is thinking, you must ask him, not me. The president of the French Republic has said that he wanted to know the answers to the problems of the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP). When discussing agricultural prices, we observed that we did not share the same ideas. Do we perhaps agree on oleaginous products, for instance? Do we agree on the future of the CAP with regard to the United States? What will be the rules governing wine when we are joined by other producers? There must be a shared philosophy on these major options before admitting a major country and before considering new problems. Mitterrand believed he detected within the EEC a certain tendency to say "first enlarge, then we will discuss the problems," as some people in Spain seem to want too. For his part, he says that first we must know what the problems are and find solutions to them, and then enlarge.

Spanish Membership Poses Serious Problems

Question: At last you are telling me what Mitterrand thinks, but not what your own opinion is.

Answer: I believe that the enlargement must be carried out lucidly. I only regret that it was not decided to create this clarity earlier.

Question: From the commission's viewpoint, does Spain's membership really pose such huge problems for the EC?

Answer: I do not know what you mean by "huge," but I can say that it poses serious problems. I must repeat once again that even without Spain the CAP raises such major problems that they actually threaten to split the 10-member community. For years we have been examining how to reorganize it. Recently we have succeeded in containing the cost of certain northern products somewhat, but now there is a cost that is increasing rapidly — more than we expected — for Mediterranean products. At the same time, we were close to the limit of our resources at 1 percent. The members states say that this is not the right time to give the EEC new resources: Expenditure must be limited, and we are witnessing a particularly dangerous explosion in connection with Mediterranean products. On the other hand, we have heard the south Mediterranean countries asking us whether, when Spain and Portugal join the EEC, they will be able to continue selling their products to the Ten. Some say that if the present system is maintained, the major Spanish crops could cause an increase in agricultural costs of millions of currency units. Should this amount be "earned" from other products? This lamentable situation of the depletion of our resources at a level of 1 percent, the effort of deliberation on how to restructure the CAP, the increasing dimension of the Mediterranean region and the increasing sensitivity of our North African partners necessitate an immediate answer to all these questions.

Let our Spanish friends not be disappointed by this. As far as I am concerned, the enlargement is not in doubt. It will not change just because it takes place a few days or months later. The United Kingdom joined 10 years later than it expected to, though others say that it joined 10 years too soon. I do not know. Be that as it may, I would say that there are even few doubts about Spain's and Portugal's membership. While being a fanatical advocate of enlargement, I also agree with those who say that it must be carried out lucidly, because previous enlargements have left problems unresolved, and that is bad for everyone.

Question: I infer that you regard as a precondition for the enlargement an increase in the 1 percent of value-added-tax available for your own resources.

Answer: No, I do not believe so, but obviously if income increases, spending will become easier. The fact is that many countries do not want to increase this figure of 1 percent.

Question: But this is not a French, but a FRG problem.

Answer: It is a problem affecting everyone who has to pay. You must realize that everyone at the moment is doing their sums. In the present financial situation the European countries have become more vigilant than 6 years ago. Previously there was always some leeway, but now when the European Parliament or the commission talks about increasing the 1 percent, countries such as the FRG or the UK, which think they are paying too much already and who hear that the enlargement will cost money too, are taking out their pencils and paper and doing their sums and asking me to find a financing system.

Question: Do you believe that Spain has done sufficient diplomatic work at the bilateral level in the European capitals?

Answer: I am not accustomed to criticizing my interlocutors. I believe that Spain has done a great deal and that you can never do too much. On both sides we must conduct a frank exchange of all information that could help the negotiations. I do indeed believe that, as President Mitterrand's visit to Madirid has shown and as the UK showed at the time, political negotiations and bilateral efforts are extremely useful.

Question: Spain's and Portugal's membership processes are presented as "parallel processes." Does that mean that they will take place at the same time?

Answer: This is an explosive issue, but in this regard it seems that all the issues are explosive. At both countries' request, we have always said that each membership application should be treated on its own merits. We stand by this. If an insurmountable obstacle is encountered with respect to one of the two countries, there is no reason to prevent the membership of the country that encounters no obstacles. The issues are not connected: Spain's future does not depend on Portugal and vice versa. However, I can add that we believe it is better for Spain, for Portugal and for the EEC that the memberships take place at the same time. An enlargement is a crisis -- a crisis of growth -- and it is better not to have them too often. If an applicaton were to remain at a standstill for years, then that would be another matter, but there is no reason why this should be and we should still be able to carry out the enlargement at the same time.

Question: It seems that President Mitterrand wants not only to be acquainted with the problems posed by membership, but also to have the solution to each of them at hand....

Answer: I too have this impression....

KREISKY CRITICIZES U.S., WEST EUROPE ON POLAND

AU221322 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1000 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Markus Sommersacher report on press conference given by Austrian Chancellor Kreisky at Vienna's Concordia Press Club 22 July — with recorded portions]

[Excerpt] In the foreign policy portion of his press conference, the chancellor made a statement -- whose vehemence came as a surprise — about the policy of the United States and of other Western states vis-a-vis Poland. Kreisky warned against, so to speak, pushing Poland into bankruptcy by taking excessively tough action at the negotiations on repayment of the Polish debt to Western countries. If Poland is forced to declare bankruptcy, it would also hit German, French and other banks, Kreisky said and recalled that the bank crisis in the thirties was touched off by a small bank, the Creditanstalt-Bankverein bank.

[Begin Kreisky recording] This is an observation which shows how serious the problem is and how hair-raising the policy which some people in America and occasionally also in England advocate — that this bankruptcy should actually be provoked. And it takes a great deal of courage for Helmut Schmidt yesterday in Houston, to have openly opposed this policy in principle. [end Kreisky recording]

Hence if Poland had to declare bankruptcy, Kreisky literally stated, many things in Europe would also go along with it.

[Begin Kreisky recording] I say that this policy of bringing the Poles — or the Eastern bloc states — to their knees, economically, is sheer lunacy. I say this with absolute frankness. A situation would be created in which worse things would be provoked, among other things, that which happened in Poland and in all other countries [as heard]. Therefore what should be done?

In my opinion one should, through a panel such as the ECE -- I beg your attention — the ECE is the UN European Commission in Geneva and all have their seats there — the Eastern and the Western states — one should, as soon as possible, through the people whom the states have there, work out a plan for helping Poland. This can only be a plan which will also be valid for a period of 6, 7, 8 years. [end Kreisky recording]

Hence the Soviet Union should also occupy a seat at such a negotiating level and join in the debate about a realistic repayment scheme for the Polish debts, Kreisky demanded. This would be a genuine act of world political detente and it would then be easier to discuss disarmament and similar questions. The Poles in turn should release the people imprisoned by the regime and also readmit the trade union movement. But of course a solidarity movement could no longer exist there, Kreisky noted.

JOINT COMMUNIQUE ON BRAZIL'S FIGUEIREDO VISIT

PY221735 Sao Paulo FOLHA DE SAO PAULO in Portuguese 21 Jul 82 p 6

[By special correspondent]

[Text] Ottawa -- The Brazilian-Canadian joint communique issued yesterday emphasized deep concern over the present economic situation and the urgency to carry out negotiations over this matter within the United Nations. According to officials of the two governments, during their talks -- which were surrounded by a quite pessimistic atmosphere -- Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and President Joao Figueiredo concluded that the UN General Assembly meeting to be held in September is the last chance for finding a way out that may prevent the western world from plunging into as serious a crisis as the one experienced in 1930.

The joint communique, which includes 22 items, makes no reference to the Malvinas situation, a matter which was discussed during the two working meetings but which was deemed to be a pending diplomatic effort for it to be included in the document. The two governments also preferred to leave this matter in the hands of the United Nations with a view toward achieving a rapprochement between Argentina, Great Britain and the United States. Figueiredo stated that the Malvinas conflict has led the OAS into a deep crisis. Trudeau paid little attention to this statement. There are no possibilities for either Canada or Brazil to mediate in the problem. The reason is diplomatically obvious: In the words of a Brazilian official, "only he who has a strong hand can mediate," that is, he who can exert pressure.

The first item dealing with the economic situation states: "The two leaders voiced their deep concern over the current world economic situation, which affects both the developed and developing countries, hurting particularly the latter because of their greater vulnerability." The two countries want a resumption of international economic growth and the strengthening of the open mulitlateral commercial system. They expressed their official opposition to protectionism and their hope that the situation will be solved during the next GATT meeting to be held in November.

The document returns to economic matters in another item, where it is noted that in the North-South dialogue, the successful economic performance of each country should not be isolated. All countries should attain economic growth. This position is opposed to that of the United States, which first wants to "put the house in order" in the developed countries and then turn to the developing countries. In Brazil, this policy is known as letting the cake bake before cutting it [premeiro crescer or bolo para depois repartir].

Among the many common opinions, Brazilian diplomacy stresses the fact that for the first time after recent conflicts, Brazil signed a bilateral document "deploring the recent military actions in Lebanon." The pertinent part of the document reads: "They urged full respect for the territorial integrity, sovereignty and independence of that country and they strongly endorsed the recent resolutions of the UN Security Council urging Israel to withdraw immediately and unconditionally from Lebanese territory.... They expressed their serious concern over the continued suffering inflicted on the innocent Palestinian and Lebanese population in southern Lebanon and in Beirut."

Concerning the African situation, they reaffirmed their condemnation of the military actions staged by South Africa and they reiterated that they uphold Namibia's right to independence, based on UN Security Council Resolution 435.

There is an interesting observation concerning South and Central America. The two leaders agreed that the Central American situation is disturbing and that it has turned into a factor which should be taken into account in the relations between east and west: "... The peoples of that region have the right to solve their problems through the free expression of their will without foreign interference. They stated the urgent need for improving socioeconomic conditions."

As Brazilian officials put it, these words are a very clear condemnation of the position opposed to U.S. policy in the region. [Estas palavras sao bastante claras, como explicam membros do governo Brasileiro, para condenar a posicao contraria a dos Estados Unidos na regiao.]

One of the first items in the communique refers to the memorandum of understanding which creates a joint consultation commission for policy matters. The Brazilian Government tried to emphasize the fact that Canada chose Brazil as the starting point for its political action in the southern hemisphere. In the words of a diplomat, "this is the first time Canada has made itself felt within the hemisphere. After the failure of the U.S. proposal for a U.S.-Canada-Mexico union, they chose Brazil with which to take their first political step in South America."

The text is quite clear when it refers to the law of the sea: "They (Trudeau and Figueiredo) expressed their full agreement that the sea, the seabed, its substrata, and the natural resources beyond the limits set by national jurisdiction are the common patrimony of mankind. The two leaders expressed their disappointment with the U.S. announcement that it will not sign the law of the sea convention and they urged that country to reconsider such a decision."

LAMBSDORFF INTERVIEWED ON U.S. VISIT, TALKS

DW221021 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2045 GMT 21 Jul 82

[Interview with Minister of Economics Otto Graf Lambsdorff by reporter Werner Somme in Washington -- recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] What is the good of such a visit?

[Answer] In our current position we must particularly make it clear to our American partners that more cooperation, concern for and consultations with the Europeans is necessary.

[Question] That sounds relatively unillusioned. Do you have hopes that a change of the American position could take place in a foreseeable future with regard to the gas pipeline deal? If so, what could it be like?

[Answer] You know that this has been linked with developments in Poland. General Jaruzelski has given a speech today the substance of which will certainly not cause an alteration of the American approach although it indicates some motion. We must see what developments will take place. We must also check possibilities of alleviations or modifications of the decision or its implementation. With some good will there is always some leeway.

[Question] You have also been to the Senate. There are most critical voices with regard to the position of the government. Do you see any allies there?

[Answer] There are many critical voices with regard to this decision of the government, its contentents as well as its form, the lack of consultation, the fact that the allies were not quickly informed about it, and particularly with regard to the extra territorial nature of the decision, that is to the fact that it was applied to the territory of foreign countries. It must be said very clearly here that this is absolutely unacceptable for us. I have done that and I will continue doing it.

We can expect help from the Senate, but the actual decision in this matter does not lie with the Senate but the White House.

[Question] And the position there is still hard?

[Answer] We shall see. I am still facing a talk in the White House. But I assume that there is no chance at all to change a decision today which has been made 14 days ago. However, you must talk about it, and this is what I am here for.

GENSCHER MEETS WITH BONN PLO REPRESENTATIVE

[Text] Bonn, 22 Jul (DPA) — The Federal Government persists in its refusal to formally recognize the PLO because Bonn follows the principle of recognizing only states. This was stated by diplomatic circles today with regard to the recent comments by the PLO representative in Bonn, 'Abdallah al-Ifranji, who has called on the Federal Government to establish official contacts at last with the Palestinians.

Meanwhile, it has been confirmed in Bonn that federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, in his capacity as FDP leader, received Al-Ifranji on Tuesday at FDP headquarters for a discussion about the situation in Lebanon and developments in the Middle East. Meetings of this nature have been held before. Details of the discussion have not been made known.

Immediately before his meeting with Genscher, Al-Ifranji accused the Federal Government of being the only European Community government not to hold official talks with the PLO. Diplomatic circles stressed today in this respect that the Federal Government has for years maintained contacts with the Palestinians and PLO both in Bonn and through various embassies in the Federal Republic. These talks were naturally of an official nature, they said. Furthermore, Bonn's attitude is based on the policy of the European Community, which does not recognize the right of the PLO to be sole representative of the Palestinians. This was also indicated in the Venice declaration of 1980 which said the "Palestinians and PLO" must participate in negotiations to solve the Middle East problem.

The Israeli Embassy said in a statement that Al-Ifranji's claim that the Israeli invasion of Lebanon has so far cost 20,000-30,000 lives, 95 percent of them civilians, was "total fabrication." "Although we regret every innocent victim, the responsibility lies with the PLO," stressed the embassy. Another lie was Al-Ifranji's claim that Israel is using chemical weapons in Lebanon. Israel is only using weapons permitted under international agreements. The statement goes on to say that the suffering of the Palestinians in the past 34 years was the result of the Arab states' refusal to solve this problem.

PRESS ON DETERIORATING U.S.-EUROPEAN RELATIONS

DW231033 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 23 Jul 82

[Excerpts] Commenting on the state of relations between Europe and the United States, the daily DIE WELT writes:

A test of strength is now taking place between the Europeans and the Americans. France has given instructions to firms to break the Soviet-European gas pipeline embargo imposed by the United States and personally tightened by President Reagan. The French Government bases its action on the joint European front against American discrimination. Chancellor Schmidt confirmed this on American territory. This almost bitter feud between friends has assumed a level which eclipses the reason behind the problem -- the gas pipeline deal. The paper points out: To keep the most sinister nightmares from coming true, all concerned parties ought to stop and consider that the gas pipeline deal with Moscow is not necessary economically. It is the product of a typically European mixup of detente dreams and a spirit of greed. Aside from its economic advantage, the Soviet Union has never before made a greater political deal. It has always been its aim to drive a wedge between the Europeans and Americans — now this wedge is firmly in.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG comments on the visit of Chancellor Schmidt: In California the chancellor hopes to contribute in to limiting the damage which, in his opinion, America's trade policy decisions have inflicted on transatlantic relations. Schmidt is making himself the spokesman for West Europe. He feels he is in a united front with other European governments and with Minister of Economics Lambsdorff, who is complaining in Washington about protectionism in the field of steel and about the embargo regarding licenses and supplies in connection with the gas pipeline deal. The deal, however, involves not only Europe. The partner is Moscow. With the complaints about America, Schmidt is representing, in addition to German and European interests, also the interests of the USSR — Europe from the Urals to the Atlantic.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU also discusses Washington's action: The United States has entered a new period of isolationism which appears different, however, than the passive one of earlier times. America, the reawakend world power, wants to have the final say.

If the allies join in, all the better; if not, they must either be forced to or pushed aside. Since the Reagan administration does not listen to and thus does not or cannot notice the constantly growing irritation in Europe, probably just two possibilities remain if Schmidt and Lambsdorff return to Bonn without having accomplished anything: to make it clear to those responsible in America without any diplomatic niceties that they will blow up the alliance if they continue to carry on like this, or to hope with increasing misery that the alliance will hold together until a new American government reverses course.

GOVERNMENT REACTION TO JARUZELSKI'S SEJM SPEECH

[Excerpts] Warsaw, 21 Jul (DPA) -- Today Polish party and government leader Gen Wojciech Jaruzelski announced further relaxations in martial law in Poland.

The Federal Government was reserved in its comments regarding Jaruzelski's announcements. Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl told journalists that before making a statement Bonn would like to examine the new Polish measures with its partners in the European Community and NATO.

Ruehl welcomed, however, as a remarkable announcement the fact that the majority of internees in Poland are to be released. This is a step in the right direction. At the same time Ruehl recalled the Western demands for the release of all internees, the lifting of martial law and a resumption of a dialogue with the church and Solidarity Trade Union.

GDR ENTRY DENIAL SHOWS HONECKER'S INTERESTS

LD231302 Hamburg DPA in German 1146 GMT 23 Jul 82

[Text] Bonn, 23 Jul (DPA) -- In connection with the denial of entry to the two CDU politicians to the GDR, opposition leader Helmut Kohl doubts the seriousness of Honecker's desire to visit the FRG. "I almost have the impression that Herr Honecker is not interested in an early visit to the FRG, otherwise this worsening of the climate could not be comprehensible," he said in an interview in the NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG (Saturday edition). [name as received]

The denial of entry to Vogel and Hoffman was an arbitrary act and in opposition to the confidence-building measures which will be particularly necessary during the preparation of the Honecker visit to the FRG.

JOBERT CONFIRMS NONACCEPTANCE OF U.S. EMBARGO

LD221348 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Excerpt] France certainly seems determined to keep its commitments to the Soviets despite the Americans. Paris considers that it is not up to the Americans to dictate their laws to their allies. Michael Jobert, minister of foreign trade, confirmed this in an interview:

[Begin recording] When you live in a community such as the Atlantic community you have to reach agreement first before taking embargo measures. If the United States wants to observe its American embargo against the Soviet Union let it begin by not delivering 8 million tons of cereals, an agreement which is moreover being extended into coming years. Clarity is essential. If the United States wants to take reprisals against the Soviet Union, let it ask it of itself and not of its allies, which is too easy. We cannot accept, neither can the British, the Italians or the Germans, that our ability to trade through our industrial companies should be limited in this way, almost by decree. The events which we are now witnessing, these small trade irritations do not presage a good future for the Atlantic community. I believe that the deal involved is worth about Fr800 million, and that is not to be sneezed at. [end recording]

Communique on Contracts

[Communique issued 22 July by the French prime minister's office]

[Text] The government has made it clear that the contracts concluded by some French companies for the construction of the (Urengoy) gas pipeline must be honored.

The deliveries planned for 1982 must therefore be made according to schedule. The government cannot accept the unilateral measures taken by the United States on 18 June. It recalls that this is also the opinion of its EEC partners. Such measures cause undue trade damage to the European companies. They also harm cooperation between the United States and its allies.

CLAUDE CHEYSSON SUMMONS U.S. AMBASSADOR

LD221318 Paris Domestic Service in French 1300 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Excerpt] The U.S. ambassador to France was summoned by Claude Cheysson this morning. The minister of external relations complained to him about recent American statements considered surprising and untimely.

CABINET DISCUSSES MIDDLE EAST, U.S. STEEL IMPORTS

["Excerpts" from communique issued following Council of Ministers meeting on 21 July]

[Text] In his report on the recent events in the Middle East, the external relations minister recalled the preoccupation of the countries of the region following the entry of Iranian forces into Iraq. One cannot rule out the possibility that the conflict may become more than a border dispute, change nature and extent itself. The French Government expressed its preoccupation in the face of the risks of destabilization in a part of the world which is already affected by too many conflicts.

In Lebanon, unfortunately no progress has been noted: Beirut continues to be threatened. The negotiations continue to drag on without any solution in sight. France reaffirms its readiness to contribute to all efforts toward a peace which would ensure justice for the peoples and security for the states. It reiterates its appeal to all the combatants so that negotiations may follow the clash of arms. It was in this spirit that the president received a mission from the Arab League. It is with this will that the French delegation will soon ask the Security Council to examine the draft resolution it has presented jointly with the Egyptian delegation.

The minister delegate in charge of European affairs informed the cabinet that the discussions between the commission and the U.S. authorities on the export of steel from Europe to the United States did not achieve any result. The member states concerned and the commission agreed to continue with the discussions.

CHEYSSON SENDS CONDOLENCES TO PLO'S QADDUMI

LD231312 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 23 Jul 82

[Text] Following the assassination of the deputy director of the PLO in Paris this morning comes the reaction from Claude Cheysson. More than ever negotiations must take the place of the challenge of violence, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said. The minister of external relations also sent a telegram of condolences to Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO Political Department, who was received by Francois Mitterrand in the Elysee a few days ago.

'ARAFAT COMMENTS ON PEACE FORCE TO ITALIAN ENVOY

AU221546 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Beirut, July 22 -- Yasir 'Arafat, head of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, told the Italian ambassador to Lebanon last night that the PLO would look with favor at Italian participation in a multinational force to separate Israelis from Fedayeen in Beirut.

The Italian diplomat, Francesco Luciolo Ottieri, had been urged by various Palestinian leaders in recent days to meet with the PLO chief.

A week ago, the ambassador had discussed the possibility of Italian participation in such a multinational force with Lebanese Foreign Minister Fu'ad Butrus, and the Palestinians wanted to air their views on the matter.

During the meeting last night, 'Arafat said he was convinced that the Israelis would not dare to attack west Beirut, but if they did so, he warned, his men would fight them not only house-by-house but every inch of the way.

The battle would be a lengthy one and the Israelis would suffer heavy losses, he said. For that reason he thought Israel would seek to avoid a final push into west Beirut.

As to rumors of a possible reciprocal recognition between Israel and the PLO, 'Arafat said that the time was still not ripe.

Recognition of Israel would be the last card the Palestinians had to play and they wanted to choose well the moment for playing it, 'Arafat said.

The PLO leader then outlined the requirements such a multinational force should have.

That the force was made up of Americans and their Western allies would be acceptable, but the PLO would prefer them to be placed under the U.N. flag.

He said that the Palestinians looked with favor on Italian participation in the force as Italy is "a friend".

It was important that the force would not limit itself to supervising the withdrawal of the fedayeen from Beirut but stay on to protect Palestinian refugees from possible reprisal action from Lebanese Phalangists.

In this context he recalled the drama of Tell el Zaatar where in 1976, after the withdrawal of Palestinian fighters, Phalangists massacred hundreds of women, children and elderly persons.

The Italian ambassador said he would report 'Arafat's remarks to his government and noted that Italy has not yet taken any decision on an eventual sending in of troops to Lebanon.

MSGR GLEMP ON PAPAL VISIT, RELEASE OF INTERNEES

AU221524 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 22 -- Although the date has not yet been set for the Pope's next visit to Poland it will probably take place between May and September of next year, according to the Polish primate, Msgr. Jozef Glemp, as he prepared to board a plane to Warsaw.

He has just completed a stay in Rome of over two weeks during which he was received several times in private audience by John Paul II.

Boarding the plane at Rome's international airport along with him was Polish Worker's Party official and former foreign minister, Jozef Czyrek, who was received by the Pope Tuesday and who had a talk yesterday with Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Agostino Casaroli.

As to the announcement by Poland's military ruler, General Wojciech Jaruzelski Wednesday that over 1,200 internees would be released as part of a relaxation of martial law, Glemp said that every liberation and every step forward was cause for joy, even though the people expected more.

The primate said he was sure that military rule would be eased even further in future and hoped that all of the remaining internees would be freed.

PCP'S CUNHAL INTERVIEWED ON PARTY STRATEGY

LD230308 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Text] The secretary general of the Portuguese Communist Party [PCP], Alvaro Cunhal, has tonight interviewed on channel 1 of Portuguese television by journalists Margarida Amarante, Jose Miguel Judice and Fernanda [name indistinct] for the program "Primeira Pagna."

[Words indistinct] very little was added to what the country already knew about the PCP's strategy. [Words indistinct] revision of the Constitution and the termination of the Council of the Revolution were some of the major topics touched upon during the interview.

Alvaro Cunhal, who often during the interview voiced his hope that the revision of the Constitution may still be halted in time, [words indistinct] the dismissal of the government, the dissolution of the Assembly of the Republic and the calling of a general election. Asked why he kept insisting on this strategy, Alvaro Cunhal replied that the PCP advocates the removal from power of forces which are against democracy, such forces being equated by Cunhal with the Democratic Alliance [DA].

[Passage indistinct] With regard to the revision of the Constitution, Cunhal — while repeatedly voicing his hope that such a revision will not go ahead — said that the present revision process is not so democratic as it ought to be, since the AD and the Socialist Party [PS] are seeking to create a transition period enabling the Assembly of the Republic of legislate — for instance on the national defence bill — based on a revised constitution which is not yet in force and before any sovereign body entrusted with the task of supervising the constitutionality of such legislation has formally come into being.

Another criticism leveled by Cunhal at the present revision of the Constitution concerned the abolition of the Council of the Revolution. In this connection Alvaro Cunhal said that so far the Council of the Revolution had been the organ of sovereignty which ensured the constitutionality of the laws. We take the view, Alvaro Cunhal said, that the democratic regime is not yet consolidated and the Council of the Revolution could well continue to exist. Should it be terminated, as the AD and the PS want it to be then its duties should immediately be transferred to another body capable of supervising the constitutionality of new legislation.

Another important question which gave rise to some curiousity concerned the way the PCP viewed the alternatives to the AD in the event of an early election which the PCP has been demanding. How does [words indistinct], how does the PCP view an Eanist party and how does the PCP view a new socialist party? — Were the next three questions raised by the journalists, to which Cunhal replied that relations between the PS and the PCP [words indistinct], that it would not be an exaggeration to say that there is no unity within the PS although the Communists still think that the PS is a democratic party. With regard to the question of a possible Eanist party, [formed around General Ramalho Eanes], Cunhal said: We have already said that the existing political parties do not fill the whole of the political spectrum. There are thousands and thousands of Portuguese, Cunhal said, for whom at present there is no political party around which they could (?rally).

The final question revolved around an issue which is seldom talked about, namely the differences and internal crises within the PCP. In this connection, the PCP secretary general said: Well, there may be just about half a dozen Eurocommunists in the party. Fortunately, he added, ours is a democratic party — there may be differences of opinion, but these are always discussed within the party and there are no persecutions. As an illustration of this, Alvaro Cunhal mentioned the fact that the Central Committee has had the same composition since the days when the party was still operating underground.

UCD ELECTS NEW CHAIRMAN DESPITE ABSTENTIONS

[Unattributed report: "Landelino Lavilla Elected New Union of the Democratic Center Chairman"]

[Excerpt] At 2320 last night Landelino Lavilla was elected chairman of the Union of the Democratic Center (UCD) in a vote cast by the UCD Political Council at a Madrid hotel. The new chairman -- the ruling party's fourth since its founding -- received 144 votes in favor, with 65 abstentions and 5 void ballots.

Lavilla had previously accepted the candidacy, though a majority of Political Council members and even Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo believed that he would in fact reject the offer made to him by Calvo-Sotelo himself to occupy the post of party chairman. Shortly before that Calvo-Sotelo and his closest aides tried to persuade a majority of Political Council members to vote for Lavilla, despite the bad taste left by the tough conditions set by the candidate.

TUNISIA'S M'ZALI SATISFIED WITH DEVELOPING TIES

PM221455 Madrid ABC in Spanish 13 Jul 82 p 29

[Unattributed report: "New Impetus to Madrid-Tunis Cooperation"]

[Text] Madrid -- Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo and Tunsian Prime Minister Mohamed M'zali signed a joint communique yesterday which sums up the most important results of the Tunisian leader's visit to our country. The ceremony, at which several bilateral cooperation accords were signed, was attended by Economy and Trade Minister Juan Antonio Garcia Diez and the Tunisian ministers of agriculture and economy, Messrs Abdelaziz Lasram and Lassad Ben Osman, respectively.

After the ceremony Calvo-Sotelo and Mohamed M'zali flew by helicopter to Barajas Airport, whence the Tunisian prime minister flew back to his country.

Mohamed M'zali had been on an official visit to our country since Friday 9 July. During his stay he met King Juan Carlos and Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo. According to the joint communique, the visit took place in an atmosphere of sincere friendship, on account of the close and cordial relations that bind the two countries.

Middle East and Africa

In the talks between the two prime ministers, it was agreed to condemn the clear invasion of Lebanon by Israeli forces and to point out that "a comprehensive solution to the Middle East conflict demands recognition of the Palestinian's rights to exercise self-determination and establish their own state."

With regard to African problems, the two countries believe that an end must be put to the apartheid policy and that there is a pressing need for Namibia to accede to the status of an independent state. Spain and Tunisia believe that European-African dialogue must be strengthened to stimulate better understanding between the countries on both sides of the Mediterranean. They also believe in the need to establish a new just, harmonious and balanced economic order that will take account of the developing countries' fundamental problems.

Bilateral Relations

With regard to bilateral relations, Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo and Mohamed M'zali expressed their satisfaction with the development of cooperation and signed three agreements on double taxation and on technical cooperation in agriculture and fishing and in tourism.

A protocol was also signed between the investment promotion board and the Foreign Bank of Spain. An agreement was signed between the Tunisian Le Moteur company and the Mercedes-Spain group for the manufacture of utility vehicles in Tunis, and a cooperation agreement was signed between the Tunisian exports promotion center and the Spanish national institute for the promotion of exports.

The joint communique states that it was agreed to establish contacts between officials in the transport field and expresses satisfaction with the realization of the cultural cooperation program.

FUTURE AMBASSADORIAL APPOINTMENTS — Foreign Ministry sources have said that the probable appointment by the next Council of Ministers of the man currently ambassador in Brussels, Nuno Aguirre de Carcer, as new ambassador in Washington, could be the first link in a chain of changes affecting some of Spain's main diplomatic missions abroad. Another of the changes is expected to be at the Spanish Embassy in Lisbon. The man expected to be appointed here is Ramon Fernandez de Soignie. He would replace Fernando Rodriquez-Perrero, who has held the post since 1976. Fernandez de Soignie is currently head of the foreign minister's staff. SOVIET ACTIONS DISILLUSION PEACE MARCHERS

[Jan Jacob Floryan dispatch: "Censorship Made Cuts in Danish Peace Speech"]

[Text] Leningrad -- The news of the arrests and exile sentences among members of the dissident Moscow peace group has had a deep effect on the participants in the peace march.

Some had heard about them in a private telephone conversation from Stockholm after the news had been broadcast on Western radio, and in the space of a short time the arrests were the only subject of conversation among the marchers.

A Danish participant collapsed in tears: "How naive we have been to approach a superpower with our silk banners," she said in desperation.

Many others shared her view. Swedish theater critic Kerstin Noren called it a provocation against the march, and in the many small groups there were heated discussions of the reactions.

The feeling of a lack of control over the march which obviously gripped several participants now tipped over into a feeling of powerlessness. Even one of the march's Nordic leaders -- selected by the Russians who refuse to negotiate with other representatives -- Janne Houmann, admitted that spirits were low. She explained that it was due to the exhaustion and the identity crisis resulting from the fact that the Nordic peace women are being completely swamped in the masses of Soviet citizens who are being ordered to go to the march.

But it is not only as individuals that they are disappearing in the crowds. Their message is also being lost. In LENINGRADSKAYA PRAVDA's report of Janne Houmann's speech on the march's arrival in Leningrad nothing remained of anything which diverged from the Soviet line. At the same time Russian banners are often one-sidedly directed against the United States and complaints by the peace marchers are without effect.

Things were the same in Leningrad on Sunday [18 July] and at Petrodvorets on Monday, when a speech by Inger Holmlund from Sweden was completely misrepresented by the interpreter.

Holmlund asked whether the Russian people and the Russian Government were willing to take the next enormous step toward peace in order to force the United States into a disarmament race. In the translation this became a call for a halt to aggressive U.S. imperialism.

The psychological pressure on those taking part is growing. And not only on them. Danish radio's Moscow correspondent, Samuel Rachlin, has been threatened with "serious repercussions" by one member of the Soviet peace committee because he asked if the marchers themselves would contact the arrested members of the Moscow group. Another Nordic journalist was told that they knew damn well what she was going round saying in the bar.

For the present the Nordic march leaders intend to do nothing. Janne Houmann considers it unlikely that the marchers will make a public statement of their position on the imprisonments in Moscow and is content to hope that they will demand information from the Russian organizers. Asked if he had any, Soviet peace committee chairman Gregoriy Lokshin replied with a terse and firm "nyet."

Tomorrow the march continues on its way to Moscow.

LIFTING OF FALKLANDS TOTAL EXCLUSION ZONE

LD221610 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1538 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Text] The total exclusion zone of 200 miles around the Falklands was lifted today, Mrs Thatcher announced in a Commons written reply.

But the Argentine Government has been asked to keep its warships and military aircraft out of a 150 mile zone around the islands "to minimize the risk of misunderstandings or inadvertent clashes where they would pose a potential threat to [word indistinct] forces."

In addition to the lifting of the exclusion zone — imposed on April 30 as the task force prepared to set sail from Britain — Britain's warning on May 7 that any Argentine warship or military aircraft found more than 12 miles from the Argentine coast would be regarded as hostile, similarly no longer applies.

But the continuing uncertainty in Anglo-Argentine relations were reflected in Mrs Thatcher's statement: "British forces continue to have authority to take all necessary measures to protect themselves against attack anywhere in the South Atlantic and to defend the Falklands and their dependencies."

Argentine civil aircraft and shipping have also been asked not to enter the 150 mile zone unless by prior agreement with the British Government and also to stay clear of other British dependencies in the South Atlantic.

In another written reply Mrs Thatcher said only 500 of the 4,500 troops still in the Falklands were living in tents. These were mainly those manning anti-aircraft weapons at Port Stanley airfield.

She thanked the Falklanders for helping to house the rest of the troops in their homes and said a further 333 housing units were due to arrive today providing accomodation and facilities for about 3,000.

PLO DEFEAT SEEN OFFERING SETTLEMENT CHANCE

PM221457 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 22 Jul 82 p 16

[Editorial: "Reagan's Mid-East Chance"]

[Text] President Reagan and his new secretary of state, Mr Shultz, are warily eyeing what seems on the face of it to be a tempting opportunity for a big American-sponsored new move towards an overall Middle East settlement. They are right to be wary. As Dr Kissinger no doubt reminded Mr Shultz, in the six-hour meeting they had last week, nothing in Arab politics ever quite turns out to be what it appears at first sight. Thus, in the present situation, the Palestine Liberation Organization — or at least various spokesmen purporting to speak on its behalf — are holding out the possibility that the PLO might agree to reverse its present attitude toward Israel. This would mean abandoning the PLO's national covenant, which calls for the destruction of Israel, and instead recognizing Israel's right to exist as a state.

The new PLO approach is, of course, prompted by what has happened in Lebanon. Israel has destroyed the Palestinian military presence in Lebanon, and has the remaining 6,000 PLO fighters, together with their leaders, under threat in west Beirut. Israel is demanding that they leave Lebanon unconditionally and threatens to assault them in their strongholds in Beirut if they do not.

If this were to happen, it would be regarded throughout the Middle East as a setback for the United States. The deaths and destruction which such an assault on Beirut would cause would be attributed to United States backing for Israel. Granted that the Palestinian presence in Lebanon has been deeply resented by the Lebanese, a disaster on this scale could only result in pan-Arab outrage against Israel's armourer.

Mr 'Arafat, the PLO leader, is demanding, as a condition for evacuation from Lebanon, direct talks with the United States — in other words official recognition. Under an agreement made by Dr Kissinger with Israel in 1975, the United States is bound not to have dealings with the PLO so long as it refuses to recognize Israel. What Mr Reagan and Mr Shultz have to balance, therefore, is the worth of present PLO proposals (involving acceptance of United Nations Resolutions 242, whith amended wording) against the opprobrium and havoc which would ensue from an Israeli attack on West Beirut. It is not an easy choice. But since the PLO's military arms has been wiped out, at least for the time being, the chance to bring its political leadership out into the mainstream of Arab politics is a tempting on.

PAPER SAYS SUB COLLIDES WITH SOVIET 'SPY TRAWLER'

LD230131 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0127 GMT 23 Jul 82

[Text] A British submarine was badly damaged 11 days ago when a Russian spy trawler changed course and rammed it, says a report today in THE DAILY MIRROR.

The night-time crash happened as the diesel-electric powered HMS Opossum shadowed the Russian vessal at the Land's End approach to the English Channel.

Describing the collision THE MIRROR says it happened when the spy ship, thought to have been watching Britain's task force returning from the Falklands, suddenly changed course and headed straight for the submarine.

The commander ordered a crash dive but the keel of the Russian ship sliced into the submarine's connong tower as it began its steep descent.

Opossum, with seven officers and 60 ratings on board, was badly jarred when it hit the sea-bed and the commander decided to keep the 295-foot long vessel where it was until the damage had been assessed.

THE MIRROR says that the collision had been "hushed up" at the highest level, and the submarine was brought into Portsmouth during the night so no-one would see the damage.

Cost of repairs was estimated at 500,000 pounds.

The Ministry of Defence said early today that the submarine suffered damage to her fin and superstructure when she was in collision with "an unknown object".

"No-one was injured in the collision and the submarine managed to return to harbour under its own power. It is now undergoing repairs at Postsmouth naval dockyard," said a ministry spokesman.

He added that a naval board of inquiry had been convened.

'ARAFAT THANKS KIPRIANOU, EXTOLS NONALIGNED

NC221958 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Text] In a message to President Kiprianou, PLO leader 'Arafat expresses warm thanks for Cyprus' stand on the Palestine issue and for hosting the nonaligned conference on the Palestinian issue in Nicosia. Mr 'Arafat's message was today handed to President Kiprianou by Mr (Bitar), the PLO representative in Nicosia.

In his message, Mr 'Arafat extols the resolutions approved by the nonaligned conference, which, he added, was not only a conference of solidarity with Palestine and Lebanon but also a conference during which the countries of the Nonaligned Movement declared their solidarity to each other for the protection of the principles on which the nonaligned movement was established.

KIPRIANOU REPLIES TO EVREN, DENKTAS STATEMENTS

[Statement issued by Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou on 22 July; place not given -- read by announcer]

[Text] In a message to the Turkish Cypriot leader, Mr Denktas, on the anniversary of the Turkish invasion, Turkish President General Evren extolled the results of the peace operation, as he cynically calls the abominable crime that was committed against Cyprus in July 1974. The result of Attila's euphemistic peace operation has been the creation of the greatest tragedy that Cyprus has ever known throughout its history: The occupation of more than 36.3 percent of Cyprus by the invasion forces; the loss of thousands of animals; the disappearance of over 1,600 persons -- our missing persons -- and Turkey continues to deny cooperation to determine their fate; the uprooting of 200,000 Greek Cypriots from their homes and their conversion into refugees; and many other unspeakable acts. This is an inhuman aggression, which Turkey should be ashamed of and not proud of. What Turkey should do is end its occupation in Cyprus and comply with the UN resolutions.

With regard to the Turkish Cypriots, for whom the invasion allegedly took place, they have been turned into second-class citizens under the stratocracy that Ankara has imposed on the occupied part of Cyprus. The economic prosperity and progress that was promised to the Turkish Cypriots by Ankara's leaders has proved to be deceit, because the main reason for the Turkish Cypriot community's misery is its being partioned from the Greek Cypriot community and from the body of the Cypriot state.

The fact that there has been no progress whatsoever in resolving the Cyprus issue is exclusively due to Ankara's utterly unacceptable stand, which runs completely counter to the UN resolutions.

Speaking at a ceremony on the Turkish invasion anniversary, Mr Denktas declared that the Turkish Cypriots intend to live on this territory under conditions of equality and not under the sovereignty of the Greek Cypriots. However, the territory that Mr Denktas is referring to belongs mostly to Greek Cypriots and constitutes an inseparable part of a single sovereign state. The equality that he declares is unjust. No one has tried to subjugate the Turkish Cypriots. On the contrary, the equality [of the Greek and Turkish Cypriots] and equality in civil rights is the Cypriot Government's goal.

Denktas' allegations only serve Ankara's chauvinistic plans for partitioning the Greeks and Turks in Cyprus and substantively and abolition of the Cypriot state. Mr Denktas denies the Cypriot Government the right to promote the Cypriot problem internationally, maintaining that this is contrary to the process of the inter-Cypriot talks, and resorts to threats. There is no difference between the holding of talks and the promotion of the Cyprus issue in international forums, since the talks also are being held on the basis of UN resolutions. As long as Turkey continues to maintain troops in Cyprus and to sue its military superiority as a means of imposing an unacceptable solution to the Cyprus issue, the Cypriot Government has every right to take recourse to international organizations and pursue the greatest possible international support and assistance with the aim of making Turkey end its occupation and abandon all of its expansionist and partionist plans.

GOVERNMENT SATISFIED WITH U.S. CONGRESS DECISION

NC211942 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Text] The government spokesman has stated that the Cypriot Government expresses its satisfaction with the U.S. Congress' decision urging President Reagan to ask Turkey to withdraw its troops from Cyprus. The United States, the spokesman added, is perhaps the only country that, because of Turkey's dependence on it, can exercise effective pressure on Ankara. The Congress' decision substantively contributes in this direction.

KIPRIANOU'S POLICY ON CYPRUS ISSUE CRITICIZED

NC230830 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 23 Jul 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Margins Are Automatically Wiped Out"]

[Excerpts] The margins made available to President Kiprianou by Athens were automatically wiped out by a startling development which dicates both an immediate detachment from AKEL as well as an abrogation of the minimum program.

The startling development consists of the recent U.S. House of Representatives decision recommending that President Reagan become more actively involved in the effort to find a solution for the Cyprus issue and to seek the withdrawal of Turkish troops from our island. The decision, adopted with 405 votes in favor and 6 against, approaches the Papandreou line which redefines the Cyprus issue as a problem of invasion and occupation and, at the same time, asks for the withdrawal of Turkish troops.

This great majority with which the U.S. House adopted this decision is a proof that the new initiatives of the Greek prime minister are producing results. It also justifies the conclusion that "we are beginning to see light at the end of the tunnel."

AKEL's murky gloom must not be allowed to extinguish this light, nor should the minimum program be allowed to render the courageous and productive Papandreou initiatives impotent.

AKEL's hysterical slogans, such as "There is only one enemy — U.S. imperialism," should not, understandably, be heard in the background at a time when the Greek prime minister is knocking on Western doors or when he establishes that the United States "holds the key to the solution" of our problem and that it must be convinced to use this key.

If AKEL wants to play a constructive role it could go knocking at its own doors; it could exert pressing criticism on Moscow's position instead of expressing a servile subjugation to it. This opportunity was offered many times to the leaders of AKEL who never dared counter the position of the Eastern countries on the basis of national criteria.

An immediate abrogation of the minimum program, therefore, and abolition of the controlling political role of the Communist leadership are an imperative national necessity, because:

A -- The decision of the U.S. House of Representatives will be discussed in a few days and it will have a binding character;

B -- A Papandreou-Reagan meeting will follow in the fall;

C -- Pressure from the EEC countries on Ankara will increase.

All of this will be in vain if the main interest of the Cyprus Government consists of how to least displease the Communist leadership so that Kiprianou may get re-elected to the presidency.

Postscript: This editorial was written before the statement was issued in which the Cyprus Government salutes the decision by the U.S. House of Representatives. The fact, however, that the importance of this decision is officially recognized only increases the responsibilities for immediate corrective action and abandonment of AKEL and the minimum program. If it is proved that the Kiprianou government values one thing but serves another, then its political credibility will be lost for good and the national handling by Papandreou will be wrecked. Let the Cyprus Government demonstrate what it wants: Does it want AKEL for the sake of its master's election to the presidency or does it want the Athens line in order to save Cyprus?

KKE LEADER FLORAKIS DISCUSSES CYPRUS ISSUE

NC221849 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 21 Jul 82 p 3

[From the "Here and There" column: Interview granted by KKE Secretary General Kharlilaos Florakis to O FILELEVTHEROS correspondent in Athens Kostas Serezis; date not given]

[Text] Question: Under today's international conditions, what form and what context should the Cypriot struggle have in order to be successful?

Answer: The context of the struggle stems from today's reality in Cyprus. The problem of Cyprus is not solely and exclusively a problem of the Turkish occupation of over 40 percent of the island. It is also a problem of U.S.-NATO overlordship aimed at the island's conversion into a military bridgehead in the eastern Mediterranean area.

For this reason, the context of the struggle cannot but be a national liberation, anti-imperialist one.

In regard to the form, I do not believe that one can confine it to only one exclusive form. What is needed is a combination of forms, naturally a combination of the forms which meet the current situation, possibilities and so forth.

I believe that under the current conditions the intercommunal talks must be accompanied by intensified efforts for further internationalization. When we speak of internationalization and an international conference, we are not referring to the initiatives and efforts of certain NATO states. These are only interested in a NATO solution.

We mean an international conference in which, apart from the interested parties, the nonaligned and the socialist countries of the area should be invited to play an active part. The intercommunal dialogue, which is being conducted under UN auspices and on the basis of UN resolutions, could, within the framework of these intensified efforts, acquire a more basic character and a new effectiveness.

The dramatic Lebanese developments render all these trends much more timely to the Cyprus struggle. Lebanon has once more demonstrated the meaning of "solutions" of "Camp David" type and that U.S. "mediation" complicates instead of solves problems and leads the people into tragedies like the one which the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples are now experiencing.

Question: In order to meet the goals of the struggle, what character must the Cypriot domestic front have and what, in your opinion, must be done toward this end?

Answer: Specifically, during this critical phase of the Cypriot problem, in an area which is being sorely tried by the aggressiveness of U.S. imperialism and its organs, it is imperative that all patriotic and democratic forces in Cyprus be united on the basis of a militant line concerning its salvation. I believe that such a unity also reflects the expectations of the greatest majority of the Cypriot people.

I believe that the cooperation attained by the Democratic Party and AKEL and the minimum program upon which it is based is a very positive step in this direction. This must be protected against the slanderous attacks of the reactionary forces.

Question: On what basis must relations between Cyprus and Greece be based, and what must each of the two sides do to maintain these relations at the best possible level?

Answer: Relations must be based on the fact that Cyprus is an independent state, a member of the United Nations and must be based on respect for this reality and the principle of nonintervention in the domestic affairs of one country by the other. The fact that the Greek Cypriot community does exist should not be an excuse for violations, but on the contrary dictates respect of this principle by Greece within the framework of joint struggle and support of the Cypriot people's struggle for an independent, nonaligned, sovereign Cyprus without foreign troops and without foreign military bases.

Naturally, such a line is incompatible with a pro-NATO and pro-U.S. policy by Greece.

For this reason, truly harmonious cooperation and joint action can be implemented -- over and above simple intentions -- only within the framework of an independent Greek policy.

Question: What past mistakes should Cyprus and Greece avoid?

Answer: The most calamitous mistake for Cyprus was the confinement of the Cypriot problem, in one way or the other, within Western channels.

The nonaligned policy of Cyprus was the only policy which could have effectively defended the independence, integrity and sovereignty of the island. It is from this principle that every single Greek Government must start if it wants to support and actively assist the Cypriot struggle. The reason is that there exists a very long and painful experience of efforts to undermine the nonaligned policy of Cyprus, efforts from a number of forces and, primarily, in the name of the theory of the "national center" pursued by previous Greek governments which led to the 1974 junta coup in Cyprus which gave the excuse for the Turkish invasion. The Greek Government must be particularly sensitive to the question of respect for the nonaligned independence of Cyprus.

Today, there are no more margins left for more mistakes and delusions. The confinement of the Cyprus issue within the shell of the West, reliance for its solution exlusively upon Western "mediation" and "initiatives," its derailment from the UN line and the effort to prevent a search for solutions by forces such as the socialist and nonaligned countries, which have always stood by Cyprus, cannot lead anywhere else except to open or covert partition and the annihilation of Cyprus.

SPOKESMAN ON DIALOGUE, BRIEFINGS, NONALIGNMENT

NC231131 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 23 Jul 82

[Text] The government spokesman stated the current phase of the intercommunal dialogue is expected to end prior to the new session of the UN General Assembly, according to all indications.

Replying to a relevant question, the spokesman added that the UN General Assembly starts at the end of September and the Cyprus issue is expected to come up for discussion in October or November.

The spokesman, replying to relevant questions, stated that during the last visit of the president of the republic to Athens decisions were made on the next steps dealing with conclusion of the current phase of the intercommunal dialogue without delays and on the question of the appeal to the United Nations. The spokesman added that the same decisions were also taken in Nicosia and that consultations on further handling between the Cyprus and Greek Governments continue. The spokesman added that the UN secretary general is informed on the views of the Cyprus Government.

Asked to comment on a press report that the president of the republic systematically avoids briefing the people on the progress of the Cyprus issue, as well as on emerging prospects, the spokesman said President Kiprianou clearly briefed the people in his speech at Elevtheria Square and revealed what was allowed to be said at the current stage. The spokesman added that President Kiprianou knows his responsibilities toward the people better than anyone else.

The government spokesman stated that the Cypriot policy has always been nonaligned and there is no intent to alter it. He made the statement on being called upon to comment on the statement of the president of the Greek Chamber of Deputies, Alevras, that there must be an indivisible Greek and Cypriot foreign policy and added that the Greek Government never recommended a change in the Cypriot nonaligned policy. On the contrary, he added, Greek Prime Minister Papandreou repeatedly spoke on the Cypriot nonaligned policy.

In conclusion, the government spokesman stated that the national council will be convened under the light of developments and when it is considered necessary to do so.

PAPANDREOU ANNOUNCES MORATORIUM WITH TURKEY

NC221912 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 22 Jul 82

[Text] A moratorium has been agreed upon between Greece and Turkey. This was announced to the Ministerial Council this evening by Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou. The governments of the two countries, he said, have agreed, without altering their positions, to refrain from statements or actions that could undermine the necessary climate for contacts and dialogue. Papandreou stated there must be absolutely no feeling about the solution of the great pending issues. He is just reporting what happened, that is, that a climate is being created which will permit a Greek-Turkish dialogue, without provocative statements or actions, a dialogue that will be based on an effort to create a framework for discussions. The prime minister also stressed that the government is not conducting secret diplomacy. On the contrary, he said, open diplomacy has been inaugurated and he is personally prepared to speak both to the people and to the Chamber of Deputies. Specifically, the prime minister stated:

[Begin Papandreou recording] Tonight, I would like to announce to the Ministerial Council that a moratorium has been agreed upon with Turkey. As you know, since this spring, from March approximately, an effort has been started toward the moratorium. This was recently concluded, after 12 meetings between Kapsis [deputy foreign affairs minister] and Alacam, the Turkish ambassador in Greece, in Athens.

I must state that I am particularly pleased about this development and I would like to explain its contents in a few words. It is truly extremely simple. Both governments have agreed that over a period of a few months they will not proceed to make statements that are provocative or carry out violations that could undermine the climate, the imperative climate, if there is to be contact and dialogue around various aspects of certain issues.

I must stress that nothing over and above this is provided for under the agreement. In other words, neither the one side -- Greece -- nor the other side -- Turkey -- have in any way altered their positions, the positions which, I believe, all of you know very well from the history of recent years.

Consequently, the positions of both sides will remain immovable, but there is the agreement to refrain from any move, whether this has to do with statements or, I repeat, violations or provocative actions that could create a climate which would not permit resumption of the dialogue. I use the term dialogue, not any other term, because this has to do only with the dialogue.

I would like to add, in respect to this, that the first contact is provided for. This is because the discussions held between Kapsis and Ambassador Alacam were not discussions on the essence of the matter, in other words, on Greek-Turkish differences. This is what I want to stress. They were simply efforts to formulate and facilitate the context of this term, the truce, the moratorium, as I stressed earlier.

It may appear peculiar that this required 12 meetings. It was not a dialogue, however. I wish to stress this term, dialogue, because recently there was an accusation from the official opposition that we were conducting secret diplomacy. In no way have we inaugurated open diplomacy and I wish to remind all that I have already had a television appearance in which I explained to the Greek people the problems we are faced with and the methods we are using to handle them. I will always be prepared to speak both to the people and to the Chamber of Deputies. There is no problem about this, because I am always at the disposal of the party leaders for a briefing. I am always at their disposal, and I am certain that Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos as well as Kapsis are available on the matter in hand.

In order to return to the subject, therefore, the prospect is that there will be a meeting in early October in Ottawa, where both the Greek and the Turkish foreign ministers will be. What is the object of this meeting, of the dialogue? It will be to examine the framework, if you wish, of the differences over certain issues between Greece and Turkey. I stress this because the exact context will consist of a discussion of a framework within which the two countries could, perhaps, move in order to solve their differences peacefully.

As you see, as of tonight, I inaugurate this climate of moratorium. Naturally, I hope that the very same spirit will prevail on the other shore, in Ankara. I wish to conclude by stating that there must be no feeling that the great issues are being solved. What has simply happened is that a climate is being created which will permit a dialogue, not under violations or provocative statements, but a dialogue based upon the effort to find a framework for discussion. [end recording]

MINISTRY SAYS NOTHING DEFINITE ON BEIRUT FORCE

NC222001 Athens ATHENS NEWS in English 22 Jul 82 p 4

[Text] The Ministry of National Defense has announced that no preparations have been made for the despatch of a 300-man task force to Beirut.

The announcement followed recent reports that the government is "standing by" with troops ready to join Americans, Frenchmen and others in making up a peace-keeping force for Lebanon.

"Our participation in such a force, if there is even to be one, remains simply a possibility" a ministry spokesman said.

DE VOLKSKRANT DISAPPOINTED WITH D'66 CONGRESS

PM220925 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 19 Jul 82 p 3

[Editorial: "Melodrama"]

[Text] The Democrats '66 [D'66] congress in Amersfoort was a sultry melodrama unworthy of the party's internal democratic traditions. A strategy discussion raged that was more vehement than relevant and the congress was kept busy by the changing moods of Mr Terlouw. Little Jan [disparaging name for Terlouw] cried, nearly everyone comforted him and then Little Jan was able once again to laugh as the party's leading candidate in the fall election. But in the end around one-third of the congress delegates seemed not to be too keen on a leader whose threat of resignation as a wounded party lasted most of the day. Definitely not a strong start.

For some leaders political matters are taken much too personally, with the result that extraneous elements find their way into party policy and party decisions. It is true that in the case of Terlouw this happens in a much less conscious and orchestrated way than in the case of Van Agt, but the effect is much the same. It is now the case that as far as political content is concerned he is alienated from his party, but the differences are swept away in a wave of emotions stirred up by other D'66 ministers.

In such an atmosphere the political arguments disappear behind the slogans and the cries from the heart. Things can even go so far that party leader Terlouw forbids all discussion of the leadership because he cannot tolerate it. And the congress even swallows this. Similarly the decision about future coalition possibilities was also disturbed by highly personal elements. This sort of party leadership poisons party democracy and in the case of D'66 this is a new and sorry development.

By a tiny majority the congress decided to leave open the possibility — which is thought to be very small — of a coalition with the Christian Democratic appeal and the People's Party for Freedom and Democracy. It is very probable that the reelection of Terlouw to lead the party into the election played an unconscious role in this decision. There was virtual agreement that the D'66 should avoid reinforcing a rightwing government and everyone must know this, but a formal declaration of this remained impossible.

This also means that if the election and the subsequent government formation negotiations take a certain course a new D'66 congress could be faced with the difficult choice between ruling together with the right or blocking any majority government, and this after the Christian Democratic appeal with the help of this D'66 strategy had an easier time of relegating the Labor Party to the sidelines. This sultry drama staged by D'66 and its somewhat childish leader was thus not entirely innocent.

KREISKY INTERVIEWED ON MIDDLE EAST SITUATION

DW261243 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1000 GMT 24 Jul 82

[Interview with Chancellor Bruno Kreisky by reporter Heribert Schwan; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] Does the world have to face the possibility of the annihilation of the Palestinians by the Israelis?

[Answer] No, this is impossible. You cannot make millions of people disappear. Renewed resistance will always spring from among these millions of people. The most cruel and incomprehensible facet of Begin's policy is that word about the final solution. We've heard that before.

[Question] This is possibly supposed to happen within 3 weeks.

[Answer] There is no such thing. He can annihilate those who are surrounded in western Beirut, but he cannot annihilate an entire people.

[Question] How do you assess the role of the great powers?

[Answer] Most deplorable indeed. All of them failed because they simply are not prepared for constructive solutions. About 1 and 1/2 years ago, the Europeans made an attempt to take reality into account. They recognized the significance of the Palestinian problem, yet lacked the strength to convince the Americans of it. The only positive aspect in all this is that the restraint of the great powers has indeed led to a situation where no conflict will flare up there that might ignite the whole world.

[Question] Do you have any explanation for, above all, the restraint of the Soviet Union?

[Answer] I must actually say that this does not come as a great surprise to me because the Soviet Union is reluctant to intervene -- at least as long as Syria is not touched -- because the Soviets are aware that this might unleash a conflict of incalculable dimensions.

The Israelis are perfectly aware that only the United States can cut off their military supplies -- turn off the gas, so to speak. However, as long as the United States is in the predicament of being unable to do without these 300,000 Israeli soldiers, we cannot expect any great things to come from there.

[Question] Could Europe assume the role of mediator?

[Answer] Receptiveness on both sides is necessary for mediation. On the part of the Israeli Government, a spirit prevails which, I think, is not favorable for mediation.

[Question] Can you visualize Lebanon eventually being neutral?

[Answer] I could imagine that very well, provided it is possible to make all foreign troops leave the country and to have a strong international force stationed there during a period of transition. In that respect, however, the Americans would have to cooperate, as would the Soviet Union, in my opinion. People don't like to hear this. Yet the Soviet Union is already there -- in Syria, to be exact. This is the way the region should be calmed. After all, this is exactly what happened in Austria after the war. All four great powers were in Austria. A free country ultimately emerged. That could certainly be repeated.

Statement Issued

["Statement" by Chancellor Bruno Kreisky on the Middle East situation issued on 23 July]

[Text] The Austrian Government has always held the view that a just and lasting settlement of Middle East problems presupposes the mutual recognition of the Israeli and Palestinian rights. This mutual recognition must be declared on the one hand by Israel and on the other by the legitimate representatives of the Palestinians, which Austria recognizes as the PLO. The statements of Yasir 'Arafat, chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, published in THE TIMES of 8 July, as well as the statements by the Palestinian political figure Dr Isam Sartawy at a lecture sponsored by the French Institute for International Relations on 13 July contain clear indications of the PLO's readiness to formally declare the mutual recognition of the Israeli and Palestinian rights on a reciprocal basis.

The chancellor considers these statements to be a confirmation of the conviction held for quite some time by the Austrian Government that the PLO is ready for mutual recognition. The chancellor considers this readiness of the PLO to be a very essential factor which can provide important stimuli for the endeavors to achieve a just and lasting settlement of the Palestinian problem.

It is the conviction of the Austrian Government that in view of this readiness on the part of the PLO there must be a corresponding readiness on Israel's part to open a constructive dialogue with the PLO.

ARGENTINA NEGOTIATING FOR STEYR 'CUIRASSIERS'

AU261440 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 25 Jul 82 p 7

[Summary] Argentina at present is reportedly negotiating in Buenos Aires with a representative of the Austrian Steyr-Daimler-Puch Corporation on the purchase of 27 Austrian-made "Cuirassier" light tanks, worth more than $32 million. According to an AFP report Emmerich Wengersky, head of the Steyr Company's arms department, arrived with a company delegation in Buenos Aires last Monday. Johann Feichtinger, deputy director general of the Steyr-Daimler-Puch Corporation, declared in reply to a question about such an arms deal with Argentina that there was "a specific possibility of such a business transactions," but he refused to comment further. The Vienna office of the Steyr Company has confirmed that Director Wengersky is at present abroad.

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON U.S. EMBARGO POLICY

DW261203 Munich Bayerischer Rundfunk Network in German 1600 GMT 23 Jul 82

[Interview with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt by Washington Correspondent Ulrich Schiller in California; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Many people are talking about a trade war between Europe and the United States. Is such a war inevitable in view of the increased tension over the pipeline issue, the unresolved steel issue and the forthcoming controversies in GATT?

[Answer] I believe that it must be avoided at nearly all cost. It would be a foolish act of madness to introduce mutual trade barriers now between the Western democratic nations, the world's industrial states, in the face of a world economic recession which, God knows, is profound. We Germans have not contributed to this development, and we will not contribute to it in the future. On the contrary, it is in our urgent interest to avoid this nonsense.

[Question] How can it be prevented?

[Answer] If everyone behaved as we Germans do, that is, if they abided by agreements concluded and stood by the accords that have been signed.

[Question] One of your central arguments is always that the social and economic stability of the Western democracies is necessary to demonstrate their desire for defense and their will to stand their ground. Is this argument understood everywhere in the United States?

[Answer] I believe that this argument is understood very widely in the United States. What is not understood yet everywhere in the world or everywhere in the United States is that the maintenance of the economic and social stability necessary for political stability -- especially the maintenance of economic stability -- cannot be successful unless the factors currently intensifying the world economic resession are corrected. It is important, for example, to put an end to the policy of high interest rates. This requires that budget deficits be smaller than has been the case. This makes it necessary to recognize the danger contained in trade protectionism and in dividing the world into small segments with everybody muddling along on his own; it makes it necessary to draw conclusions from the realization of the necessity of strengthening social and economic stability. What is still lacking is drawing the proper conclusions.

[Question] You have repeatedly referred to your trip to the United States as an action aimed at reducing damage. Is this still possible or have the increased tensions between Paris and Washington over the pipeline put this in doubt?

[Answer] Basically, all European governments assess the issue identically. I don't see any unique aggravation between Paris and Washington or between Washington and any other European capital. Basically, all of us have the same interest -- to get out of the world economic crisis. Anyone contributing to aggravating this crisis would be doing a disservice not only to his own country, but to the rest of the world.

It is certainly true that the subsequent extension of the embargo to European license holders constitutes an attempt to extend the U.S. Government's sovereignty to European countries as well. European governments are responding negatively -- some more calmly than others, but still equally negatively. This means that all 10 members of the European Community are reacting in an equally negative way. This was to be expected. The pipeline will be built in any case. I hope that the excitement will die down during the next 6 months.

[Question] The pipeline is ultimately connected with the question of how one is to behave toward the Soviet Union, a strategic question to which the Americans respond differently than the Europeans. Do you see a danger that differences over trade and commercial law matters will affect arms control and disarmament issues?

[Answer] It would be a cardinal mistake if we allowed that to happen. Disarmament and arms control are not the subject of negotiations simply because we like the Russians or for as long as we like them. We have a vital interest in disarmament and in curbing and halting the arms race. Above all, if we find it difficult to understand the other side or even consider it capable of pursuing a policy to our own disadvantage or harm, the more we must try through disarmament to prevent future conflicts from developing into armed conflicts. Therefore, we have an urgent interest in disarmament. Disarmament negotiations must not be linked to the good behavior of the other side. There are people who are inclined to do this. I consider this to be out of place, and I would never agree to making the desire for disarmament talks dependent on behavior in the field of world trade, the world finance marketsor whatever other fields.

[Question] Following the detailed private and official talks by the chiefs of state and government of the Western industrial nations at the economic summit, the public has become somewhat skeptical about the outcome of such personal meetings with regard to political decisions. Now you have just met not only the new secretary of state, Shultz, but also other advisers of Reagan. Do you see an opportunity to patch the threatened rift in the alliance through such consultations?

[Answer] I think you are exaggerating when you talk about a rift in the alliance. The alliance will survive this crisis; it has already survived many crises. There was talk about a crisis of NATO in the newspapers and other media in the fifties and again in the sixties and again in the seventies. This happens repeatedly with the regularity of church festivals. So let's not overdramatize this. By the way, I continue to be of the opinion that personal contacts are extremely valuable. I would welcome it very much if President Reagan's intention to meet Brezhnev were realized because then they would experience together what they can't read in their papers -- that the other is also a man with human reactions. The better men know each other, the more they will have a chance to conclude treaties with each other.

COMPANY CONSIDERS PIPELINE TURBINE DELIVERIES

[Text] Nuremberg/Eschborn, 26 Jul (DPA) -- No decision has yet been taken on whether the AEG-Kanis Company will deliver the turbines, some of them already completed, for the proposed Soviet trans-Siberian natural gas pipeline in spite of the U.S. embargo. DPA/VWD (ECONOMIC NEWS SERVICE) learned from a well-informed source that the first delivery has been contracted for next month. Talks are now going on between the European suppliers about the legal consequences of breaking the embargo and about the replacement of rotor blades, originally to be supplied by the American General Electric Company, for the turbines. Some of the turbines prepared by AEG-Kanis still lack rotors. The blades can only be supplied by General Electric or by a General Electric licensee such as the French Alsthom-Atlantique Company.

The negotiations are being conducted by AEG-Kanis management. It is concentrating its efforts and has hopes in the political realm. These hopes, observers say, are that either the U.S. administration will relent in view of solid European resistance or that Alsthom-Atlantique, a part of the French nationalized CGE, will deliver the rotor blades at the insistence of the French Government.

All the governments concerned have asked their country's firms to observe the sanctity of contracts. Commercial observers note that, according to official German quarters, European firms participating in the project have to decide on adhering to contracts not only in light of their contract with the USSR but also in light of embargo obligations entered into with their U.S. partners.

No confirmation was available of reports that replacement rotor deliveries by Alsthom are being made more difficult by the price proposed by the French firm. According to informed sources, the point at issue is whether Alsthom can deliver in time. The 40 rotors to be delivered by Alsthom were originally intended to be spares for the turbines to be delivered by German and other firms and delivery was planned for no earlier than October 1983.

FDP SPOKESMAN: GOVERNMENT SHOULD TALK WITH PLO

[Text] Bonn, 26 Jul (DPA) -- Juergen Moellemann, spokesman on security policy in the FDP Parlimaentary Group, sees the PLO leadership's indirect recognition of Israel's right to exist as a historical chance for peace in the Middle East. On Monday Moellemann called on the Federal Government to encourage the United States to hold an international peace conference with the participation of the Palestinians to define a framework for and guarantee a permanent Middle East solution. The Federal Government should show its willingness to provide such an impetus by holding talks with the PLO.

The Federal Government refused to make a statement on the new developments on Monday. A Foreign Ministry spokesman said the text of Sunday's statement in which PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat recognised all UN resolutions on the Palestinian question, and thus indirectly Israel's right to exist, is not yet officially known in Bonn.

The Federal Government has refused formal recognition of the PLO because Bonn only recognises states and because the PLO does not have an exclusive right to represent the Palestinians.

REGIONAL CDU LEADERS FORM FRONT AGAINST KOHL

DW270637 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 26 Jul 82 p 12

[Text] Leading CDU politicians in Northern Germany want to keep Helmut Kohl, until now the Christian Democratic candidate for chancellor, from power in Bonn.

Minister-Presidents Gerhard Stoltenberg and Ernst Albrecht, Berlin Mayor Richard von Weizsaeker and Hamburg opposition leader Walther Leisler Kiep agreed that the best way to do this would be to achieve new elections to the Bonn parliament. This would be preceded by a CDU national congress at which the four plan to present a candidate of their own to run against Kohl.

Kohl's opponents think they would have a solid majority at such a party congress, whereas a vote in the CDU/CSU Bundestag faction would favor the incumbent opposition leader.

Even if new elections cannot be achieved, the CDU in Northern Germany intends to attack, but only after the Schleswig-Holstein land elections on 13 March 1983. Kohl is then to be challenged openly -- by chancellor candidate Stoltenberg, if he wins election convincingly, or by chancellor candidate Von Weizsaecker who, in the opinion of the Kohl adversaries, is proving in Berlin that he would be acceptable to the entire CDU/CSU.

In the meantime, Ernst Albrecht has reportedly shelved his ambitions to be chancellor. He is considered an insult to the CSU and to CSU leader Franz Josef Strauss. "In the interests of the cause," one of the four conspirators said, Albrecht for this reason gave up the idea of running for chancellor in the next Bundestag elections.

GREEN PARTY SCORES GROUP'S VISIT TO LIBYA

LD261252 Hamburg DPA in German 1157 GMT 26 Jul 82

[Text] Bonn, 26 Jul (DPA) -- The Green Party's Federal Executive has strongly dissociated itself with a visit by a group of Green Party members and the peace movement to Libyan head of state Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi. A statement published in Bonn today says the visit, which was learned of with consternation from the media, was neither discussed with nor decided by the Executive or other party bodies. Al-Qadhdhafi's guests also included Executive member Roland Vogt. Executive members now plan to get together with him and discuss the "necessary steps" to be taken.

The Executive stresses that it regards the meeting with the Libyan revolutionary leader as "politically questionable and harmful for the Green Party's credibility in foreign affairs." It gives as its reasons the fact that there are doubts whether the so-called people's congresses in Libya meet the Green Party's democratic standards, that Al-Qadhdhafi pursues a policy of internal violence and an "imperialist policy in Africa with money, weapons and Libyan troops on foreign territory."

The Green Party wants cooperation with other peoples "primarily through developing contacts and cooperation with ecological, peace and social movements in other countries." The Green Party is not striving for contacts, talks and negotiations with foreign governments and heads of governments in the foreseeable future.

GDR ADHERES TO CDU POLITICIANS' VISIT REFUSAL

LD261704 Hamburg DPA in German 1602 GMT 26 Jul 82

[Text] Bonn/East Berlin, 26 Jul (DPA) -- The GDR is adhering to its decision to refuse entry for private visits to CDU politicians Bernard Vogel and Heiko Hoffmann. That is the outcome of a talk between the FRG Permanent Mission in East Berlin and the GDR Foreign Ministry, which became known today. There is no indication that the GDR will reverse its measures, which have been sharply criticized in Bonn. For the time being the Federal Government is not planning to do anything about it.

CAR DISCOVERED BY POLICE LINKED TO RED ARMY

[Text] Karlsruhe/Wiesbaden, 26 Jul (DPA) -- The police have found a vehicle that probably belongs to the "Red Army Faction." This was announced by the Karlsruhe Federal Bar on Monday in response to questioning. It was in a visitors' carpark at a rehabilitation center in Meisenheim (Rhineland-Palatinate).

A forged Austrian plastic identity card was found under the floor of the luggage compartment of the vehicle, which is now being examined by experts from the Federal Criminal Office. According to the Federal German Bar the card number corresponds to papers found some time ago in Heidelberg which were identified as belonging to Henning Beer (23), probably a Red Army member on the run. He is suspected, among other things, of planning and carrying out the Red Army Faction attacks on the U.S. Ramstein Airbase and on U.S. General Frederick Kroesen in Heidelberg together with the leading terrorists sought by the police, Christian Klar and Brigitte Mohnhaupt.

MAUROY SCORES U.S. ON EMBARGO, INTEREST RATES

PM270821 Paris LE MONDE in French 25-26 Jul 82 p 2

[Excerpt] In an interview published Saturday 24 July by the PCF northern daily LIBERTE, [French Premier] Pierre Mauroy stated in particular with regard to the U.S.: "The U.S. attitude is particularly worrying. I cannot imagine that the United States does not intend to honor the pledges made by the seven heads of state and of government during the Versailles summit. I am thinking in particular of the monetary agreement, of North-South dialogue and of all trade questions. The example of the iron and steel industry deserves to be highlighted. The United States cannot make regulations to suit itself and impose the law of the jungle. That is not our concept of trade relations. The example of the aeronautical industry has already proved to us in recent years the existence of American protectionism. That is not how we view our trade relations. They must be based on freedom of trade. In any case we are not prepared to allow an undeclared war on European interests and technologies, and French in particular, in Geneva, to continue.... Our countries have the means of overcoming the crisis. The OECD's new forecasts show that. Nonetheless the recovery needs to be based on increased investment, for without investment we will not create stable jobs. However, that resumption in investment is hindered by the excessive interest rates from which we are suffering and which could be reduced by greater understanding among industrialized countries. On that plane too the United States has assumed a heavy burden of responsibility and is helping to prolong the crisis.

INTERIOR MINISTER DENIES SECRET PACT WITH ASALA

[Text] Paris, July 26 (AFP) -- French Interior Minister Gaston Defferre today denied reports that France had secretly agreed not to arrest any non-French Armenian political militants. The left-wing newspaper LIBERATION today printed an interview with a leader of the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia (ASALA), who said France had drawn up such an agreement with the Armenian Orly group but then broken it with the December arrest of an Armenian-American.

Mihran Mihranian, who was interviewed in Beirut, said Orly responded with the two bomb attacks on cafes on Paris' Left Bank Tuesday and Saturday. The attacks, which left 17 people injured, were claimed by Orly in telephone calls to AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE.

Mr Defferre said when he took over his ministry, he met, on his request, with representatives of Armenian groups and warned them that any violence could turn public opinion against them. He said the French Government "will not give in to threats or violence" and that such bombings only "hurt the cause they claim to defend."

MADRID DAILY DISCUSSES U.S. PIPELINE EMBARGO

PM270811 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 22 Jul 82 p 8

[Editorial: "The Embargo Reagan Is Demanding"]

[Text] The hardening of the U.S. attitude on the embargoing of Western technology for the construction of the Siberian gas pipeline has unleashed a whirlwind in relations between Europe and the United States, which have been deteriorating since the Versailles summit. Schmidt and Mitterrand apparently viewed on that occasion the request for restrictions and toughening credit terms for the communist countries as something irrelevant and almost symbolic. However, the White House's fulminating response has left no room for doubts, and it is doing its utmost to block the Western contribution to the gas pipeline.

In principle, the Soviets cannot help witnessing with satisfaction this dispute among their antagonists, which not even they themselves would have planned with such success. The situation in Poland and the oppression inflicted on Solidarity's members and supporters were the reason cited by Washington to highlight for its allies the danger of energy dependence on a supplier such as the USSR, which is prepared to set its political interests above any other consideration.

However, the European economic situation has turned sour the proposal by the United States, which, moreover, was possibly counting on some soothing gesture by the Warsaw regime in order to reduce its demands. General Jaruzelski's message yesterday and the relative easing announced in the Polish situation could perhaps modify Washington's intransigence in this respect, but at the time of writing this commentary, there is no sign which makes it possible to believe so.

The attempt to implement the embargo is being made when the number of unemployed in West Europe now totals 16 million people, and when a number of grave problems persist. The controversy over interest rates and an overvalued dollar, which is increasing the cost of imports and delaying European recovery, still persists. Nor is the now exacerbated dispute over trade in subsidized iron and steel products, which is added to the long-standing dispute over the subsidies for the EEC's agricultural products, going well. An embargo on supplies worth $10 billion constitutes for European spokesmen an invitation to increased unemployment and an attack on their sovereignty, although $10 billion -- half the value of Spain's annual sales to other countries -- represents only 0.8 percent of the industrial countries' exports. Because of all this, the Europeans are resisting the U.S. diktat. Thatcher herself has threatened, if the United States does not cancel its embargo orders to its subsidiaries in the United Kingdom, to urge them to disobey the U.S. laws. A group of German banks has already just taken an irreversible decision: the granting of a $1.6 billion credit to finance the construction of the gas pipeline.

Hopes of a settlement which will reduce the tensions between Washington and the European capitals have been aroused with the new secretary of state's arrival on the international scene, but the Reagan administration's U.S. foreign policy has been largely laid down, and the priority aim is to stand up to Moscow without the vacillations of Carter and his team. To this effect the repression in Poland requires, in its opinion, a firm response -- an economic boycott -- and Shultz will be able to do little or nothing to change course.

Nevertheless, history demonstrates that economic sanctions have almost never resolved anything of what they were verbally intended to resolve; neither previously with Rhodesia, nor now with South Africa or the USSR. And the boycott could boomerang against the boycotters themselves -- the European countries which viewed the Siberian gas as an attractive solution to their energy problems.

The U.S. stance, ostensibly based on moral principles, in fact constitutes an added blow on top of the economic and other difficulties of every kind from which Europe is suffering. The problem -- as Belgian Foreign Minister Tindemans has pointed out -- is "whether the lesson of the economic catastrophe of the thirties has or has not been learned." The forecasts for growth in the production of goods and services (GNP) in the area of the OECD industrial countries for 1982 are virtually nil, with an estimate of 2.5 percent growth in 1983. If the modest recovery forecast for 1983 does not occur, either, unemployment will be even higher. The unemployment forecasts total 9 percent of the working population in the industrial countries -- that is, about 32 million workers -- in the first half of next year. In this situation the general increase in protectionist policies -- which are increasingly evident within the EEC framework itself -- could prove to be a catastrophe. And the threat of even greater impoverishment, with pernicious consequences, could become a reality if the Americans persist in reviving against the East bloc embargo lists of strategic products already used in the forties and fifties, which did not prevent the USSR's technological and military progress.

KING HUSAYN CONTINUES VISIT; MEETS HABIB

[Text] London -- His Majesty King Husayn received at his residence this morning Philip Habib, the envoy of the U.S. President. The meeting is within the framework of the U.S. envoy's moves and meetings with the leaders of certain Arab countries to seek a solution to the Lebanese crisis. The meeting lasted about 1 hour.

His Majesty King Husayn stressed to Habib that international efforts must focus on the complete and unconditional withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the Lebanese territories in accordance with UN Security Council Resolutions 508 and 509 and that the continued Israeli occupation of large parts of Lebanon constitutes a serious precedent toward which the international community must show no indulgence to prevent new faits accomplis from being established on Lebanese territories. Lebanon is a founding member of the United Nations and has enriched Arab countries with knowledge, culture and civilized achievements during its contemporary history. Israel's objective in Lebanon is to divert attention from what is taking place on the West Bank and in Gaza -- namely, tightening the Israeli occupation's control and preparing new plans for settlements which will hamper and undermine any efforts for reaching a just, lasting and comprehensive peace in the region.

His majesty stressed that what is currently taking place in besieged Beirut violates all international norms as Lebanese civilians are being shelled and harrassed to a degree that will lead to a human catastrophe, not to mention the continued Israeli acts of aggression against the PLO and the attempts to contain any PLO initiative that will enable it to leave honorably which will also lead to more catastrophes.

His majesty King Husayn said that the settlement of the Lebanese crisis must have as a target the protection of Lebanon as an independent entity, the security and unity of its territories and its resumption of a full and positive role in the Arab community.

COCKFIELD: U.S.'WRONG,UNPRINCIPLED' ON EMBARGO

LD262000 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1803 GMT 26 Jul 82

[Text] Trade Secretary Lord Cockfield today accused the United States of "wrong and unprincipled" action in the way her export embargo affected the contracts of British companies concerned withthe Siberian gas pipeline.

"It is an attempt to interfere with existing contracts and represents an unacceptable extension of American extra-territorial sovereignty," he told the Lords during debate on economic policy.

Lord Cockfield said he hoped it would be possible to resolve these matters in a mutually acceptably way.

"But if this proves impossible, I do wish to make it clear that we are determined to defend our own national interests."

SECRET DOCUMENT ON TRANSPORTING EXPLOSIVES FOUND

LD231346 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1314 GMT 23 Jul 82

[Text] The Ministry of Defence [MOD] is investigating the discovery on a busy street of a secret document detailing plans to transport explosives through Britain.

It includes vehicle registration numbers, drivers' names and times for ammunition convoys along the M4 from Barry docks in South Wales to a U.S. Air Force base at Welford, Berkshire. It also gives instructions to cope with emergencies, and contact telephone numbers.

The document, on MOD paper, was handed to welder Pablo Prendergast, 36, after a friend found it outside a police station in Penarth, South Glamorgan.

"If I was a terrorist I could use this information to obtain explosives that could do 10 times as much damage as done by the bombs in London this week" said Mr Prendergast.

"As I understand the military police are investigating how this happened, but there should be a full inquiry".

The typewritten document is headed "Letter of authority request for aid with the consignment of military explosives". Registration numbers of the vehicles used are added in ink.

At MOD spokesman said "We have not seen the document yet, but it sounds as if it may be valid".

"If it is what it says, then obviously there is cause for concern. We have launched an investigation and the RAF police are also looking into it".

Convoys take shipments of high explosives from Barry to American and British bases throughout the country. The M4 route has been described as "bomb alley" by Gwent County councillors, who have already expressed their concern over the journeys to the MOD.

Greek, Cuban Statements

[Text] Cuban Foreign Minister Isodoro Malmierca arrived in Athens at noon today. He was welcomed at the airport by Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos. Our correspondent, Manolis Tsardhoulias, reports:

[Begin recording] [Tsardhoulias] Cuban Foreign Minister Isodoro Malmierca starts a 3-day official visit in our country today. Welcoming Malmierca, Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos, after expressing his happiness at the presence of the Cuban minister in Greece, continued:

[Kharalambopoulos] This is the first time that he has visited our country. The Greek people have always followed the struggles of the Cuban people for their national independence with admiration and emotion, and we are particularly happy to welcome today the minister of this friendly country, because Cuba has always taken a positive position on issues of interest to us, particularly on the question of Cyprus. Cuba plays an important role in the Nonaligned Movement, and I am particularly touched in welcoming the minister, with whom we will confer tomorrow and the day after.

[Tsardhoulias] In reply, the Cuban minister stressed:

[Malmierca, in Spanish fading into Greek translation] I am very happy to be in Greece. I am very grateful to Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos, who invited us, making this visit possible. We are certain that during our talks in the next few days we will be able to cooperate in strengthening relations between our two countries. We will have the opportunity to exchange views on many issues of interest to both countries and specifically on bilateral issues. The international situation is sufficiently complicated. We are certain that despite this, there are many common points which unite the two countries in the positions they hold on international issues. We will, therefore, have the opportunity to cooperate and express our solidarity with the peoples who are fighting for their independence and sovereignty. [end recording]

GOVERNMENT FREEZES GAS TALKS WITH USSR

LD261538 Hamburg DPA in German 1504 GMT 26 Jul 82

[Text] Brussels, 26 Jul (DPA) -- The Belgian Government decided at the weekend to "freeze" the negotiations which have been in progress for almost 2 years with the Soviet Union on importing natural gas from the USSR. This was stated by a government spokesman to DPA and the Economic News Service today. He said Belgium has already established contacts with the Netherlands Government about a possible switch to Dutch natural gas. The spokesman conceded that the delivery price offered by Moscow is very favorable compared with the Dutch and even more the Algerian prices. But the Belgian Government has received "no promise" from the USSR on participation by Belgian industry in the European natural gas pipeline project.

Another reason for the decision was the political aspect. Without identifying with the U.S. administration's position, the spokesman said that the risk of political dependence must not be ignored.

According to the Belgian Ministry of Economic Affairs, Belgium is currently importing from the Netherlands 7 billion cubic meters of natural gas, from Algeria 2.5 billion cubic meters and from the Scandinavian North Sea field 2 billion cubic meters. The signing of the Belgian-Soviet contract would mean additional imports of initially 1 billion cubic meters.

OLA ULLSTEN ON 'BALTIC BOUNDARY' ISSUE

LD251216 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 25 Jul 82

[Text] Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten yesterday spoke about the issue of defining the boundary in the Baltic. Answering a question by the Swedish news agency, Ullsten noted that the Swedish Government can only accept a solution according to which the boundary between Sweden and the Soviet Union is drawn between Gotland and the Baltic states. Ullsten criticized former leader of the Moderate Coalition Party Goesta Bohman and other moderates for having taken up the boundary issue in the election campaign. The Baltic boundary issue is the most important international matter we have been dealing with for a very long time and that is why it is not at all suitable for a party political debate, Ullsten pointed out.

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON TALKS WITH SHULTZ

[Excerpts] Calgary, Canada, 28 Jul (DPA) -- During a 21-hour train journey through the Rocky Mountains of western Canada Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt summarized in a DPA interview on Tuesday [27 Jul] his political talks in the United States.

Question: Federal Chancellor, you have conferred for 5 days with U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz. On what points did you find the best prospects for achieving closer German-U.S. coordination?

Schmidt: I believe there is a good prospect that by the end of this year the alliance partners will have left the disputes of summer 1982 behind them. A guarantee for this is the new U.S. secretary of state, George Shultz, who brings special qualities into this process of coordination between the alliance partners. These include his great experience in government -- he is now holding his fourth cabinet post. Moreover, he knows Europe and the world very well and possesses his own far-reaching judgment on world economic correlations. And finally, he has been a close friend of Ronald Reagan for years. Shultz has many friends in Europe. He will know that U.S. foreign policy can no longer reverse the gas pipeline deal, that the governments in Rome, London and Paris, we in Bonn, as well as in Tokyo and Ottawa, regard the deal as expedient and will also see it through. But this was by no means the main topic of discussion. I hope very much that discussion on this subject will now begin to ebb at last.

Question: To date the predominant impression has been that in the White House decisionmaking Reagan has relied on the close advisers who pushed the embargo through. Is it correct to say that Shultz has to become the President's leading adviser in order for changes to be made?

Schmidt: I do not wish to comment on the internal structure of governments in other states. I spoke to very, very many Americans, politicians and businessmen. I gained the impression that everyone wants to leave this family quarrel behind him as soon as possible. I was very pleased that during my visit the President himself expressed similar sentiments regarding the "family disputes."

Question: Federal Chancellor, is it true that your talks dealt too briefly -- not least because of George Shultz's special economic experience -- with security policy?

Schmidt: No, that is not true. Both topics played a major role. There is the question of the U.S. economy's leading role in the entire world economy. The United States alone represents a third of the gross social product of all industrial states in the world. The U.S. dollar, in particular U.S. dollar interest rates, is the pacemaker for interest rates throughout the world. These interest rates are too high in America. As a result, they are too high throughout the world. They must come down if investments and the labor market are to get going again. This was one of our main topics, and I had the feeling that not only Secretary of State Shultz but also very many Americans are in the meantime seeing this from the same viewpoint. The crucial question is whether the U.S. Congress will succeed in reducing the U.S. budget deficit in time. This is a decision of domestic policy of the United States, but I helped to ensure that many people understood that these domestic policy decisions by Congress, if they continue to be delayed or inadequately taken, must result in extreme worldwide consequences.

Question: With regard to security policy again, Federal Chancellor, the Geneva talks on medium-range missiles do not appear to be progressing. What did you say to your friend, George Shultz, regarding German worries in this respect?

Schmidt: We discussed this carefully. I do not, by the way, share your view that the Geneva talks are not progressing very well. The talks have, after all, only been underway for 6 months. But it is true that we are under a certain pressure of time, a certain pressure of expectations. If the talks do not lead to success, these U.S. weapons will be sited in Europe at the end of 1983 and the beginning of 1984 in order to establish a balance with the enormous Soviet SS-20 missile armaments. I do not wish in this interview to discuss details of my talks on this point with Secretary of State Shultz because I am not one of those who indulges in the foolish exercise of publicly taking apart and reassembling his own negotiating strategy before discussing the same issues with the real negotiating partner, in other words, the Soviet Union. Otherwise, you give the other side the arguments for free.

Question: Federal Chancellor, you are bringing many positive impressions home with you. How and when will you pass these on?

Schmidt: I have an appointment with Foreign Minister Genscher for this Sunday, that is, 1 and 1/2 days after my return. We will have a thorough discussion about these things either in Hamburg or on the Brahmsee.

Question: Federal Chancellor, you tried in your two public speeches in the United States to put straight some cliche ideas about the Germans which are widespread among the U.S. public. Can such an attempt be successful at all?

Schmidt: If you are on the subject of cliches: Mr. Strauss is also the subject of such cliches in America which are invented by the media and politicians and which they enjoy spreading. One of the cliches regarding the Germans is, for example, that we are not doing enough for defense. I enumerated impressive statistics on this subject as well as the fact that every U.S. commander in chief in Europe would, in the event of a crisis involving ground forces, be in command of 90 percent European soldiers and only 10 percent American soldiers. And in the case of sea and air forces, the ratio is 75:25. All this was completely new to many of those to whom I spoke and it impressed them deeply. No U.S. politician who bears responsibility doubts the firm will of the Germans and the rest of the European NATO partners to stick to the alliance, to uphold the usual philosophy, and this means adhering to one's own share in joint deterrence. But conversely, every responsibile U.S. politician also expects the Europeans to make clear to him their own European interests and not subserviently agree with every U.S. remark.

I also noticed some very surprised faces when I stated in two speeches that I had lived for 37 years in a town and in a house which was only 60 miles away from the nearest Soviet tanks, and when I told them of the centuries of common history and cultural development in Europe and of the firm will of the Germans, following two pervious world wars, to live in peace and with good neighborly relations with all German's neighbors whether in the West or in the East, whether we like their government or not.

BONN OFFICIAL, STRAUSS VIEW ON PIPELINE EMBARGO

DW261059 Hamburg BILD in German 26 Jul 82 pp 1, 10

[Interview with Otto Schlecht, state secretary in the Federal Economics Ministry, and CSU Chairman Franz Josef Strauss; date and place not given]

[Text] BILD: Despite the U.S. embargo, the other EC countries intend to deliver U.S. technology (especially turbine compressor blades with a long life span for which the AEG company, for example, holds a license) to the Soviet Union in the natural gas pipeline deal. AEG also does not intend to abide by the sanctions. What do you have to say about this?

Schlect: We have no legal instruments for providing instructions to German companies. However, the Federal Government welcomes all decisions by the companies which contribute to fulfilling the natural gas pipeline deal. The companies must make their decisions in keeping with their interests. In our opinion the U.S. embargo for European companies is against international law.

Strauss: I warn against this. This only pours oil into the fire and is dangerous.

BILD: Where do we go next?

Strauss: The only possibility is to make a new beginning with a new government in Bonn. We can talk better with the Americans because, unlike Helmut Schmidt, we have not cultivated anti-American feelings. The CDU/CSU would also not hang on to the Americans' coattails. We would make policy confidently, yet jointly with the Americans. We would not have concluded the natural gas deal on our own responsibility.

BILD: Schmidt and Lambsdorff are leveling harsh charges against the Americans...

Strauss: This makes the stupid ill-feelings even worse. Schmidt thinks he can put his foot down and object to all U.S. advice as pestering interference. The ill-feelings cannot, however, be eliminated by speeches with an ordering tone.

Graf Lambsdorff is trying to polish up his damaged prestige in the Federal Republic by uttering threatening words in the United States. This is no way to conduct foreign policy. This is why I fear that the crisis will probably intensify.

BILD: What are the objections to the gas deal?

Strauss: It increases our dependence, and in times of crisis the Soviets might cut off the supply. This holds true even today. The Federal Government has unfortunately ignored all warnings against making German jobs dependent on Soviet contracts.

BILD: Are the Americans to blame as well?

Strauss: They share a certain amount of guilt because they failed to say unequivocally at the proper time that they rejected this deal. When I consulted with top-level U.S. officials and dignitaries in late 1980 and early 1981 (among them a member of the government), no clear and unequivocal answer was given. In addition, the Americans could be better believed if they were to discontinue grain deliveries to the Soviet Union.

BILD: Reagan justifies his approach with the oppression in Poland and in Afghanistan...

Strauss: He is right in doing so. It is a poor testimonial for the catalogue of political ethics in Europe when we see how thoughtlessly indifferently the European states overlook and forget the Soviet brutality in Afghanistan and Poland.

CHEYSSON RESTATES FRANCE'S LEBANON POLICY

PM271145 Paris L'UNITE in French 23 Jul 82 pp 7, 8

[Text] External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson was the guest of Radio France International's [RFI] Third World Press Club a few days ago. On that occasion, mainly in reply to questions from RFI Director Herve Bourges and Simon Malley, editor of AFRIQUE-ASIE weekly, he recalled in detail France's position in the Lebanese affair. We think it important for the record to inform L'UNITE's readers of that part of a discussion to which they were unable to listen.

Cheysson: France has a very long-standing link with Lebanon. Lebanon is the victim of any tension and any conflict in the Near East; each time it is Lebanon which is hit, and that is particularly true today. Therefore at present the first priority -- and this really is the view held by all the French people -- must be to see how we can help to ease Lebanon's suffering and the humanitarian problems and help it to emerge as an independent, united and sovereign state. In addition France and the Near East have age-old relations. The Arabs and French, and not only the French, moreover, spent past centuries chasing each other around the Mediterranean. The former came as far as Poitiers, the latter went on crusades right into their countries...we have always lived together. We have often had conflicts. We are rooted in the same civilization and the same concept of society; everything which affects them affects us. Every time there is a war in Europe there is war there.

But let us have no illusions about the fact that the absence of peace, the impossibility of stabilizing the situation over there threatens us directly. At present they threaten us in the form of direct intervention by the superpowers using satellites as intermediaries. We must make a modest contribution: Ours is not a Near East country. We must help to restore stability in the region, and there is no stability in the world when great principles are not respected: the right of states to live in peace, the right of peoples to express themselves fully -- and that includes the building of states, and the fact that all that should result from negotiation and not from acts of violence. Thus we should constantly recall the principles and watch how they are applied, even in the most tragic situations.

Malley: President Mitterrand compared the massacres which have taken place in Lebanon with the Oradour massacres here in France [in World War II]. For the past few months everybody in the Third World and the Arab countries in particular has observed that French policy has evolved significantly on Arab problems and especially on the Palestinian people's right to have an independent state. How do you explain this development in French policy on the Palestinian conflict?

Claude Cheysson: There has been no evolution. We have been saying the same thing for 14 months and I have just recalled the principles of it. There is a slight mistake in what you said: It was not President Mitterrand who compared what is happening in the Near East with Oradour. He was asked a question by a journalist in Budapest. I was present. And the president replied that it unfortunately seems inevitable that when regular armies meet with resistance they almost naturally resort to intolerable violence, which leads to massacres which are equally intolerable. We saw that at Oradour, we have seen it in Afghanistan and we are likely to see it in Beirut. It is that that he condemned.

But let us return to your question; it is much more important. What is happening is that people are beginning to understand more clearly -- and I must say at this point that it is partly thanks to television, thanks to the intolerable, insufferable pictures which television has brought us -- that the issue at present is recognition of a people and their rights. We recognize the Israeli people's rights, which place them in the state of Israel as defined by the United Nations, and we are prepared to defend that.

But the Palestinian people have the same rights. Those rights -- self-determination to use a lofty term -- will sooner or later involve a state. Where should that state be? A state where the parties concerned will accept it, since everything must be the result of negotiations. And who could imagine that a Palestinian could agree to the center of his state being other than where he comes from -- in what was Palestine, in other words in the occupied territories, as is obvious. That obvious fact is now more clearly seen.

The important thing is for both sides to start understanding more clearly that there is no contradiction between the assertion that Israel has the right to be recognized, guaranteed and allowed to live in peace and that the Palestinians have a right to their own state. Israel's right to security will not result from violence, from crushing the neighboring people, but from recognition of the neighboring people's rights, which means that the neighboring people must be able to express themselves and make commitments.

If nobody makes commitments, how will it be possible to negotiate with those people? We therefore need the PLO. Not only does it exist and has it proven its representative nature in blood, but we need it. That is the position.

Malley: I spoke of the evolution in French policy, especially since the socialist government came to power in France. There is certainly a vast difference between what you are now upholding and what the Giscard government upheld during the last 7-year term.

Cheysson: Our main criticism of the Giscard government is its ambiguity and equivocal stance. There is not one country in the world where I do not find traces of absolutely contradictory positions held simultaneously by the previous government. And that was the case in the Near East.

For our part we have always held the same positions. It so happens that it was misunderstood; perhaps we expressed it badly, but it is the same position we have held for months. Nonetheless, looking at the present situation it is true that France now has a store of confidence from the Arab countries which impresses us greatly, which gives us a heavy burden of responsibility -- and we are not a country in the region. We are very proud of that because it is a good thing to be accepted by everybody, but we must not betray that confidence. It is not just what other people expect of us: We must take action, and that action is very difficult to define at the present time.

Bourges: France has made a proposal supported by Lebanon and by some parties in the conflict. Either the negotiations succeed and the intervention force comes into existence, or the negotiations fail and there may be a massacre. So what is France going to do?

Cheysson: Repeat the same thing ad infinitum. We are convinced that the present attempts are much too limited because they refuse to take account of the fundamental political situation from which the Near East has been suffering for years, for decades, namely that the Palestinian people are not recognized as having the same rights as the French people, the German people, the Israeli people and all the peoples in the world -- the right to a state, the right to express themselves through a political force.

We were very impressed 3 weeks ago when Chairman 'Arafat told us directly that if the PLO's political nature were recognized it would be prepared to adopt a completely different course -- a political course. It may be true that that was the result of military defeat, but we were assured of it. I have stated it publicly several times. The Palestinians have never denied it; quite the reverse, they have confirmed it. We are convinced that, unless the Palestinian political reality is accepted, people will try to find means of dealing, dealing badly with problems which may be insoluble. If the intention is to evacuate the entire Palestinian armed force -- Where to? What for? -- Things will only be postponed and for a while if that succeeds, and it is not even certain that it will be possible to find a country which will take the entire Palestinian armed force on terms acceptable to the Palestinians.

No! The big mistake over the past few weeks has been to continue to deny the Palestinian political reality as in the past. It is that which we will repeat and will not stop repeating. There have been some more favorable signs in the past few days. Even in the United States we are beginning to hear some voices saying: O.K., these Palestinians are awful but we must talk with them and talk about what concerns them, in other words their future, having a land and a future. That is what must be done, and it is on that France will continue to insist.

DEFENSE MINISTRY COMMUNIQUE ON ARGENTINE EMBARGO

AB271328 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in English 1310 GMT 27 Jul 82

[Communique issued 25 July by French Ministry of Defense]

[Text] The Ministry of Defense wishes to recall that, when the Argentine's invaded the Malvinas Islands, the government immediately suspended all authorization to prospect or negotiate for, sell or export any fighting or assimilated equipment to Argentina. This total embargo was fully observed, and no fighting equipment has been supplied to that country since the hostilities started.

Charles Hernu, minister of defense, in full agreement with Claude Cheysson, minister for external relations, also gave instructions to the effect that no technical assistance of a military nature was to be extended to Argentina, and in particular that no work was to be done on equipment used in units engaging in operations directed at the Malvinas.

The government therefore knows that it has fully complied with the obligations arising out of its total solidarity with our British friends.

The investigation is under way to ascertain whether the instructions recalled above were observed.

Officially the visit, which was due to take place in September, has been deferred for reasons of lack of time. But during his last press conference the French president had let it be clearly understood that French-Romanian relations would be seriously affected unless the dissident Romanian writer Virgil Tanase, kidnapped in France in May, reappears.

ROME PROVINCE, CITY TO BE LED BY COMMUNISTS

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 28 -- The city and province of Rome will once again have leftwing governments.

One month from the opening of a crisis because of clashes between Socialists and Communists on school policy, the four parties in the coalition -- the Communists (PCI), the Socialists (PSI), the Social Democrats (PSDI) and Republicans (PRI) -- reached an agreement Tuesday that reestablished the previous balance. The city of Rome will have a Communist mayor. The executive will be made up of 8 members from the PCI, 8 members from the PSI, 3 from the PSDI and 2 from the PRI. The deputy mayor will be a Socialist.

It was to be noted that the bone of contention which originated the crisis was never brought up during talks to reforge a leftwing city administration. The PSI and the PCI agreed to refer the question of who would be in charge of school policy to later direct negotiations.

The provincial government will have a Communist as its president and a Socialist as its vice president.

The accord must now be ratified by the two assemblies where the Christian Democratic party will sit on the opposition benches.

The national government is a five-way coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals, having a Republican as premier. The Communists are in the opposition at a national level, although the PSI is Italy's second largest party.

ABC NOTES SECURITY ASPECT OF PIPELINE DISPUTE

PM271607 Madrid ABC in Spanish 25 Jul 82 p 11

[Editorial: "Limited Crisis"]

[Text] Perhaps one of the most notable differences between the respective systems of internal cohesion displayed by NATO and the Warsaw Pact stems from the fact that whereas in the latter differences do not exist or are extirpated, as in Czechoslovakia, in the former differences always emerge openly and freely. This means that in one case differing postures are inevitably turned into schismatic issues which are resolved by inquisitorial means, whereas in the other they lead to negotiation and dialogue -- more or less fierce and more or less difficult, but a dialogue nevertheless.

When such considerations -- obvious ones, for that matter -- are forgotten or deliberately ignored, the direct result is confusion or oversimplification. To apply to Western differences, such as those over the famous Siberian gas pipeline, attitudes and assessments applicable only to the very particular dialectic that governs the Warsaw Pact's internal relations is a sure way of falsifying the truth.

The crises between the United States and any of its European partners are open and are for that very reason limited because they will be defused and eventually resolved.

It is possible to understand why French President Mitterrand defends the priority of some of his national interests over the U.S. demands that conflict with this specific detail. It is also possible to understand the convergence of interests between France and the FRG as an explanation of their joint stance with respect to Washington's embargo. But it is impossible to believe that the three-way crisis over the gas pipeline is one affecting the entire Atlantic alliance.

Apart from the fact that the Siberian gas pipeline project jeopardizes Poland's chance of selling coal on the European market, and the fact that the low level of 5-6 percent dependence that it would imply for the Western economies involved in it would only apply at the outset... it seems of the utmost importance for understanding the broader U.S. viewpoint on the subject to realize that anything involving a contribution to the strength of the Soviet economy automatically implies increasing its resources for continuing its arms race and for continuing to lay siege to Europe's security. Viewing the problem from the outside, it seems pointless to gain something, through economic cooperation with the Soviets, which would later inevitably prove less than the demands made by the increased military spending effort required by Soviet progress in the harassment of European security. For this very reason, the allies' dispute is a three-way controversy and not a conflict between Europe and the United States.

NC272050 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 27 Jul 82

[Text] Cuban Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca, who is on an official visit to Greece, this afternoon handed Prime Minister Papandreou a personal letter from Cuban leader Fidel Castro. Mr Papandreou also took the opportunity to describe the genuine multidimensional Greek foreign policy and listen to the Cuban foreign minister's views.

During the talks between Mr Kharalambopoulos and Mr Malmierca, which were held in the afternoon and this morning, the two countries decided to establish embassies in Athens and Havana and to strengthen relations in all areas.

The Cuban foreign minister also met today with Mr Yerasimos Arsenis, national economy minister. They examines the prospects for developing bilaterial economic relations.

U.S. CONGRESS DECISION ON CYPRUS CRITICIZED

TA271644 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 27 Jul 82

[Text] The Foreign Ministry has said that the decision the U.S. Congress adopted about the Cyprus question last week will only make a solution more difficult. The Congress decision envisages the withdrawal of the Turkish peace forces from the island and the appointment of a special representative by President Reagan to help the solution of the problem.

Replying to a question by ANATOLIA on the issue, the Foreign Ministry spokesman pointed out that the decision, which reflected the inclination of the U.S. Congress and which was not binding, was received with regret. He added: It is certain that this decision will have a very negative effect on Turkish public opinion. The decision completely ignores the realities of the Cyprus question and adopts the views of one of the sides. It is a contradiction that a unilateral view is adopted on the one hand and that the United States wants to play an active role in the solution of the problem on the other. Those who proposed and supported this decision seem to have forgotten the serious deterioration of relations between Turkey and the United States from 1974 to 1978.

The Foreign Ministry spokesman stressed that it was regretful that such a decision was adopted when the relations between the two countries were once again turning into a substantial cooperation in line with NATO solidarity. He added that considering the unfavorable developments in East-West relations and the crisis areas of the Middle East, harassing Turkey with such propaganda [as heard] would seriously weaken the solidarity needed more than ever in the Western alliance.

The Foreign Ministry spokesman stressed that it was wrong to think that only Turkey would suffer from damage to Turkish-American cooperation or from the weakening of the NATO solidarity. He noted that the decision by Congress would only make a solution of the Cyprus problem more difficult.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN ON RELATIONS WITH GREECE

TA271708 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 27 Jul 82

[Text] The Foreign Ministry spokesman has said that the Turkish-Greek talks which were held in Athens and which resulted in an agreement last week aim at establishing an atmosphere of trust between the two countries. He also said that the talks on the substance of the Turkish-Greek problems would be held within a framework to be determined by the foreign ministers of the two countries at a later date.

Replying to reporters' questions on the issue, the Foreign Ministry spokesman pointed out that the main element in the statements issued after the agreement was the decision of the two sides to restart their dialogue. The spokesman recalled that the foreign ministers of the two countries would meet in Ottawa, Canada, on 2 October for that purpose.

The Foreign Ministry spokesman stated that the solution of the problems between Turkey and Greece was not easy, adding that Turkey was always ready for negotiations and that it was pleased that such an opportunity had now arisen.

Replying to a question, the spokesman stressed that no agreement had been reached other than the one mentioned in the statement issued following the talks held between the ambassadors of the two countries. He added: Alacam and Kapsis did not discuss the essence of the problems. The contacts held in Athens aimed at establishing an atmosphere of trust between the two countries. The negotiations will be held within a framework to be determined by the two foreign ministers.

The Foreign Ministry spokesman said that there was no change in the views of the two sides regarding the Turkish-Greek problems, adding that no undertaking had been made last week other than the agreement to create suitable conditions for talks between the two ministers and to refrain from behavior that might lead to mutual polemics.

EEC WILL RESTRICT AID TO APPROVED L.A. REGIMES

[Jan Luijten dispatch]

[Text] Brussels -- Primarily at the insistence of the Netherlands El Salvador, Haiti and Guatemala will be excluded from a special EEC aid program for the nations of Central America. The Netherlands voiced its objections to European aid to the countries in question beaause they are the scene of human rights violations. In addition the European aid is intended to help in land reform programs, and these do not seem possible in those countries.

The special aid program for the Central American nations has a political character. Europe wants tostrengthen ties with these countries and thus pull them out of the strong East-West polarization in this area. The EEC wants to offer the countries of Central America an alternative in order to make it clear to them that they are not forced to make a choice between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The European Commission had proposed that almost 170 million guilders be set aside for the program for emergency aid and for support for land reform projects. However, the choice of countries to be considered for such aid has proved to be a major problem.

Italy, France and Belgium took the view that no distinction should be drawn between the seven countries in Central America, which should all be able to receive aid from the outset. The Netherlands, supported by Denmark, made it clear, however, that there were insurmountable objections to aid to El Salvador, Guatemala and Haiti due to the human rights violations there. According to the Netherlands only Nicaragua, Honduras, Costa Rica and the Dominican Republic could be considered for aid.

The EEC Council of Ministers Danish chairman has therefore asked the European Commission to produce new proposals for this aid program to take account of the Netherlands objections.

GASTON THORN'S STANCE ON U.S.-EUROPEAN DISCORD

DW281321 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 28 Jul 82 p 2

[Heinz Stadlmann article]

[Excerpt] Brussels, 27 July -- The usual summer break did not seem to come in Brussels this year. True, the EC Commission has had its last meeting and the Council of Ministers wanted to wind up its budget deliberations this Wednesday by making some decisions, but now the difficult steel negotiations with the United States will keep the responsible departments of the EC Commission and the representations of the member countries in Brussels busy until far into August.

The relations with the Americans, which have for some time been a delicate subject for the Community, have played an important role in recent weeks. EC Commission President Thorn, who is sometimes quick at giving sarcastic views, now recommends great caution. True, he is under the impression that at first U.S. Trade Secretary Baldridge led the Europeans by the nose in the steel conflict, but he warns against taking "retaliatory measures." The Community has already made an application with the GATT council in Geneva for imposing special duties on its part on those U.S. exports which derive advantages from tax reliefs.

However, the GATT council has postponed the deliberations until October. The Luxembourg commission president thinks little of this type of "trade war." With what weapons are we supposed to fight, he asks.

Thorn thinks it is unreasonable for the Europeans to exert pressure on America. The EC must now try to meet the Reagan government halfway. Regarding the embargo against the natural gas pipeline deal the U.S. President got stuck in Thorn's view. The Soviet Union on its part is now making it a matter of prestige. It had to be assumed that Moscow would now only conclude contracts with West European firms which did not have license agreements with U.S. enterprises. Thorn considers the U.S. President's stance to be the result of many months of criticism of his policy by the Europeans. America now relied on its own strength and tended to go it alone without regard for the European interests. Therefore, not too much could be expected of the new Secretary of State Shultz.

According to Thorn a change in the tense European-American relationship could be initiated by the Middle East situation. There the cards had been reshuffled; this would entail additional dangers but also open up new changes. The Europeans should now stop pursuing their own Middle East initiative and ask the Americans how they could best help them in this critical phase in the region.

In Thorn's view it would not be a mistake if the Europeans talked with the Americans once again about the controversial issue of credits to the Soviet Union and other Eastern bloc states. The fixing of interest rates on export credits subsidized by the state within the scope of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) did not have to be the last word in this matter. Thorn deplores that so far only individual controversial problems have been discussed but no dialogue on the overall relations has been held. The Europeans should now take the initiative in this respect.

GOVERNMENT REACTS TO CONFIRMATION OF EMBARGO

[Text] Bonn, 29 Jul (DPA) -- The Federal Government has reacted with marked calmness to Reagan's further confirmation of the American embargo on the European-Soviet gas deal. A government spokesman said that the situation should not be dramatized. Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is still of the opinion which he expressed in a DPA interview that the dispute in the alliance over the embargo will be over by the end of the year.

It was stated in Bonn that Reagan and Schmidt do not strictly differ widely in what they said. Reliable sources referred to reports from the United States which say that, for reasons of prestige, the American President could find it difficult to lift his embargo without definite improvements in Poland.

PAPER REPORTS GERMAN-FRENCH WEAPONS USED IN GULF

[Text] Bonn -- According to information available to SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG, Iraq is using the Roland antiaircraft system developed jointly by France and the Federal Republic as well as German-French antitank missiles of the Milan type in the war against Iran. Iranian Phantom fighters have allegedly already been shot down by Rolands. Iraq has ordered in Paris DM4 billion worth of Roland systems to be mounted on the French AMX-30 tank chassis. How many of the estimated 150 systems ordered have already been delivered remains a secret. The missile system against low flying aircraft has also been introduced into the Bundeswehr and is produced by the Euromissile enterprise based in France. The Munich aviation and spacecraft company, MBB [Messerschmitt-Boelkow-Blohm], and the French Airospatiale enterprise, whose chief is French President Mitterrand's brother, each hold a 50 percent share in the firm. France also supplied Roland missiles to Argentina which reportedly used them against British aircraft in the Falklands war.

SPOKESMAN: 'LITTLE INTEREST' IN HONECKER VISIT

[Text] Bonn, 28 Jul (DPA) -- The Federal Government made it clear today that, in the wake of the GDR's refusal to allow CDU politicians Bernhard Vogel and Heiko Hoffmann to enter the GDR on a visit, it has little interest in a visit to the Federal Republic by the chairman of the GDR Council of State, Erich Honecker. In a Deutschlandfunk interview Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl said that under these circumstances Bonn had no particular current interest in arranging such a visit. If the circumstances changed then a new situation would arise.

Asked whether there were signals that the GDR was still interested at all in a Honecker visit this year, Ruehl said that he had not noticed any such signals. The Federal Government and the Federal Republic as a whole could not be held responsible if the conditions for such a visit did not appear favorable.

BUDGET CUT FOR INFORMATION PROGRAMS IN U.S.

DW281203 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 28 Jul 82 p 4

[Dispatch signed K.B.]

[Summary] Bonn, 27 July -- Minister of State in the Foreign Ministry Hamm-Bruecher has obviously failed to obtain the additional funds she required for her task as the coordinator of German-American relations. Early this year Mrs Hamm-Bruecher had asked for about DM4.5 million out of the 1982 budget to provide information about the FRG in the South, Midwest and West of the United States. When the finance minister rejected this demand at the time, the Foreign Ministry rearranged its own budget to fund activities in the United States. As for Mrs Hamm-Bruecher's request for the 1983 budget, there are indications that the amount requested for her coordinating activities, presumably nearly DM20 million, had been disapproved by the cabinet on the grounds of the precarious budget situation.

"In the same context the planned informational work with a Deutsche Welle television program in the United States has been postponed. It had been planned to start broadcasting 3 hours of programming a week regionally via U.S. cable networks in 1983. Initial aid from the Federal Government was to have been DM4 million."

PAPER: REAGAN POLICY SHOWS FIRMNESS OF PRINCIPLE

[Fritz Ullrich Fack editorial: "President of a Crusade?"]

[Text] The quarrel over the natural gas pipeline deal is part of a profound difference of opinion between the United States and Europe over future policy toward the Soviet Union. The change from Haig to Shultz at the top of the U.S. Department of State will not change anything in this because in the decisive points Shultz shares Reagan's views.

This includes the view that the United States must restore strength and determination and prevent the Soviet Union from penetrating Western spheres of interest. It is from this position alone -- and in this respect Shultz strictly follows his President -- that negotiations with Moscow on disarmament and a balance of interests promise to yield success. It is up to the other side to prove it has changed its arms buildup policy, and that "will take a lot of proving," as Shultz put it during the Senate hearing.

It is in this spirit that the new U.S. secretary of state also supports the sanctions imposed by the President against Warsaw and Moscow after the promulgation of martial law, even if on principle he does not like economic sanctions. If he had been in office at the time, he would probably have voted against the latest intensification which has irked the Europeans so much -- the extension of the technology embargo to licensees in Europe as well. Perhaps he will succeed in the foreseeable future in settling this quarrel diplomatically.

However, this will not do away with the differences in principles between Europe and the United States. The United States does not intend to shelve the case of Poland the way Europe has -- short-term outrage including the threat of countermeasures, followed by calm and regretful shoulder shrugging. In the case of this administration, Soviet misbehavior is given a price tag -- quite unlike, say, the lamentable outcome of the Werbellinsee venture [Chancellor Schmidt's visit to the GDR] which is now being capped by the GDR's refusal to allow CDU politicians to enter.

People in this country like very much to describe as an "anti-Soviet crusade" the changed U.S. foreign policy aimed at reducing to a normal level again the obnoxious Soviet feeling of superiority of the late seventies. What is actually evident here is firmness of principle which does not resign with a shrug of the shoulder every 3 months but which has a way of backing up its political will with pressure.

Just recently President Reagan once again gave a remarkable example of his firmness when during the Falklands conflict he resolutely took the side of the violated law and thus of Great Britain, against obvious American interests. What might astound the crusade propagandists even more is the fact that, as was learned the other day, Washington has been negotiating for months with Moscow on a peaceful settlement of the Afghanistan conflict in all quietness, albeit without any success so far.

Granted, all that glitters in Washington is not gold. Almost as in China "Two lines" are fighting in the administration over the degree of firmness in the new U.S. foreign policy. Secretary of Defense Weinberger and Security Adviser Clark are on one side, the State Department, by tradition committed to balancing interests, is on the other, headed formerly by Haig and now by Shultz. What hasn't fit into the picture of a firm embargo policy from the outset is that Reagan resumed wheat deliveries to the Russians -- even if he acted to fulfill an old election promise. The Europeans criticize this contradiction, and Washington has little to say in response.

On the other hand, it is incontestable that the lights in Poland would have gone out long ago if the United States had not suspended its economic sword of Damocles over this sad scenery. The edges of this sword, however, appear different than most people think. It is in no small way thanks to the existence of this sword of Damocles that Moscow has maintained such a low profile in the conflicts of these past few months -- Falklands, Lebanon, the Gulf war -- and that it has not uttered threats, basically staying silent most of the time.

The Soviets regularly lack 25 percent of their grain requirements; yet this only partially explains their behavior. What is much more significant are the events currently taking place in Vienna. There, emissaries from East European countries keep coming and going, ask for mediation and promise political return concessions (meaning Poland) if the United States could be persuaded to spare the insolvent Poles the final and public declaration of bankruptcy. After all, this would spell the end of Western credit for the entire Eastern bloc now that it has become evident that there is no such thing as a financial "umbrella" provided by the Soviet Union for insolvent allies. This dream of Western banks is over.

As matters stand the U.S. President today holds the key to the problem. The way he handles it will show what his political format is like. Some hardheads in his company recommend Poland's financial execution which would lead to a breathtaking loss of face by the Eastern hegemonic power. The more reasonable people see in the credit issue a lever with a long-term effect for helping Poland gain more internal and external freedom. It would be surprising if Reagan did not side with commonsense.

PRESS REVIEW OF U.S.-EUROPEAN 'FAMILY QUARREL'

DW270749 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 26 Jul 82

[From the Press Review on U.S.-FRG relations]

[Text] FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE uses Chancellor Schmidt's catchword of a family quarrel as an occasion for the following considerations. Now, both the chancellor and the U.S. President have used the term family quarrel to describe the conflict between Europeans and Americans. The term may be suited to dispel feelings of hostility. Both sides should leave no stone unturned to confine, to relativize, the quarrel, which has not by far been settled, by such corrective action: keeping the public aware that there are worse things. But the question is whether the chancellor has enough freedom of action left in the sense of flexibility vis-a-vis the German public, considering the way things have been proceeding for many years. There is no use collecting findings about the character and the values of the United States over the years at the Bohemian Club if these findings cannot be disseminated at home and enforced as rules of deportment. Talking of a family quarrel would be permissible only if the Germans really were so familiar with the political civilization of the United States that respect would be the self-evident result. As matters stand, however, the chancellor does not have the backing for using this term in all freedom from bias. This much from FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE.

HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG advocates this view: Obviously it was the right word the right time when Chancellor Helmut Schmidt termed the European-U.S. controversies a family quarrel in the United States. Apparently Schmidt has succeeded in relaxing the cramp. This relaxation in relations between the allies was to be expected sooner or later. After all, both sides are aware that they cannot afford to declare war on each other, even just a trade war. Still, the relationship between the United States and Europe will never again be as devoid of problems as it appeared to be in the fifties. Something of a decisive nature has changed in this family which is visited by this quarrel: The children have grown up and become independent, and the father who was not used to getting any backtalk no longer possesses unlimited authority.

Essen's NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG writes in this connection: The relationship between the United States and Europe has become more difficult and the manners more rude. Washington believes that communism is but an accident of history, meaning: The West must desist from doing anything which helps the rundown power structure of Moscow stay on its feet longer than would be absolutely necessary. It is in this philosophy of the closest advisers of the incumbent President that the key is to be found to the equally vehement and unpredictable but also inconsistent invectives leveled at Western Eurpoe by Washington. What is really hit is the Atlantic alliance. Moscow comes out the winner. It might come one step closer to the most important among all its goals: separating Western Europe from the United States. This danger is also seen, and in particular, by Helmut Schmidt. The family quarrel must not let people forget that it is the Atlantic community alone which insures peace and Western Europe's freedom, NEUE RUHR-ZEITUNG of Essen writes.

HESSISCHE-NIEDERSAECHSISCHE ALLGEMEINE in Kassel notes: Granted, Reagan has readily adopted the chancellor's palliating formula of the family quarrel. But this was a mere diplomatic phrase with which he hopes to gain time. Actually the controversy over the U.S. embargo is by far more than a mere family quarrel. It is a controversy over the principles of Ostpolitik and the joint course of the Atlantic alliance. Reagan and his administration have not intensified the embargo because they are unfamiliar with the European interests but because they pursue a different political strategy.

BRIEFS

PATENT TRADE DEFICIT -- According to the latest Federal Bank report, the Federal Republic's deficit in the trade of patents and licenses in 1981 amounted to roughly DM1.4 billion and thus was slightly smaller than that of the preceding year, which came to DM1.5 billion. Patents and licenses were exchanged primarily with industrial states. Nearly all the funds spent by FRG enterprises, 95.5 percent, went to industrial countries -- more than 50 percent to the United States, 18 percent to Switzerland and 13 percent to the Netherlands. As for the proceeds from the sale of patents and licenses, 85 percent came from industrial states, 11 percent from OPEC countries and developing countries, and 4 percent from state trade countries. DRAFT ON LEBANON SUBMITTED TO SECURITY COUNCIL

NC281405 Paris AFP in English 1330 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] Paris, July 28 (AFP) -- A draft of a Franco-Egyptian resolution submitted yesterday to the United Nations Security Council calls for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanon and the mutual and simultaneous recognition of all the "interested parties" in the Lebanese conflict, official sources said here. The five-point draft resolution also urges confirmation of the national rights of the Palestinians, including the right to self-determination, and calls for the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) to participate in peace negotiations.

Previous attempts to obtain recognition of the right of the Palestinians to self-rule have failed in the Security Council. In the General Assembly, however, where resolutions are non-binding, Palestinian self-determination has been endorsed on numerous occasions.

The Franco-Egyptian draft, based on a working document on the Middle East approved earlier by both countries, is aimed at resolving the Palestinian issue and is not limited to the current Israeli occupation of Lebanon.

The draft is reported to propose the following:

-- The observation of a ceasefire throughout Lebanon and the immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from the outskirts of Beirut to an agreed upon point as the first step toward the complete evacuation of all israeli troops.

-- Palestinian militants, keeping their light arms, would at the same time pull out of west Beirut, to a location to be determined, under conditions acceptable to all parties.

-- The withdrawal of all foreign forces from the country except those authorized by the Lebanese Government.

-- The immediate deployment of United Nations observers to monitor the ceasefire and the disengagement of forces from Beirut and its outskirts. The UN secretary general would then prepare a report on the possibility of stationing United Nations troops alongside Lebanese forces.

-- The establishment of a stable peace in the Middle East based on [word indistinct] of all states in the region to live in security according to Resolution 242, the national rights of the Palestinians, the mutual and simultaneous recognition of the interested parties, and the representation of the Palestinian people including the PLO at peace negotiations.

-- The presentation of the propositions by the UN secretary general in consultation with all concerned parties, including the representatives of the Palestinian people.

MITTERRAND'S POSTPONED BUCHAREST VISIT VIEWED

NC281357 Paris AFP in English 1339 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] Paris, July 28, (AFP) -- French President Francois Mitterrand's postponement of a scheduled trip to Bucharest comes in the wake of increasing tension between the two countries over alleged human rights violations in the East European nation.

Friction between Paris and Bucharest over the human rights issue came to a head in May when exiled Romanian writer Virgil Tanase disappeared in circumstances which have not yet been cleared up.

Mr Tanase, who fled to France in 1977, obtained French nationality in 1979 and was a leading figure in the exiled Romanian opposition community here,

But the history of Franco-Romanian tension goes back well before Mr Tanase's mysterious May 20 disappearance. Files on Romanian "humanitarian cases" have been piling up in the offices of the French Foreign Ministry for years as Bucharest steadily refuses to hand over exit visas for Romanians involved in mixed marriages, split families or cases of adoption.

The mounting list of unresolved "cases" submitted time and again by the French authorities for Romanian clearance during bilateral meetings, has created a backwash of bad feeling which is rapidly souring political ties between the two governments.

New tensions surged in February when a French journalist visiting Romania to interview a trade unionist there was badly beaten up and his papers, notes and money stolen.

During his last press conference on June 9, Mr Mitterrand, who was scheduled to go to Bucharest in September, told the press that if it were demonstrated that "Mr Tanase had disappeared completely, this could cause a serious breach in relations between Romania and France".

He toned the warning down, however, by adding that if France limited its foreign ties to nations with a clear human rights record, "I would be confined to a very small part of the earth".

Another exiled Romanian writer, Paul Goma, said here today that he was pleased but extremely concerned by yesterday's decision to postpone the French president's trip. The move, he said, could indicate that the policy inquiry into Mr Tanase's disappearance had progressed, but that hopes to recover the writer were "not brilliant".

Meanwhile, economic ties between the two countries are also going through a difficult phase due to Bucharest's difficulties in meeting terms set down by its major creditors, including France. The decision to postpone the president's September visit was in fact announced by Foreign Trade Minster Michel Jobert during a Franco-Romanian governmental committee meeting in Vienna yesterday.

FURTHER COMMUNIQUE ON ARGENTINE EMBARGO ISSUE

[Communique issued on 27 July by the French Foreign and Defense Ministries]

[Text] In an article published by the SUNDAY TIMES on 25 July, there were some assertions which were of a nature to disturb the cooperation between France and Britain. The Defense Ministry immediately ordered an inquiry. The result was that:

1. The French Government on 7 April imposed an embargo on all military exports to Argentina. No military equipment has been supplied to that country since that date. This embargo has also been extended to military technical assistance. These instructions were communicated to all the companies concerned.

2. The technical assistance team (its compostition is attached as a separate document) set up in November 1981 in accordance with the provisions of the contract for the sale of the Super Etendards concluded in 1979 performed its duties normally until the beginning of the hostilities; in particular it verified the circuits on board the planes in readiness for the arrival of the technicians of SNIAS Societe Nationale Industrial Aero-Spatiale which was to take place on 10 April, that is before the Falklands crisis. The dispatch of the SNIAS mission -- which was to ensure not only the installation but also the setting up and regulation of the AM-39 missiles -- was cancelled on 7 April. No French AM-39 specialist was therefore in Argentina.

3. The four Super Etendards of the Argentine naval aviation that were operational left the Bahia Blanca base on 19 and 20 April for a locality situated about 2,000 km from there in southern Argentina. It was from southern Argentina that the Argentine air operations were conducted against the British fleet which arrived in the region around 30 April, the date of the establishment by Britain of a zone in which foreign ships and planes were totally banned. In accordance with the instructions received, none of the nine French technicians left Bahia Blanca during the hostilities. There was no French technician in southern Argentina.

4. The French Government has fully fulfilled the obligations imposed on it by its complete solidarity with its British ally. Of the 10 EEC countries, France exemplarily applied the measures that have been in force since 7 April in the various diplomatic and military phases of the conflict.

France's attitude has been one of neither reticence nor ulterior motive. It would be regrettable should erroneous and tendentious press allegations help to create doubt when the unity of the European states is an imperative necessity.

Attached separate document: Composition of the team of the Super Etendards set up for 1 year in November 1981:

Five technicians from the Marcel Dassault Aviation Company including Herve Colin (and not Colen as published by THE SUNDAY TIMES); one technician from SNECMA Societe Nationale d'Etude et de Construction de Moteurs d'Aviation; one technician from Thomson-CSF (radar, HUD); one technician from the Societe de Service ITEP [Service Equipment]; one technician from SNIAS who is a specialist in equipment for the automatic testing of planes on the ground (ATEC). This equipment was manufactured and supplied by the plane production department of SNIAS, which is an independent organization of the tactical devices division. This specialist has no competence as far as tactical devices are concerned.

GOVERNMENT ISSUES STATEMENT ON LEBANON

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 28 -- The resumption by Israel of the bombing of the Lebanese capital is a cause of great concern to the Italian Government, according to a note released by the premier's office here today.

In line with the position taken at the start of the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, both at a national and community level, the Italian Government reiterates its strong condemnation of the protracted hostilities on the part of the Tel Aviv government, the serious violations of the ceasefire so painstakingly achieved and for the intensification of the military option which continues to take a heavy toll of innocent victims and worsens the conditions of life in a friendly nation which has so long suffered the horrors of war, the note continued.

The Italian Government, which has already sent humanitarian aid and other relief to Lebanon, has begun new and larger initiatives in this sector to concretely help alleviate the suffering and the difficulties of the Lebanese civilians, particularly in Beirut, the note said.

Italy is ready to actively cooperate to help end the hostilities in Lebanon and to promote peace in that tormented country, the text of the note went on.

Italy remains ready to send in a contingent of troops for a multinational force as a buffer between the Israeli Army and Palestinian combatants and to oversee the evacuation of PLO forces from west Beirut as soon as the necessary conditions are met and all sides involved give the go-ahead, the note said.

Such a step was to be seen within the overall assessment of the Italian Government to the effect that a complete and rapid withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon must be carried out, except for those forces authorized by a legitimate Lebanese Government which is widely representative and whose authority must be fully reestablished over all of Lebanon's national territory, the note went on.

A solution to the Lebanese situation is an essential condition for any effective resumption of negotiations aimed at finding an overall, just and lasting settlement to the Middle East crisis, the Italian Government said.

It has been Italy's course to always welcome and develop any constructive signal in the direction of detente and dialogue with a view to building greater trust between Arabs and Israelis, the note continued.

Recently signals coming from Palestinian leaders, while not entirely of a signal voice, nevertheless show a more open attitude towards dialogue, the communique said.

Italy has always favored such openness in the conviction that the evolution of the PLO (Palestinian Liberation Organization) towards an exclusively political role connected to the recognition of Israel is in the interest of the Palestinian people themselves, as well as the cause of peace, the note concluded.

RED BRIGADES MEMBER KILLED IN PRISON 27 JUL

AU271950 Rome ANSA in English 1935 GMT 27 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Trani (Southern Italy), July 27 -- A twenty-five year old member of the Red Brigades was killed in the Trani Prison this afternoon.

Ennio di Rocco was stabbed with a sharp object in the prison courtyard while a group of other inmates held him pinned down.

According to first reports, it is believed Di Rocco was killed because he was considered an informer by his erstwhile comrades.

Last January, Di Rocco was arrested in Rome together with Stefano Petrella. Both are considered "lieutenants" of criminologist Giovanni Senzani, who was the mastermind of some of the Red Brigades most notorious kidnappings.

The arrest came while American Brigadier General James Lee Dozier was still in the hands of another brigades column and according to police, helped prevent the kidnapping of Fiat auto company executive Cesare Romiti.

Five days after Petrella and Di Rocco were arrested, ten more members of the guerrilla group were arrested, including Senzani.

Eight days after their arrest, their lawyer charged that his clients had been beaten in jail.

Neither Petrella nor Di Rocco joined the ranks of the "penitent" brigadists who gave state evidence.

PCI PRESENTS ECONOMIC POLICY PROPOSALS

PM281425 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 22 Jul 82 pp 1, 16

[Report on 21 July press conference in Rome given by PCI Directorate member Giorgio Napolitano, Edoardo Perna and Gerardo Chiaromonte: "PCI Submits Precise Demands to Government on Taxation and Public Spending"]

[Text] Rome -- The government has pursued a schizophrenic economic line, with an expansive budgetary policy and a restrictive monetary policy: The result has been a deplorable mixture. There are now emerging, particularly on the part of the DC, tendencies to introduce iniquitous fiscal measures and welfare spending cuts -- a unilateral species of rigorousness -- together with a policy of cutting the workers' real incomes. The PCI will oppose these options with the utmost vigor.

A few hours before the economic ministers' summit met, [PCI Directorate members] Napolitano, Perna and Chiaromonte gave a press conference to present the Communists' stance, which is not simply a series of objections but is based on very specific proposals which the government "would do well to bear in mind." "In this serious economic situation, we are not idly standing by but are acting as a major political force pointing to a policy of change."

In answer to several questions seeking elucidations and interpretations of the PCI Directorate's [10 July] communique, Napolitano gave the following explanation: "There is no change. The Communists' line obviously remains the democratic alternative. This has never implied not wanting a constructive dialogue with the other political forces. Primarily on the problems of the economic and financial crisis, and for that matter also on those of the institutional crisis of the defense of democracy, we hope that convergences, first and foremost with other leftwing forces, will be possible so that just and progressive options can prevail. In order for a constructive and unprejudiced dialogue to take place, however, the government must pay serious heed to what we are saying at this press conference before deciding on economic measures and must then submit these measures within the context of an open dialogue with the opposition in Parliament without resorting to votes of confidence and without entrenchments of any kind." "The error," Perna said in reply to journalists' insistence, "lies in believing that the PCI does not know what to do and that it is waiting to see whether the DC or the PSI prevails before deciding which one to support. In fact we want to create a new situation: We are not in the least out of the running."

But let us look specifically at the economic policy proposals. First, it must be pointed out that 2 months ago the Communists presented five priority points for imparting a change of direction in economic policy: 1 -- A slackening of the credit squeeze; 2 -- Immediate but structural measures to remedy the public deficit; 3 -- The expansion and improvement of the solidarity fund; 4 -- The reform of the labor market, with the establishment of a national agency and two agencies for Piedmont and Campania on a trial basis; 5 -- The reform of state-controlled industries. These priorities are more valid than ever and are the litmus paper for assessing the government's real intentions.

But the Communists are not evading an exchange of ideas on the subject of public finance either. "We are opposed to illusions, mystifications and distortions," Napolitano said. "Decisions must be taken that will have a profound effect on the causes of the deficit. It must be clear, however, that the possibilities of reducing the deficit by the end of 1982 are very limited."

With regard to revenue, there must be a comprehensive revision of the present taxation system, which excessively penalizes employees. Specifically, this could mean a revision of the personal income tax scale, but above all a more effective struggle against tax evasion. It will be decisive to observe the outcome of the decree providing pardons and punishments for evaders. If it is diluted, the PCI will draw serious conclusions. Indeed, pardons, questionable in themselves, can be accepted only within the framework of a serious measure that will really hit evasion.

Moreover, the Communists are opposed to any rise in personal income tax (such as the increase now being discussed). Employees already bear a large proportion of the tax burden themselves. In 1981 deductions from wages alone contributed 21 trillion out of a total 30 trillion lire in personal income tax revenue.

The PCI is also opposed to increases in value-added tax affecting (like the measure being discussed) essential commodities and amenities and implying a nullification of the indexing system, thus ultimately exacerbating inflation, above all. A merging of income tax bands would, of course, be another matter.

As an alternative to heavy tax burdens on the workers, the PCI proposes "extraordinary finance" measures vis-a-vis real estate and large accumulations of wealth and also immediate measures that will imply sacrifices on the part of those deriving their incomes from work other than as an employee (for instance, increases in deductions from the incomes of self-employed workers, the suspension of the tax relief granted by the second Visentini law, and so forth).

On the "expenditure" side, the Communists demand first and foremost that every increase in current spending be matched by new revenue, while expenditure on investments and on measures to combat unemployment can be financed at the expense of the public debt. Here too, action must be taken in several directions. There is no single measure that can be called conclusive. There must be a sense of responsibility on the part of all centers of expenditure, but the central administration too must cease its practice of irresponsible spending.

With regard to pensions, the essential test bench is the reorganization bill, on which the government and the majority have not yet adopted any stance apart from the negative stance on Article 1. Furthermore, a law on disability pensions must be passed.

With regard to local finance, the problem of revenue is of decisive importance. This whole complex issue cannot be shelved until a decree is issued at the end of the year. There are already the proposals put forward by the local authorities. The government must take a stance.

With regard to health, there is primarily the problem of sectors of society which do not pay their contributions or only pay a few of them. There is a veritable abyss between the contributions paid by employees and those of other categories -- an abyss that must be bridged. Furthermore, controls must be placed on the spending of local health authorities. Last, the PCI some time ago presented a package of proposals as alternatives to medical charges.

As far as the central state administration is concerned, the most scandalous aspect concerns staff policy -- both recruitment and policy on pay. It is impossible to demand that workers' pay increases be limited to 16 percent, if public employees' incomes increase at twice that rate.

On the subject of the indexing system and the reform of labor costs, Chiaromonte pointed out, the PCI believes that the position expressed by the metalworkers union is correct: Any discussion on how to modify salaries is possible only after labor contracts have been finalized, otherwise such discussion is purely academic. Be that as it may, it is necessary to safeguard the inalienable condition that medium and low salaries and pensions be completely protected against living costs by means of an automatic indexing system, that is, the escalator.

An initial and immediate comment on the PCI's proposals came from PSI economic chief Francesco Forte. "If this is opposition," he said, "it does not seem to me without possibilities of rapprochement, especially with the stance repeatedly expressed by the PSI and the Socialist ministers on the question of taxation." "We are waiting to see how the PSI emerges from the test of deeds," Perna said previously, "though it seems to us that it has not made a clear decision within the government on two essential points: That is, against the huge increases in value-added tax and for safeguarding the workers' purchasing power. Similarly, we have not seen it opposing the DC whenever the latter has advocated proposals for additional expenditure on pork barrels."

EEC CHAIRMAN OLESEN ON MEMBERSHIP TALKS

[Excerpt] EEC Council of Ministers Chairman Kjeld Olesen maintained in Lisbon yesterday that it is possible to conclude the negotiations for joining the Common Market this year. The Danish minister, who returns to his country this morning, was speaking at a press conference which he held at the Necessidades Palace.

During his 3-day official visit to Lisbon, Kjeld Olesen held talks with Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao, of whom, he states: He is a longstanding friend; and with Ministers Joao Salgueiro, Baiao Horta and Vasco Futscher Pereira, of finance and planning, industry and foreign affairs, respectively. Olesen also met yesterday morning with Socialist Party Secretary General Mario Soares, reviewing Portugal's joining the EEC, the problem of textiles, the Portuguese political situation in the light of the revision of the Constitution and the issues of Southern Africa and the Middle East.

The Danish minister acknowledged that Portugal cannot be satisfied with the Community decision on the restrictions imposed on exports of textiles, and pointed out that this issue was tackled on six occasions by the EEC Council of Ministers before the Portuguese membership application. Concerning this issue he also said that his talks with the Portuguese leaders were "frank and open talks, in which there was no need to wrap words in diplomatic circumlocutions." As regards the reactions which the decision caused in the Portuguese textile sector, Olesen stated that he was "not in any way expecting either the industry or the government to applaud it."

In the opinion of the Danish leader -- who will remain as chairman of the Council of Ministers of the Ten, within the 6-month rotational plan for the holding of that post by the foreign ministers -- there are no substantial problems in the process of negotiations with Portugal. In addition, he stated that during his term of office as chairman he will press as hard as he can to accelerate Portugal's entry into the Community, adding: There is a strong likelihood of Portugal's entry into the EEC taking place 1 January 1984.

In answer to a question, Olesen said, after consluting an adviser, that the regulations laid down for Portuguese textiles do not conflict with the Treaty of Rome, and that the Portuguese stances will not take the negotiations back to square one, declaring himself hopeful of an agreement in the near future.

Olesen also broached the difficulties existing between the EEC and the United States, stating that it is hoped that "our American friends will realize that if transatlantic tensions increase, only Moscow will benefit from it."

COMMUNIQUE ON CUNHAL VISIT TO CAPE VERDE

PM281137 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 15 Jul 82 p 3

[Apparent text of 11 July PCP-African Independence Party of Cape Verde (PAICV) "Joint Communique"]

[Text] At the PAICV's invitation, a PCP delegation headed by its secretary general, Alvaro Cunhal, visited Cape Verde 9 through 12 July.

PCP Secretary General Comrade Alvaro Cunhal was received by PAICV Secretary General Comrade Aristides Pereira, with whom he held talks on matters of common interest to the two parties.

The PCP delegation, which also included Comrade Joaquim Gomes, member of the Political Commission and Central Committee Secretariat, had a working meeting with a PAICV delegation headed by Comrade Pedro Pires, assistant secretary general, and also comprising Comrades Olivio Pires, member of the Political Commission, and Joaquim Pedro da Silva, member of the National Council, both of whom are secretaries of the National Council.

The PCP delegation, which visited some economic, social and cultural achievements in Santiago and Sao Vicente, expressed its satisfaction at the important progress achieved in various fields by the Cape Verde people under the PAICV's leadership, in the tenacious struggle against the consequences of colonialism and the effects of a protracted drought which has been besetting the country.

The PAICV delegation expressed its esteem for the role played by the PCP in establishing and consolidating democracy in Portugal.

During the talks, the delegations undertook a broad exchange of views on various issues connected both with the lives of their respective parties and countries and with the current international situation.

The two delegations analyzed the state of relations between the two parties and agreed to intensify the traditional ties of friendship and solidarity linking them, strengthen the relations of cooperation between the two parties and promote the development of relations between the two countries' mass organizations.

As regards relations between Portugal and Cape Verde, the two delegations expressed their desire, through relations between the two parties, to help intensify the relations of cooperation, as well as strengthen the ties of friendship, between the Portuguese and Cape Verde peoples.

With respect to the international situation, an identity of viewpoints on the various problems of the current situation analyzed was noted.

The two sides expressed their concern about the exacerbation of tension in the world and the proliferation of conflicts with a tendency to become internationalized, threatening international security and stability. Within this context the two delegations expressed satisfaction at the efforts currently being made to curb the arms race, with a view to detente in international relations, cooperation among states and the accomplishment of general and complete disarmament, which constitutes one of the essential aims of the international community under the UN aegis.

The two sides also stated that the guarantee for lasting peace in the world lies in respect for the rules of international law, especially as regards peoples' sovereignty, territorial integrity, the peaceful resolution of conflicts, noninterference in internal affairs and the peoples' right to self-determination and independence.

Thus the two delegations vigorously condemned the criminal invasion of Lebanon by Israeli troops, demanded their immediate withdrawal from that sovereign country and called on the international community to do its utmost to curb the attempt to break up a nation being made by Israel.

They reaffirmed their unconditional solidarity with the Arab, Lebanese and Palestinian peoples in their heroic struggle against the invading troops and reiterated their support for the PLO -- the Palestinian people's sole legitimate representative.

Concerning Namibia, the two delegations reaffirmed their support for the South West Africa People's Organization, as the Namibian people's sole legitimate representative, and expressed their solidarity with the frontline countries and condemned the constant acts of aggression perpetrated by the troops of the South African racist regime -- specifically against Angola, Mozambique and Zambia.

The two delegations also expressed their firm wish to see the African continent achieve peace and progress through the strengthening of the OAU's cohesion and consolidation.

Last, the PCP and the PAICV reiterated their firm determination to continue their contacts in the interests of the Portuguese and Cape Verde peoples.

SPANISH-IRANIAN ECONOMIC TALKS BEGIN IN MADRID

LD282128 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] The Spanish minister of industry and energy, Ignacio Bayon, had a meeting today with his Iranian counterpart, Mostafa Hashemi, who arrived in Madrid yesterday at the head of an Iranian economic delegation to pay a 5-day official visit. The two ministers analyzed the economic relations between the two countries.

The Iranian official expressed his desire to further increase trade between Spain and Iran which went up by 32 percent in 1981 by comparison with the previous year. Iran is especially interested in acquiring from Spain textile machinery; factories to manufacture equipment for cement production; refineries; machinery for iron and steel production, tool manufacturing and shipbuilding; and technology for mining. Trade between the two countries is clearly favorable to Iran which exported products worth $1.3 billion to Spain in 1981. Iran's imports from Spain amounted to $337 million.

SUAREZ LEAVES UCD; TO FORM NEW POLITICAL PARTY

LD282154 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] Former Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez today announced his departure from the ruling party, the Democratic Center Union [UCD], in a letter to the Party President Landelino Lavilla. This means that Suarez has now officially left the party he founded. The news of the politician's departure from the UCD comes after several weeks of silence about the position he would finally adopt with regard to the reorganization of the government party in the runup to general elections.

According to the EFE news agency, Adolfo Suarez will register his new political party at the Ministry of the Interior next Saturday. The new party will be called democratic and social center [centro democratico y social]. The creation of this new party completes the panorama of political parties for the next elections which, though initially due to take place in March 1983, could be brought forward to next autumn.

Suarez's letter to Lavilla, which comes a day after the announcement of the composition of the new UCD Secretariat, brings the crisis in UCD to an end once and for all, according to a statement by Juan Antonio Ortega y Diaz Ambrona, who has just been appointed secretary assistant to the president of the centrist party.

U.S.-EUROPE SPLIT OVER PIPELINE ANALYZED

PM281049 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 23 Jul 82 p 7

[Editorial: "Between Peace and Interests"]

[Text] The French decision to break the U.S. boycott on the gas pipeline project (the majority of West European industrialized countries purchase Russian methane gas in exchange for contributing to the gas pipeline network from Siberia to France) is the most serious event in a profound crisis: the splitting of the Atlantic alliance into two spheres of interest -- the American and the European.

The White House has provided objective reasons for its opposition from the outset. Without forgetting Europe's growing energy dependence on Russia, the United States fears that, once the economic encirclement of the USSR has been broken by the gas pipeline project, Soviet expansionism will be revived by the injection of strong currencies.

In Europe -- in Paris, Bonn and even in the very pro-U.S. London -- the U.S. arguments have met with little receptivity. There is a continued belief in the policy of detente. Despite failures and occasional setbacks, this policy is the only survival option for a Europe militarily predestined to be the first theater in an armed conflict between the superpowers. And though the possibility of being destroyed by Moscow or Washington must set European policians' hair on end, the U.S. army's recent request to congress to be able to use nuclear weapons in Europe without awaiting the president's permission makes this sound at least like a possibility.

Europe's peacemaking vocation is all the stronger given that, in the final analysis -- and as Paris has shown -- the difference between the U.S. idea of preventing war (by crushing economic and military superiority) and that of the old continent (coexistence based on shared interests) is not merely dialectical but also one of interests. The European idea has the additional attraction of the business deriving from it.

PEACE MARCHER VIEWS SOVIET PRESS COVERAGE

[Kjell Dragnes dispatch]

[Text] Moscow, 25 Jul -- The Soviet press treatment of Peace March 82 is still causing much discussion among those taking part. Martin Holmberg from the Swedish Peace and Arbitration Association has had confirmation of the old truth that the TASS news bureau and party organ PRAVDA have little inclination for corrections, much less retractions.

Holmberg protested that he was misquoted in a TASS report, reproduced in several Soviet newspapers. "What I said was that ordinary people in the West are tired of politicians' inability to halt the arms race. It should have been clear from this that I was thinking of both East and West, and as far as I know I was interpreted correctly during by speech to the youth camp outside Moscow," Holmberg told AFTENPOSTEN.

"When PRAVDA prints that 'ordinary people in the West are tired of their governments' inability to halt the lunatic arms race,' this is an incorrect report of my statement."

The leaders of the peace march raised the matter and wanted a correction to be printed in PRAVDA. The response was that PRAVDA has never printed a correction in its whole history. But TASS has promised to interview Holmberg and circulate this interview.

PM281457 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 23 Jul 82 p 5

The trawler fleet was discovered last weekend. The trawlers are catching fish which are clearly under minimum size, Fisheries Ministry Department Chief Finn Bergensen told Nordlands Framtid.

[Text] Two members of the UN Human Rights Commissions work group on the missing persons issue arrived this morning in Cyprus on a 3-day preparatory visit. The delegation, which is made up of Lord Colville and Professor (Toselsky), will investigate the prospects for further consultations with all interested parties in an effort to reactivate the committee on missing persons. The committee already conferred with Foreign Minister Rolandhis.

Meets Rolandhis

NC281611 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] This morning, Foreign Minister Rolandhis received the working group from the UN Human Rights [Commission] on the issue of missing persons and discussed matters concerning the group's work. The group, which is made up of Lord Colville, the chairman of the working group, and Professor Toselsky, will remain in Cyprus until Saturday for a number of contacts.

As the UN announced the day before yesterday, any useful contribution by the working group in the examination of the missing persons issue will be independent and will not prejudge the efforts for reactivating the missing persons committee. According to the same announcement, the group will investigate the possibility for further consultations with all the interested parties. But in the present case, there will be no attempt to investigate individual cases of missing persons.

TFSC Reaction

NC290735 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 29 Jul 82 p 1

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot side yesterday made a surprise attack against the visit of the two members of the UN working group on "enforced or involuntary disappearances" and described it as an "invalid visit".

The two members, Lord Colville of Britain, and Prof. Toselsky of Yugoslavia arrived in the island yesterday and started immediate contacts, first seeing Foreign Minister Rolandhis, (before his departure for Paris) and the committee of relatives of missing persons.

The other members of the committee as well as the Greek Cypriot representative on the investigatory committee for the missing Mr. Frixos Mikhailidhis were also present.

The team is going to cross to the north today for a meeting with Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas and similar contacts on the other side.

An official UN statement about the visit stressed that "any useful contribution by the working group to the consideration of the problem would be without prejudice to the efforts to reactivate the investigatory committee on missing persons".

But a statement issued from the office of Mr. Atakol the Turkish Cypriot spokesman for foreign affairs yesterday, said the working group must share responsibility with the Greek Cypriots for what it called the "irreparable harm" to be done to the investigatory committee.

"The working group had been repeatedly warned about the catastrophic effects of such a visit which would encourage Greek Cypriots to continue their boycott of the investigatory committee and take international efforts that would keep it in paralysis", the Turkish Cypriot statement said.

It added that the investigatory committee is "autonomous" and cannot admit of any outside interference and that in any case it was set up after the working group of the human rights commission based in Geneva, and therefore it supplants it.

The Turkish statement was in line with a statement by Mr. Denktas the day before in which he complained that "nobody listened to the sincere warnings" of the Turkish Cypriot that the arrival of the delegation "would further complicate the work of the committee".

Greek Cypriot sources expressed surprise at the Turkish Cypriot attack and pointed out that the Greek Cypriots view the matter from a purely humanitarian aspect and have every reason to wish the investigatory committee to proceed with its work in accordance with the U.N. resolutions.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN ON KIPRIANOU'S MOSCOW VISIT

SPOKESMAN REPLIES TO ANKARA, DENKTAS CHARGES

NC290034 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] Replying to the criticism and complaints by Ankara and by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas on the recent U.S. congressional resolution which asks, among other things, for the withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops from Cyprus, the government spokesman described the pertinent Turkish and Turkish Cypriot allegations as baseless and unfounded.

The spokesman stressed that Ankara's allegations that the resolution is one-sided and that it will only result in creating difficulties in finding a solution for the problem are unfounded. The spokesman added: The withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops from Cyprus is a demand of the international community as it was repeatedly expressed in resolutions of the UN General Assembly and the Security Council. The systematic refusal of Turkey to conform with the provisions of these resolutions, the spokesman continued, is an insult to the international community, which has the duty to compel it to abandon its unacceptable stand.

Regarding Mr Denktas' allegation that the U.S. congressional resolution ignores the rights of the Turkish Cypriots, the government spokesman stressed that the Greek Cypriot side does not want to ignore the Turkish Cypriots' rights. He added, however, these rights will be safeguarded through a solution based on the UN resolutions and the summit agreement, a solution based on the principles of justice and not on the unacceptable presence of foreign occupation troops. The spokesman added that Mr Denktas' allegation that the U.S. congressional resolution will give the opportunity to the Greek Cypriots to undermine the inter-Cypriot talks is baseless.

In conclusion, the government spokesman expressed the hope that the U.S. congressional resolution will be given particular attention by the U.S. administration upon which Turkey is greatly dependent. Let it not be forgotten, he said, that the Turkish invasion of Cyprus has taken place, and that the occupation of a great part of Cypriot territory is continuing with the aid of U.S. arms.

'ASSEMBLY' PROPOSED TO RESOLVE DEADLOCKED TALKS

NC271126 Nicosia EXPRES TIS KIRIAKIS in Greek 25 Jul 82 p 3

[Article by Fifis Ioannou: "The Way Out of the Deadlock is Through an Elected Constituent Assembly"]

[Excerpts] If we understand things correctly, the apple of discord in our internal political developments in whether or not there is any usefulness or expediency for the inter-Cypriot talks since they are being conducted in the same way they were conducted for so many years without any results, and since we are not really negotiating with the other inter-Cypriot side but with Turkey, particularly under the blackmail of the occupation troops.

The talks have become unnecessary because of the way they are being held today; they are unnecessary and in the long run they would be dangerous too. Their interruption, however, would lead to some kind of isolation in addition to the direct dangers that would probably be caused by an unwisely created crisis.

Definitely this contradiction is the product of the fact that the talks have been going on for years although it was known in advance that they would not lead to anything.

The question that is cruelly posed by these circumstances is: Can we resolve this contradiction?

In the case of the talks, what would be the ready solution? In view of the absence of progress because of Ankara's stiff intransigence and Denktas' behavior -- which is like that of a lackey of neosultanism -- and because of the procedure being followed at the dialogue, the logical conclusion would be that our concern should not be to save the talks -- no one is suggesting this -- but to bring about an in-depth change in the arena of the talks.

Well, how should this [change] be effected?

1. The talks must be broadened so that they do become not simply "inter-Cypriot" in the sense that they are being held in Cyprus, but genuinely "intercommunal" in the sense that they must be held between the two communities, and not between an assumed representative of the Greek Cypriot side on the one hand and Denktas or Onan, who are subordinate to Turkish expansionism, on the other. The "intercommunal" dialogue, as it is called by everyone, is a dialogue which is actually held between the two communities through representatives who are elected exactly for this purpose.

2. What should be done in practice is to demand the convocation of an elected intercommunal constituent assembly to prepare a new constitution for Cyprus with terms of reference derived from the general international facts, from the UN resolutions and from the Cypriot reality as it is conveyed in a conciliatory way by the summit agreement.

3. This constituent assembly could be formed by a proportional number of representatives that could be fixed in advance (even going as far as equal representations if necessary). These representatives should be elected precisely for this purpose during separate elections by the people of the two communities.

4. The constituent assembly should be under UN auspices and should be presided over by the UN secretary general or his envoy.

5. A timetable should be clearly fixed for the drafting of the constitution.

The aforesaid positions can definitely be extensively worked out. Nothing is dogmatically put forward "for acceptance." The purpose of all this is to simply provide some basis for a way out of the deadlock, and above all to resolve the anticipated contradiction: Talks; no talks!

DENKTAS REACTS TO CONGRESS RESOLUTION

TA271355 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1300 GMT 27 Jul 82

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that our national interests could force us to turn a deaf ear to biased interventions from the outside. Replying to questions by reporters on the recent U.S. House of Representatives resolution on Cyprus, President Denktas has said that as a result of the Greek lobby, the house had adopted a stand that seemed to support the Greek Cypriot and Greek cause, namely the megalo idea and pan-Hellenism. This, Denktas said, was unfortunate as it would provide the Greek Cypriots and Greeks with the opportunity to undermine the intercommunal talks, would contradict the realities and would help to recreate the same atmosphere that caused the incidents of 1963 to 1974 and which brought about the Turkish peace operation in Cyprus. Denktas concluded by saying that to reject any measures to be taken by the United States in accordance with that resolution would be the main and national task of the Turkish Cypriot side.

TFSC'S DENKTAS ON GREEK CYPRIOT ECONOMIC EMBARGO

TA281156 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] President Denktas has said that the time has come for considering taking effective measures against the Greek Cypriot embargo. He said that the U.S. civil aviation authorities had prevented the landing at Ercan State Airport of an American plane chartered to carry 40 tons of grapes, which were to be exported. This, he said, meant that the civilized world had been taking part in an inhuman and immoral embargo that was contrary to the UN Charter and human rights.

Mr Denktas said that it was high time that the UN secretary general took up the matter. He stressed that an embargo was being applied to 1/4 of the Cyprus population and the United Nations remained a mere spectator.

The Turkish Cypriot people, he said, could not tolerate this injustice and would work out measures to remove it. We are obliged, he added, to do courageously what is necessary for the salvation and prosperity of our people.

President Denktas finally called for assistance from the UN secretary general and from all countries, including the Islamic states and the secretariat of the Islamic Conference, to destroy the Greek Cypriot embargo.

EXORMISI COMMENTS ON KKE PATRONAGE OF AKEL

NC251743 Athens EXORMISI in Greek 25 Jul 82 p 12

[From the "Political Issues" column: "The KKE Backsliding"]

[Text] The KKE insists on furnishing practical proof that it has taken under its patronage the interests of the well-known inter-Cypriot political coalition, and it comes back with the same story that AKEL had put forward — allegedly that the Greek Government interferes in the internal affairs of the Republic of Cyprus. The KKE is doing this despite the fact that AKEL has abandoned this story -- probably temporarily. Thus, it proves to be "more catholic than the pope." We are saying all this because the KKE interpellation that has been submitted to the Chamber of Deputies on the Cyprus problem refers to various unacceptable things including the following: "The well-known government interventions in exclusively domestic affairs of the Republic of Cyprus -- such as the course of its administration." As to what these "well-known interventions" are, we will wait for them to tell us in the chamber. In the meantime, we would like them to tell us: Do such actions and the opening of such wounds help the good Athens-Nicosia relations that constitute indispensable conditions for the success of the joint struggle? As for the Cypriot side, we would like to believe that it does not favor such actions by the counsel in Athens.

KAFAOGLU ON ECONOMIC MODEL TO BE IMPLEMENTED

[Text] Finance Minister Adnan Basar Kafaoglu has said that no changes will be made in the essence of the economic stability program being implemented, but that errors owing to different interpretations and implementation will be eliminated.

In his first news conference in Ankara since his appointment to the post, Kafaoglu expressed his views on various economic issues. He said: We believe that it is an unavoidable necessity to make various policy changes aimed at eliminating errors arising from the interpretation and implementation of the economic stability philosphy created by the 12 September operation, sifting the measures that are incompatible with this philosophy and speedily implementing the measures which were to have been taken in accordance with the essence of this program, but which were not taken up to now.

Kafaoglu said that the economic model to be implemented will comprise measures which will continue the struggle against inflation in a rational manner, which will secure the participation of large masses in economic activities, and which will enable the establishment of a healthy and strong industrial structure in the country. He added that the government envisages implementing these measures within the framework of social conciliation. Noting that importance will be attached to production and investments that will be helpful to the economic stability measures, Kafaoglu said that economic expansion and development will be speeded up in accordance with the success of these measures. Kafaoglu added that those with small savings will soon be rewarded to the extent that they are involved in stability measures and economic activities. He said that they will try to solve the problems of employees within the framework of social conciliation. He added: the commercial and industrial world, which will form a unity with this policy which will give priority to stability, economic development and the solution of social problems, will find in the state a guarantee for the future and the support necessary for their development.

VOTCP QUESTIONS ADMIRAL CROWE'S VISIT TO TURKEY

TA280942 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] Since when have hardship areas become tourist sites to be visited by NATO generals? NATO southern Europe allied forces commander Adm William Crowe has arived in Turkey. The NATO chief commander, Gen Bernard Rogers, left Turkey following a visit barely 1 month ago. Now Admiral Crowe has appeared.

Crowe is meeting with the junta generals. He will tour Istanbul, Trabzon, Samsun, Malatya, Erzurum, Kars and Van. The junta's mouthpiece, the Turkish Radio and Television [TRT], is trying to portray Admiral Crowe's visit to Turkey as a tourist visit.

Take a look at these so-called tourist sites the NATO admiral is visiting. Samsun: In this province there is a U.S. electronic spying and monitoring base. Malatya and Erzurum: There are nuclear warhead arsenals in the U.S. bases in those two provinces. As for Van Airport, it was closed to all civilian flights as of 10 May. The Van Airport airstrip is being extended from 2,600 meters to 2,750 meters. On 4 May, CUMHURIYET reported that, following these renovations, all kinds of aircraft could now land and take off from the airport and that 800 million Turkish liras were spent for this.

A new airport is being secretly constructed in Kars.

New arsenals, barracks, and airstrips are being built at these airports. Why? For the B-52 bombers used by U.S. attack units called the RDF. The B-52 aircraft carry heavy strategic weapons and winged missiles called cruise missiles.

Before the footprints of General Rogers had time to disappear, NATO Admiral Crowe began to tour these bases.

When General Rogers visited Turkey last month, we asked the following question of the junta generals: Did you grant bases and passage in Turkey to U.S. attack units called the RDF? Why did you close the Van Airport to civilian flights?

At the time, the Foreign Ministry evaded the issue by announcing that General Rogers' visit to Turkey had been decided upon a year earlier.

Now, the TRT is trying to portray Admiral Crowe's visit as a tourist visit. On the other hand, the military affairs expert of the NEW YORK TIMES, Middleton, wrote: Turkey is NATO's springboard for the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries. These lands are now a springboard whose area of usage extends to the Near East.

The NEW YORK TIMES says that Turkey is a springboard that now extends to the Near East. We ask the junta generals once again: What do you say about these remarks by the NEW YORK TIMES? Is Turkey a springboard against the countries in the Near East? And what is NATO Admiral Crowe doing in Turkey now? Why is he going to the Malatya Erhac base, which has Honest John nuclear warheads? Why is he going to Erzurum? What is this NATO admiral doing in these cities, in Van and Kars, which were toured by General Rogers only last month? Why is the NATO admiral visiting Malatya, Erzurum, Kars and Van for tourist purposes while the junta generals pick Erdek for the same purposes? Since when have these cities, which are officially called hardship posts, become tourist sites?

We ask the junta generals once again: What is Admiral Crowe doing in Turkey? Have you opened Turkey's doors to the RDF, which the United States will use to attack our neighbors, the Middle Eastern and Arab countries? Are we the Turkish Republic or a province of the United States in the Near East? Are we the Turkish Republic or a NATO republic?

VOTCP DENOUNCES PERSECUTION OF KURDS IN TURKEY

TA270847 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 27 Jul 82

[Station commentary: "Acts That Will Not Be Condoned"]

[Text] On 4 June a large operation was conducted by the security forces in four villages of Cermik district in Diyarbakir Province, in which more than 100 villagers were detained. Every house in these villages and all the inhabitants -- men and women alike -- were searched. Obscene incidents occurred at the village square in Diliviran, one of the four villages which were raided and in which Huseyin Aslancan, who was subjected to this treatment, and his wife were beaten up. If you ever happen to pass through the villages in the Cermik district of Kiyarbakir, ask the Kurds who live there about the incident. They will tell you all this with bitter terms in their eyes.

This is not the first time such raids have been conducted in areas populated with Kurds by the military junta since the very first day it came to power. How many more such operations will be needed to subdue the Kurdish population? The reign of terror by those who brought about the 12 September 1980 military coup has been much worse than that imposed by the 12 March [1971] junta.

Under the shadow of the bayonets directed against the population, the generals are not ashamed to claim that they have brought peace and tranquility to the country. Who are those living in peace and tranquility? Are they the tortured, humiliated, beaten up and murdered Kurdish villagers, or the tens of thousands of democracy fighters who are crowding the military junta's dungeons, or the fired workers and their starving families? Who are they? Are they the millions of poor peasants who have no land to plow, or shopkeepers who have been forced to close their shops, or the taxi drivers who have no work? Or are they the government employees who live haunted by the fear of being dismissed from their jobs? Or are they the teachers and intellectuals who are afraid to speak their minds?

Those living in peace and tranquility are in fact only the followers of the U.S. imperialists and their collaborators.

The military junta is reigning through bloodshed. Five bodies were found in the 5th Diyarbakir prison and detention house. They were burnt and wrapped in blankets. This incident occurred on 18 May 1982. It might be that some of you have already heard about it. However, the official explanation for this incident was that inmates of the Diyarbakir prison had committed suicide. Their bodies were sent a week later to Urfa, Siverek, Silvan, Mardin and Cermik, their birthplaces. This is the story of five Kurdish youths killed in the dungeons of the military junta. Moreover, most of those released from the Diyarbakir prison are suffering from tuberculosis. An atmosphere of terror and torture reigns in that prison. This is not a prison, it is a bloodbath. The junta generals claim that they have brought peace and tranquility to the country and that there is nothing to worry about. These claims are shameless lies to deceive the people. The military junta is reigning through bloodshed. It is convinced that through executions, torture and pressure it will be able to subdue the people.

A bloodstained draft constitution has been prepared for this purpose. In their speeches, the generals praise the new constitution that will only bring more bloodshed. The people will not let them use this constitution as a tool for their reign. Despite the sufferings and pressures, the Kurdish people will not let them have this constitution. The reply of both the Turkish and Kurdish peoples to the junta's constitution will be negative. No to cruelty, torture and executions! No to the junta constitution of tyranny!

On Sunday, 1 August, the peace marchers will arrive at 1700 hours at the Linz Hauptplatz and will proceed from there to the Gugl Sports Hall where a peace festival will start at 1900 hours. On 3 August some 30 peace bicyclists from London, who are also heading for Vienna, will arrive at the Linz Hauptplatz, where at 1730 hours a peace bicycle tour through the city will start, to be followed by a peace rally near the Linz-Urfahr railway bridge.

MORE CSSR REFUGEES SEEK ASYLUM IN AUSTRIA

[Report by Erich Grolig]

[Summary] More than 500 CSSR citizens have used the opportunity of vacation trips to Austria to defect to the West within the past 4 weeks. Most of them were members of travel groups who left these groups in Vienna before their return to the CSSR and requested political asylum. Some other CSSR citizens came to Austria by illegally crossing the Yugoslav-Austrian border. By 27 July, the total of CSSR refugees who came to Austria this month was 520.

Austrian authorities consider it noteworthy that despite rigorous investigation and control measures of the CSSR authorities they have apparently not succeeded in checking the flow of refugees to the West. It is assumed that many Czechs and Slovaks pretend to be loyal to the regime so as to get an opportunity after 2 or 3 years to take part in an organized tour to the West, where they then defect at the first opportunity. The increased influx of CSSR refugees is expected to continue until mid-September. Austrian authorities estimate that within this period another 1,000 to 1,500 Czech and Slovak refugees will request political asylum in Austria.

NEW SOVIET ENVOY VIEWS SOVIET RELATIONS

[Text] The Hague, 21 Jul -- "You must not take this as criticism, but it has surprised me that no attention has been paid in the Netherlands to the fact that on 10 July 40 years ago the Netherlands and the Soviet Union established diplomatic relations," the new Soviet ambassador in the Netherlands, Dr Viktor Nikolay Beletskiy, said yesterday during a reception for the press at the Soviet Embassy.

The new ambassador described relations between the Netherlands and his country as "normal," a term which in diplomatic usage means that reciprocal behavior is correct, but nothing more. "I will repeat what Minister Gromyko said to me when I left for the Netherlands -- my task is to effect an improvement in relations with the Netherlands," Dr Beletskiy said.

There is another jubilee this year, he said -- the 60th anniversary of the foundation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. "I would hope that this great event in the history of our state will be reflected without prejudice in your press," Dr Beletskiy said.

A long, written declaration, which was distributed during the reception, also said of Netherlands-Russian contacts: "The relationship between us has not always been built up in a good and cloudless climate, but I think you will agree that there are no problems between us which we could not solve through the presence of goodwill on both sides. In doing so we take into consideration the fact that we belong to different social systems and military blocs. But we do not view this as an obstacle to relations of real good-neighborliness."

According to Dr Beletskiy, relations have also "developed wholly successfully, especially in the seventies." He mentioned trade that has increased sevenfold in the last 10 years and which totals around 1.5 million guilders per year.

"As far as the scope of trade by the Soviet Union with the highly developed capitalist countries is concerned, the Netherlands now lies in sixth place," he said, adding that both sides will have "untapped possibilities" for further expansion. "All that is needed is goodwill, the removal of certain aritficial obstacles and the solution of the problems which arise in connection with these in a manner acceptable to both sides."

AUSTRIA REPORTED READY FOR LEBANON PEACE FORCE

[Text] Venice (APA) -- Austria and Italy have stressed their readiness to participate in an international peacekeeping force in Lebanon. This was stated by Italian Foreign Minsiter Colombo following his working talks with Foreign Minister Pahr in Venice. He stressed that the consent of all parties involved was a prerequisite for such participation. Austria, moreover, also insists on an appropriate UN Security Council decision.

PLO OFFICIAL ON ISRAEL'S RIGHT TO EXIST

[Text] Vienna (APA) -- Both Saudi Arabia's latest peace plan and Israeli opposition politician Avneri's interview with 'Arafat show that the PLO recognizes Israel's right to exist, said 'Abdallah Franji, representative of the PLO accredited in Vienna, at a meeting organized by the Austrian-Palestine-Lebanon solidarity committee at the Vienna-Margareten adult evening education center [on 27 July].

The PLO representative drew attention to the Israeli plans in Lebanon and stressed that the liquidation of the PLO's political and military structure would facilitate the complete annexation by Israel of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Commenting on Israel's political aims in Lebanon, Franji said Israel wants to establish a pro-Israeli government in which Major Haddad, leader of the Christian militia operating in the south of the country, and the Christian Phalange of Pierre al-Jumayyil are to play an essential role as military factors.

Regarding the constantly changing rumors about an evacuation of the PLO from west Beirut, the PLO representative declared: "We will never accept any peace which would result in our having to live as subjects of Arab states or of Israel." Prior to any peaceful settlement of this problem, the Israeli forces would have to withdraw at first 8 kilometers from Beirut. A representative Lebanese Government could then -- together with the Arab governments and the PLO -- work out a solution for the Palestinian people.

Franji drew attention to the fact that the presence of more than half a million Palestinians in Lebanon is the result of their having been driven out of Palestine in 1948 and out of Jordan by King Husayn in 1970 (black September), and the result of the subsequent Israeli wars.

PRIMITIVE BOMB DAMAGES JEWISH SHOPS IN SALZBURG

[Summary] Three shops on Salzburg's Getreidegasse were seriously damaged by a bomb which exploded last night shortly after midnight. One of them belongs to the "Schoeps" Company, owned by textile businessman Boehm, whose bodyguard shot one of the terrorists who attacked the Vienna synagogue last year. Leaflets were found on the site of the bomb attack with anti-Semitic drawings and slogans such as "Germans, do not enter here, a Jewish pig is selling here."

According to a police spokesman, the bomb was very primitively made of an iron pipe filled with black powder and a simple timer, operated battery fuse -- materials which anyone could obtain anywhere. To date police have no clue as to the perpetrators. Bombs of a similar make were used last month in the bomb attack against the Vienna home of Simon Wiesenthal, head of the Jewish Documentation center, and in the recent bomb attacks in Vienna on the apartments of Chief Rabbi Eisenberg and of Alexander Giese, member of the Austrian-Israeli Society.

MINISTRY ISSUES STATEMENT ON POLISH DEVELOPMENTS

[Text] Bonn, 29 Jul (DPA) -- The Federal Government intends to continue to urge the Polish Government to fulfill its own promises by restoring basic civil liberties and the process of reform and by allowing a truly free trade union movement to reemerge. The Foreign Ministry in Bonn stated this on Thursday [29 Jul] with reference to the easing of martial law announced in Poland.

On the one hand the Federal Government welcomed the announcement of the release of a considerable number of internees, but on the other hand deeply regretted the fact that a large number still remain in custody. Bonn therefore reiterated its call to release all internees. The Foreign Ministry supported the demand for an early end to martial law in Poland and expressed deep regret at the absence of a continuing dialogue with the church and the Solidarity trade union.

FDP'S VERHEUGEN MEETS WITH POLISH LEADERS

[Text] Warsaw, 29 July (DPA) -- FDP Secretary General Guenter Verheugen had talks in Warsaw on Thursday with representatives of party, government and parliament. A meeting with Bishop Jerzy Dabrowski, deputy secretary of the Polish Bishops' Conference, is also planned for the evening. Verheugen, who arrived in Warsaw on Wednesday on a 3-day visit, was invited by the Democratic Party.

Verheugen had an hour-long talk on Thursday morning in the Polish United Workers Party Central Committee building with the new Central Committee Secretary Manfred Gorywoda who is responsible for economic affairs. He then had talks in parliament and met with Tadeusz Olechowski, under secretary of state in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Contrary to earlier announcements Verheugen will not have a meeting in Warsaw with Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski because he is presently on vacation.

Interviewed on Visit

DW300715 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Interview with Guenter Verheugen, FDP secretary general, by correspondent Schubert in Warsaw; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Verheugen, to draw an initial balance of your talks here in Warsaw, how do you assess the political situation?

[Answer] All the talks have shown that the Polish leaders are interested in resuming close cooperation with the West and that they consider the full utilization of production capacities to be the principal problem at the moment. I was told in all my talks -- and they tried to make this clear to me -- that the final normalization of conditions here in Poland depends on the solution of the economic problems.

[Question] I gained the impression that [passage indistinct] which is holding 637 people under lock and key for political reasons alone. Did this fact bear any weight in your talks?

[Answer] Yes, in all my talks I brought up this issue, and I asked whether the announced lifting of martial law means that all internees would be released. This was reaffirmed to me.

SPOKESMAN ON GERMAN-FRENCH WEAPONS IN GULF WAR

DW291359 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1125 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Interview with Lothar Ruehl, deputy government spokesman, by "Midday Magazine" moderator Gerhardt -- live by telephone]

[Text] [Question] Perhaps you will remember the excitement in Europe when people heard that missiles supplied to Argentina by France had sunk British ships in the Falklands conflict. Now there are news reports according to which Roland antiaircraft missiles and Milan antitank missiles are being used in the Iranian-Iraq war -- missiles which come from German-French production. Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl in Bonn, is this true and is there something to it? Are these reports correct?

[Answer] The Federal Government does not have any information of its own about the weapons being used by either side in the Iranian-Iraq Gulf war. If France has made deliveries to Iraq, for example, of French-built weapons systems which are based on German-French arms cooperation, then in keeping with the German-French cooperation agreement of 1972, this is a purely French affair. Under this agreement the Federal Government has no way of exerting any influence.

[Question] Is it known whether the French have delivered Milan or Roland missiles to either of these countries?

[Answer] It is known that the French Government, as it has said itself, has a contract with Iraq -- and is also conducting further contract negotiations -- on the delivery of weapons and military equipment including Roland antiaircraft missile systems.

[Question] If the French did deliver such systems to Iraq, would German companies have had a share in the profits as well?

[Answer] I don't know, but this is not a question of sharing profits. As far as the German companies are concerned they do as the French companies do -- fulfill the contracts which they have concluded with each other. In Germany it is the Federal Government, and in France the French Government, which decides what should be done with the products of this arms industry. Under the agreement concluded in the past, the possibility of the German side exerting any influence is practically nil.

[Question] A final question now, but a more formal one: Does the Federal Government rule out the possibility that Milan and Roland weapons as used in the Bundeswehr are also being used in the Iranian-Iraqi war?

[Answer] The Federal Government cannot rule this out because the weapons systems resulting from the joint German-French arms production are intended in the first place to equip the French and German Armed Forces. That is the reason for the arms production. To that extent it involves the same weapons systems. If beyond that France deliveres such weapons systems from its own production to other countries, then these involve the same kind of French products, perhaps with certain modifications. The Federal Government also does not have any knowledge about this because it cannot be ruled out, after all, that special versions of such weapons systems are being delivered to other countries. Consequently I can answer your question only to the degree I just have -- that is, the products of the joint manufacture are identical to the extent they are intended for the French and German Armed Forces.

COMMUNIQUE ISSUED ON DKP DELEGATION'S VISIT

PM290935 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 22 Jul 82 p 4

[Apparent Text of 19 July PCP-DKP joint communique]

[Text] At the PCP Central Committee's invitation, a DKP delegation comprising Party Chairman Herbert Mies and Presidium and Secretariat member Ludwig Mueller visited Portugal 14 through 18 July.

During its stay in Portugal the DKP delegation had talks with a PCP delegation comprising Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal; Sergio Vilarigues, member of the Political Commission and of the Secretariat; and Albano Nunes, member of the Central Committee and international section chief.

The DKP delegation acquainted itself with various aspects of the Portuguese situation and of the PCP's activity. In the Oporto district it met with a delegation of the Oporto regional organization leadership and with the PCP's area committee of the city's riverside parishes, and visited the SECCA metallurgical enterprise and the Bairro do Barredo reorganization and city planning committee.

A friendship rally took place 16 July, at which Alvaro Cunhal and Herbert Mies spoke and which was a revealing demonstration of solidarity between the Communists in the two countries.

Following up the talks held in Hamburg in November 1981, the two delegations exchanged information and opinions on the situation in their countries and the activity of their respective parties, the international situation and current issues of the communist movement.

The PCP delegation reaffirmed the Portuguese Communists' solidarity with the FRG Communists' struggle in defense of peace and for disarmament, in defense of the interests of the working class and of the working masses against big capital's antiworker and antipopular policy and against berufsverbots and other acts of anticommunist discrimination. It acclaimed the DKP's firm opposition to the recent legislation exacerbating discrimination against immigrant workers in the FRG.

The DKP delegation reaffirmed the FRG Communists' solidarity with the struggle of the Portuguese Communists and people in defense of the gains of the 25 April [1974] revolution and of the democratic system enshrined in the constitution, against the policy of Portugal's subordination to imperialism and in defense of national independence.

Broaching the latest developments in the international situation, the two delegations reaffirmed their parties' firm condemnation of the policy of war and aggression conducted by U.S. imperialism and by NATO's most reactionary circles, and their determination to work, under their respective countries specific conditions, for the mobilization of the working masses and of all democratic and peace-loving forces against the arms race and for disarmament. They reaffirmed in particular their opposition to the deployment of the new U.S. missiles in Europe.

They highlighted the vast people's movement for peace which is developing in the FRG and in Portugal, as well as in other European countries and in the United States itself, and their wish to continue to contribute to its development. They emphasized the importance of the new initiatives and peace proposals of the USSR and the socialist countries, including the renunciation of the first use of nuclear weapons.

The two delegations stressed that imperialism's aggressive counteroffensive does not stem from the strengthening of its positions; rather, it is the result of its attempts to regain lost positions, oppose socialism's progress worldwide, subdue the peoples struggling for their liberation and achieve military supremacy over the Socialist camp. The struggle in defense of peace is inseparable from the struggle for democracy, national independence, social progress and socialism.

The two delegations reiterate that the strengthening of the unity of the international communist movement, as well as the strengthening of the great revolutionary forces' friendship and mutual solidarity, are of fundamental importance in defeating imperialism's plans.

The two delegations expressed their solidarity with all people struggling against imperialism, colonialism, fascism and racism.

The two delegations denounced the policy of interference and aggression conducted by U.S. imperialism toward the peoples of many countries and regions of the world, both directly and through Israel's Zionists, the South African racists and cruel fascist and reactionary dictatorships.

They denounce in particular the criminal war of aggression and genocide waged by imperialism and Zionism in Lebanon and reaffirm their solidarity with the people of Lebanon, the Lebanese national movement, the Palestinian People and the PLO.

The two delegations confirmed the close ties of friendship, cooperation and solidarity linking the PCP and the DKP, and expressed their wish to work to strengthen them.

COMMUNIQUE OF PSP PANEL SESSION SUMMARIZED

PM291501 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 Jul 82 pp 1, 3

[Excerpt] "The Socialist Party [PSP] believes that the election timetable must reflect the patriotic need to ensure rotation and alternation, as a genuine institutional safety valve, and not the timing plans needed to launch a new and confused party." This is stated by the PSP National Committee in a communique released to the press after its meeting yesterday.

During the proceedings, which lasted all day, the members of the PSP National Committee welcomed the results achieved by the Assembly of the Republic with regard to the revision of the constitution. According to the final communique, the modification of the fundamental law will strengthen "substantially individual and social rights, maintain the guarantees of control over the economic system and establish a political system totally answerable to the citizens."

After criticizing the pressures exerted on the PSP in connection with the revision of the constitution, and stressing that the Socialists' political commission has ratified the agreement reached by the parliamentary group on transitional norms for the implementation of the revision law, the communique condemns the "demagogic exploitation" of some Revolution Council members in this regard and states that "there is no monopoly on the spirit of 25 April" [date of 1974 coup], since "its history involves not only the regular troops and draftees who physically carried it out but also those who fought for it and who were persecuted for the sake of their ideals."

Portugal's economic situation was also examined by the PSP, which regards it as "extraordinarily negative," emphasizing in this connection the levels of inflation and unemployment.

The PSP National Committee also reasserted its request for a meeting soon with the president of the republic with a view to "establishing an institutional dialogue which is daily made more and more necessary by the situation and which there is no justification for making negative or for interrupting inexplicably," and said it was "absolutely unacceptable" for G[illegible] Ramalho Eanes, "elected by the people's votes and thanks to the functioning of the impartial activity of the PSP's district and regional structures," now to refuse to receive the Socialist leadership.

After "repudiating" the "charges leveled at the PSP by the PCP secretary general," and stating that his remarks in connection with the revision of the constitution constitute "an act of fanatical blindness and unrestrained political hatred which irremediably places the line symbolized by Mr Alvaro Cunhal in the museum of prehistoric Stalinist fossils," the communique also mentions the unresolved problem of regional autonomy, announcing that a recommendation was made to socialist representatives in the ad hoc committee on the revision of the constitution that agreed solutions in this connection be found quickly.

SWEDEN

OFFICIALS CITED ON BALTIC DEMARCATION TALKS

PM291601 Stockholm STOCKHOLMS TIDNINGEN in Swedish 23 Jul 82 p 4

[TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA report]

[Excerpt] Stockholm -- The government did offer the Soviet Union a section of the disputed area east of Gotland during the negotiations between the two countries in January. High-ranking officials in the Foreign Ministry confirmed this for TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA [TT] on Thursday [22 July]. However, Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten told TT that there has never been any proposal from the government that the median line principle be abandoned in the negotiations with the Soviet Union.

"I cannot say anything about what was said at the civil servants' discussions during the negotiations, but there has never been any proposal for a compromise from the government."

In his speech at Almedalen in Visby on Tuesday [20 July] Ullsten also said that "the negotiating table is clear; there are no proposed concessions to the Soviet Union. Sweden is adhering to the median line principle."

But it is completely clear that there was a proposal to give a certain amount of the disputed 13,500 square km east of Gotland to the Soviet Union to bring about an agreement.

Defense Ministry Under Secretary Sven Hirdman also told TT: "It is quite correct that the size of the disputed zone was estimated at the negotiations between Sweden and the Soviet Union in January. The disputed area does not need to be estimated. It is perfectly clear what boundaries for their fishing zones the two countries are demanding."

According to Hirdman the fact that the size of the disputed area was estimated also confirms that there was a compromise proposal put forward by Sweden. Ullsten told TT on Thursday that the government is completely agreed that there will be no concessions to the Soviet Union in the negotiations.

Defense Ministry Under Secretary Hirdman also said: "There is no disagreement at all on this question inside the government. The defense minister and the foreign minister are in complete agreement."

Hirdman told TT that there are two principles which guide Swedish negotiations with the Soviet Union: "The first is a Swedish point of departure that the median line must be calculated from the coast of Gotland; the second that Sweden wants to reach an agreement with the Soviet Union."

Hirdman's statement that the median line calculated from Gotland is a Swedish "point of departure" could also be taken to mean that Sweden might be prepared to make compromises in the future to reach an agreement. Sources within the Foreign Ministry told TT that Hirdman and Foreign Ministry Legal Chief Hans Danelius have been the firmest advocates of compromises to bring about an agreement. But pressure on the government -- from Gotland in particular -- not to compromise with the Soviet Union has been very strong.

THATCHER RESPONDS TO HAQ LETTER ON LEBANON

BK281640 Karachi Domestic Service in Urdu 1500 GMT 28 Jul 82

[Text] The British prime minister, Mrs Thatcher, has assured President Mohammad Ziaul Haq that she shares his concern about the tragic events in Lebanon and has been deeply distressed by civilian casualties and widespread destruction. She stated this in her reply to the president's message which was sent early this month to the heads of state and government of the five permanent members of the UN Security Council urging them to use their influence to obtain the immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon.

Mrs Thatcher also shared the president's view that recognition of the rights of Palestinian people lay at the heart of the problem of obtaining a comprehensive Middle East peace settlement. She further assured the president that Britain will do everything it can in conjunction with other concerned parties to bring about an early end to the dangerous situation in Lebanon. The British prime minister also said that the European Economic Community has taken concrete steps against Israel for its failure to comply with the relevant Security Council resolutions on Lebanon.

'FRAYING' OF ATLANTIC ALLIANCE EXAMINED

PM261423 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 24 Jul 82 p 12

[Editorial: "Cross-Purposes"]

[Text] Without conjuring up a golden age of Euro-American relations, it is possible to discern and deplore the mutal recriminations and tit-for-tat accompanying the steady fraying of the Atlantic alliance. In such a vicious spiral, it is rare for one side to be wholly right or wholly wrong. It is, therefore, less meet to apportion praise and blame than to disentangle cross-purposes, so that the spiral might be slowed down, halted and if possible reversed.

The Americans have a good case over the Soviet-European pipeline, yet have ruled themselves out of court by their manner of presenting it and by their own previous trade dealings with the Soviet Union. Argument and diplomatic representations are one thing; attempts to bring pressure to bear on sovereign governments and foreign firms are another. He who comes to equity must have clean hands. American commercial dealings with the Soviet Union have all too often violated their own precepts to please their own producers' lobbies. They cannot reasonably demand higher standards from their allies.

However, there are good reasons why we in Britain should be as concerned at the deal as Washington. It is heavily subsidised. The EEC is tightly cartelised, nowhere more heavily than in iron and steel, its genesis. The main aim is to maximise membership of powerful traditional unions and stave off economic change -- whatever rationalisations may be offered in terms of "social" and strategic aims. Since these schemes lead to "over-production" there are pressures to off-load the surplus at give-away prices to countries which do not suffer from "capitalist crises of over-production." But in fact from the opposite. Hence the Soviet bloc's armament drive is indirectly but effectively subsidised. The cheap steel gives the Soviet Union surplus profits on its gas along all its length. Another shortcoming of the scheme is that far from offsetting European vulnerability to interruption of energy supplies, it permits the Soviet Union to intensify the effect. If only the Americans had appealed to enlightened self-interest here instead of trying the heavy hand.

KIPRIANOU REPLIES AGAIN TO DENKTAS CRITICISM

[Text] President Kiprianou has stressed again that the Cyprus Government has every right to take recourse to the United Nations and all international organizations as long as the Turkish occupation of part of Cypriot territory continues and no substantive progress is marked toward a solution of the Cyprus issue.

Referring to Turkish Cypriot leaders' allegations that taking recourse to the UN General Assembly would be contrary to the concept of the ongoing talks and referring to the danger that measures might be taken in this event, President Kiprianou stressed that the Cyprus Government does not intend to be intimidated by threats and blackmail by the Turkish Cypriot leaders in order to refrain from acting in a way that it deems right for the promotion of a just solution to the Cyprus issue. Mr Kiprianou further said: The attempt by the Turkish Cypriot leaders to impede the Cyprus state's legal and justified action in taking recourse to the United Nations is indicative of the negative spirit that characterizes the actions of the Turkish Cypriot leaders and Ankara.

With regard to the Turkish leaders' measures -- which they brandish like the sword of Damocles -- in the event recourse is taken to the United Nations, President Kiprianou added despite the fact that these measures are not defined, they must aim at further consolidating the faits accomplis of the invasion in line with the known policy of partition of Ankara and its organs in the occupied north.

Missing Persons Issue

[Text] President Kiprianou has stressed that the Turkish side must realize that the humanitarian issue of the missing persons will never end until the fate of the last missing person is determined.

President Kiprianou made this statement because of the criticism by Turkish Cypriot leader Mr Denktas who maintained that the arrival in Cyprus of the two-member delegation of the working group from the UN Human Rights Commission will complicate the work of the missing persons committee on the island, and accused the Greek Cypriot side of allegedly exploiting the missing persons issue for political propaganda. In denying Mr Denktas' allegations, the president of the republic reiterated that the Greek Cypriot side considers and approaches the missing persons problem as a purely humanitarian issue, and does not connect it with the political problem of Cyprus. If this was also the approach of the Turkish Cypriot side, Mr Kiprianou stressed in his statement, much would have been accomplished in determining the fate of the missing persons. On the contrary, Mr Denktas is suggesting the closure of the missing persons issue, and the Turkish side has always adopted a hostile stand on every effort that aims at throwing some light on the whole issue.

Mr Kiprianou's statement added: Mr Denktas' concern about the work of the missing persons committee in Cyprus becoming complicated is only an excuse because it is emphatically stressed in the pertinent UN communique that the contribution of the working group will not influence at all the efforts to reactivate the said committee, which has never started the substantive part of its work and remained completely inactive because of the stance of the Turkish side.

Mr Kiprianou stressed in his statement that the arrival of the members of the UN working group constitutes a new step toward the continuing efforts to determine the fate of the missing persons. This step should be welcome by all those who are sincerely interested in ending an ordeal that affects thousands of people.

SPOKESMAN REPLIES TO NATO ACCESSION SUGGESTION

[Text] Commenting upon an item in an Athens newspaper against Cyprus' nonaligned policy, which is even blamed for the Turkish invasion of Cyprus, the government spokesman stressed that the nonaligned policy is the most appropriate for Cyprus and its abandonment would lead only to dangerous adventures.

The spokesman stressed that if Cyprus still exists as a state it is due to the resolutions by the United Nations and other international organizations, resolutions that were basically guaranteed through the help of the Nonaligned Movement in view of Cyprus' nonaligned foreign policy. Should Cyprus abandon its nonaligned policy, the government spokesman said, and accede to NATO, it will lose a valuable weapon without, on the other hand, guaranteeing anything concrete. In such a case, he went on to say, Cyprus would find itself in an inferior position to that of Turkey's within the alliance and would, at least, be compelled to confine its problem within the NATO framework without being able to rely on the support of other countries or groups of countries. The spokesman then said that nobody disagrees with the fact that the West can solve the Cyprus problem, but in order to do this it should exercise decisive pressure on Turkey, something it has not done.

Referring to the Athens newspaper's viewpoint that if the Cyprus Government had given bases to the Americans Turkey would not have been allowed to invade the island, the spokesman wondered why we should suppose that the United States would do more than what had been done, or rather had not been done by another NATO country -- Britain, which in addition to the fact that it has bases on Cyprus -- in fact sovereign bases -- is also a guarantor of the independence and territorial integrity of Cyprus.

RIGHTWING SIDELINE COORDINATION MOVES NOTED

NC300910 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 30 Jul 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Extreme Rightwing Cypriot and Mainland Greek Sideline Moves To Coordinate Opposition Action"]

[Text] Insistent and continuous efforts are in progress by well known extreme rightwing Cypriots living in Athens in an effort to establish a [Democratic] Rally department in the Greek capital. These efforts are being led by an extreme rightist Cypriot businessman permanently established in Athens.

Totally confirmed reports available to us state that regular meetings are held at the home of this extreme rightist personality in Ayia Paraskevi [Athens suburb] attended by Cypriots living in Athens who have extreme rightist leanings.

According to our information, the Cypriot and mainland Greek extreme rightists will use the Rally department for their opposition activities both against the Papandreou government as well as against the Government of Cyprus. It is stressed that for a long time now Cypriot and mainland Greek extreme rightists have been coordinating their activities against the two governments. Press reports in the Cyprus and mainland Greek press and also foreign press reports, expressing their viewpoint and aimed at undermining the two governments and their relations, also fall within these efforts.

Our information indicates that the well known rally personality Yeoryios Liveras is the liaison betwen the extreme Cypriot rightists in Athens and the Rally. This Rally personality attended several meetings of the group. From his frequent visits to Athens and his attendance at the Ayia Paraskevi meetings it can be concluded that Liveras acts as a coordinator of the efforts to set up a Rally department in Athens.

According to the same reports, leaked from circles close to this group, the chairman of Rally [Kiridhis] also took part in at least two such meetings when he visited Athens for various contacts.

It was also made known that the group of extreme rightist Cypriots has regular contacts with well-known extreme rightists in the Greek capital for the purpose of further tightening the ties between the Rally and the Greek extreme rightwing.

TURKISH THREATS OVER UN APPEAL APPRAISED

NC300853 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 30 Jul 82 p 10

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot publication NEWS FROM THE NORTH reports on the measures which Denktas has threatened to take, with Ankara's approval, if the Greek Cypriot side appeals to the United Nations. Such measures will be:

-- Severance of the intercommunal talks and contacts on humanitarian issues.

-- Renaming the "Turkish Federation State" the "Turkish State of Cyprus."

It is reported that these measures were included in the Turkish Cypriot leadership's recent decisions which, however, "leave the door open for a confederation, if this is approved by Ankara."

The Turkish Cypriot publication recognizes that the questions of electricity and water supply are the greatest obstacles to the severance of the intercommunal talks and the declaration of an independent state.

The Turkish Cypriots, it reports, have installed their own electricity supply system, but they are not using it because of problems created by efforts to guarantee fuel oil.

The question of water supply is less serious, because sources other than those in the south could be found in the Pendadhaktilos range in the north.

CAGATAY WARNS UN OFFICIALS ON MISSING PERSONS

TA291457 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1455 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Text] Lefkose, 29 Jul (AA) -- The Turkish Federated State of Cyprus Government determined Wednesday a number of measures to be adopted in case the Greek Cypriots do not give up plans to apply to the United Nations to have the Cyprus problem discussed on an international plane, Foreign Minister Kenan Atakol announced. The measures determined are not being made public for the time being.

Atakol told a visiting two-man working group of the UN Human Rights Committee that the Greek Cypriots did not really want to resolve the missing persons issue. They would rather perpetuate it to maintain their exploitation for propaganda aims, he stressed. In case the problem was resolved, the Greek Cypriot side would have to own up to the massacres they had staged during the 1974 Samson coup, he recalled.

AKROPOLIS ADVOCATES CYPRUS ACCESSION TO NATO

NC291736 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 29 Jul 82 pp 1, 7

[Editorial: "'Nonaligned' Cyprus (A 'Bold' Proposal)"]

[Text] The nonaligned meeting in Nicosia and the "Attila" anniversary again brought the Cyprus issue into the limelight. As is well known, Cyprus is included among the "nonaligned," and the "nonaligned" position has always been considered to be almost "sacred." However, is it so? We believe that adherence to "nonalignment" is a mistake and that to remedy this would constitute the most decisive contribution to the solution of the Cyprus problem.

Cyprus was nonaligned. Its relations with the West were rather cool while on the other hand it was cultivating its friendship with the Third World, especially with the Arab world, to such an extent that many Western capitals were expressing the fear that in the future we would have a "Mediterranean Cuba."

This atmosphere greatly facilitated the Turkish invasion. It played a leading part in the West's nonintervention and in the maintenance of the Turkish occupation -- with a tendency for its perpetuation because Turkey is a NATO member whereas Cyprus is not. Turkey belongs to the West; Cyprus is "nonaligned." Nicosia (and Athens) advocates: "A unitary and independent" but also "a nonaligned and demilitarized Cyprus" -- that is, a Cyprus that would be of benefit to Moscow, not to the West, whereas the solution of the Cyprus problem exclusively depends on the latter.

Had Cyprus not been "nonaligned" but a NATO member, could Turkey have invaded it? Probably not, and even more certainly it could not have done so had Makarios given the bases Washington had asked for, just as Russia would not have invaded Afghanistan if instead of being "nonaligned" it had been a NATO member with U.S. bases on it.

What help did the nonaligned give to Cyprus -- the victim of the Turkish invasion? None: Nor do they intend to give any because they are divided and they clash among themselves: nonaligned Iran with nonaligned Iraq, Iraq with nonaligned Syria, nonaligned Algeria with nonaligned Morocco, nonaligned Somalia with equally nonaligned Ethiopia, and so forth. They are powerless. Had the Falkland Islands been "independent, nonaligned and demilitarized" they would now be an Argentine province and Galtieri the victor.

What help can the West give to Cyprus? Unlimited (as in the Falkland's case). It can compel Turkey to withdraw from the island. It can restore the unity, integrity, peace and independence of Cyprus. However, when can it do this? It can do this if Cyprus joins the West, if it accedes to NATO. How can Turkey demand to occupy territories of a state that asks for accession to the Western alliance?

The Cyprus problem cannot be solved by the United Nations nor by any "international conference" as it cannot be solved by Brandt or the "intercommunal" talks. Only the West can solve it, and it will solve it immediately should Cyprus join it. The current situation in the Middle East greatly facilitates this accession. Cyprus has become a valuable factor and Turkey would be in a very difficult position if it tried to oppose Cyprus' utilization by the West.

This is what the voice of reason dictates. Should there be boldness, to which we must listen, the Cyprus problem will be solved.

NEW FINANCE MINISTER KAFAOGLU ON ECONOMIC ISSUES

TA291645 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1557 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Excerpts] Ankara, 29 Jul (AA) -- Adnan Basar Kafaoglu, the newly-appointed finance minister, staged his first press conference here Thursday. Ruling out that there would be radical changes in the economic stability program introduced by Turgut Ozal, the former deputy-prime minister in charge of economic issues, the new minister called on the Turkish nation to take part in a campaign to increase production. Though ruling out any radical change in the current program, Kafaoglu said measures would be taken to correct certain errors made in the economic policies. The corrections would be made in line with the spirit of the September 12, 1980 military operation, he added.

Proper conditions would be created to encourage Turkish nationals to save part of their incomes, the finance minister said.

Revealing that the tax law would be amended to facilitate the citizen's relations with the tax department, the minister said the workers' problems would be resolved "in the spirit of social reconciliation." He also promised that the state government had interior payment difficulties [as received]. Kafaoglu said lasting solutions would be found to this situation.

Referring to state economic enterprises, Kafaoglu remarked that those enterprises would be sold to the private sector "when it is deemed suitable."

"We believe that foreign capital will make important contributions to the development and growth of the Turkish economy and eagerly expect it. We will continue the national policy of adopting all kinds of incentives aimed at enlarging the percentage of the foreign private capital investment in our economy. Decisions on applications from foreign capital holders will be made, as usual, by a single authority and the decision-making process will be speeded up.

At the head of the shortcomings and errors concerning the structural problems of our economy are the insufficiency of savings and a failure to channel resources towards development priorities," he concluded.

"Our stability program, will be maintained and constitute the basis for development resources. The most effective way of fighting inflation is raising the interest rates and restricting the money supply. Only then it is possible to fight with black marketing and profiteering. Turkey has made use of this rational method. But, in case inflation is significantly brought down, the high interest rates make the credits more costly and render investments less profitable thus turning into a dynamic factor feeding inflation," Kafaoglu added.

Though praising the current "realistic foreign currency rates policy", the new finance minister said it is highly important to support with rational monetary, taxation, investment and financial policies the present currency rates policy aimed at rendering imports more expensive, limiting the domestic demand, and striking a balance between domestic and foreign prices. "Up till now, policies consisted of macro and global measures not permitting selective, specific and corrective solutions to the various problems of the economy and resulting in certain unfortunate situations," the minister said.

He concluded as follows: "After the Turkish industry gains stability on a micro level, a provisional model will be elaborated to divert savings into investments aimed at correcting structural shortcomings in the industry and at bringing about a certain amount of economic growth, a mechanism which will lead to a feedback of savings.

The savings system will be based on four principles: A climate of trust will be created to enable Turkish people to save without misgivings. The Turkish nation will see that as much as they save, the country gets more developed and their incomes increase. The system required to turn people's savings into most productive and profitable investments will be established and will be soon operating. The state will support all enterprises of entrepreneurs fully aware of the importance of Turkey's industrial development."

Answering questions, minister of finance said interest rates would not be raised. High interest rates encourages savings but at the same time higher incomes increase spendings, he said. Banks, he hinted, would be encouraged to help their customers in owning dwellings.

He acknowledged high rate of unemployment in Turkey, but said they do not intend to adopt an inflationary policy just to create jobs. "Without securing real economic sources, we shall not open new job sites which will increase inflation," he said.

Asked whether it was right to include such principles in the constitution as to define economic policy, he said, "principles which will restrict economic policies to be adopted by the political parties in future, should not take place in the constitution."

To a question whether he intends new price increases for the products of state enterprises he answered:

"National economy is unique. If economy gives deficit it means state enterprises also have deficit, and if the prices are not increased, inflation is fanned. We shall spend effort to lower the costs of goods produced in state-run enterprises."

On the rate of inflation he said they will try to keep it around 25 percent for this year but even 30 percent of inflation would be accepted as normal.

EEC DECIDES TO NEGOTIATE WITH U.S. ON STEEL

AB291325 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 1240 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Text] The minister delegate in charge of European affairs and the other ministers concerned have reported about the deliberations of two EEC council meetings.

1 -- Fishery (20 to 21 July): The council adopted the regulations enabling the entry into force of the joint organization of the market of fishery products.

2 -- Steel (24 July): This exceptional council meeting was devoted to the negotiations going on with the U.S. Government concerning the proceedings started by the latter against some exports of European iron and steel. At the request of the French delegation -- which particularly insisted on the need for the EEC member states to adopt a common attitude and to entrust to the Commission alone the responsibility of negotiating with the U.S. Government -- the EEC ministers gave the Commission the exclusive mandate to conduct negotiations on the iron and steel differences existing between the 10 EEC countries and the United States. The discussions are to resume without delay.

In addition, the Council of Ministers was informed about the final adoption of the reform of the organization of the wine market.

GOVERNMENT COMMITTED TO CLEAR DECISION ON CRUISE

PM291201 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 23 Jul 82 p 3

[Text] The Hague, 23 Jul -- A decision on whether or not to deploy cruise missiles in the Netherlands cannot be postponed indefinitely, but at present no definitive statement can be made about the problem.

This was the answer given by Prime Minister van Agt (in his capacity as foreign minister) and Defense Minister van Mierlo to questions from Second Chamber Deputies Schappe and Kohnstamm (Democrats '66). The two deputies had asked for clarification of a statement made by Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Van den Broek. On a tour of the United States with Queen Beatrix, Van den Broek had said in Grand Rapids that the Netherlands must give a clear "yes" or "no" to the deployment of cruise missiles in the Netherlands and that this decision could not be postponed indefinitely. Otherwise, the under secretary said, Netherlands credibility would be jeopardized and we would be unable to retain maximum influence on the NATO decisionmaking process.

In their answer to the two deputies the ministers stated that Van den Broek's remarks were in accord with the government's official position. This is that results of the negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States in Geneva are of great importance to the decision on the cruise missiles in the Netherlands.

EAST BLOC DEBTS TO AUSTRIAN BANKS INCREASE

[Summary] Vienna (AZ) -- According to a special report worked out by the Austrian Institute for Economic Research, the total debts of East bloc countries to the West were about $80 billion at the end of 1981. Austria's share in the debts was $6.6 billion, about 8 percent. Austria's share in Western industrialized countries' exports to the East bloc market is only about 5 percent.

The net East bloc debts to Austrian banks are $4.5 billion (72 billion schillings), about 10 percent of the total East bloc debts to Western banks. This percentage has increased markedly since the end of 1975, when it was only 5.5 percent. The Austrian banks' share of particularly critical East bloc loans (to Poland and Romania) is about 34 percent of the overall volume of East bloc loans, about the same as the average share of such loans in the total Western bank loans to East bloc countries. Despite stagnant Austrian exports in the East bloc, the net debts of East bloc countries to Austrian banks have gone up particularly sharply in 1981 -- by 22 billion schillings -- and this trend has continued in the first quarter of this year with an increase of nearly 4 billion schillings. Moreover, the Eastern countries still have unused portions of Austrian bank credits totalling nearly 21 billion schillings. Of the gross debts of East bloc countries to Austrian banks at the end of 1981 totaling 92 billion schillings, 32 billion fall due in 1982, 11 billion in 1983 and 49 billion in 1984 or later.

PAHR TO ATTEND NEUTRAL, NONALIGNED MEETING

AU291210 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 29 Jul 82 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Excerpt] Vienna -- Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr is focusing his activities on the so-called "N and N" [neutral and nonaligned) group of states, which beginning this fall will again attempt to overcome the stalemate at the Madrid CSCE followup meeting. As Pahr arrived in San Marino on Wednesday [28 July], it was learned that he intends to participate in a meeting of foreign ministers of "N and N" states in Stockholm at the end of August.

Pahr's 2-day official visit to the little state south of Rimini will be marked by efforts to achieve a compromise between the blocs.

VIENNA MONUMENT SMEARED WITH SWASTIKA, PAINT

AU301152 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 30 Jul 82 p 3

[Summary] One day after the bomb attack against Jewish shops in Salzburg, neo-Nazis last night smeared the monument to the victims of fascism on Reumannplatz in Vienna-Favoriten with a large swastika and black paint. To date, police have no clues as to the perpetrators. A large-scale investigation has been launched which also includes the state security police. Police do not exclude the possibilitiy that the perpetrators were foreigners, and that there is a connection with the Salzburg bombing incident. According to a spokesman of the Salzburg state security police, the investigation of the bombing incident is running in high gear but has brought no tangible results to date.

Yesterday Fritz Edlinger, national chairman of the Austrian Socialist Party-affiliated "Young Generation" organization, sharply condemned the Salzburg and Vienna outrages, depicting them as new proof that a militant neofascist movement has now also developed in Austria. He called for drastic measures by the authorities against the neofascist underground in Austria.

NETHERLANDS

CDA 'LOYALISTS' STILL OPPOSE CRUISE DEPLOYMENT

PM301521 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 28 Jul 82 p 3

[Excerpt] The Hague, 28 Jul -- Members of the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] Second Chamber Group who were once known as the "Loyalists" will not support a CDA-People's Party for Freedom and Democracy cabinet if, during the government formation negotiations, a decision is made for the deployment of new nuclear arms in the Netherlands.

This is the view of CDA Culture, Recreation and Social Welfare Minister H. de Boer and former CDA Second Chamber Group leader W. Aantjes. Minister de Boer, one of the former Loyalists, said on the radio yesterday that a decision to deploy new missiles would conflict with the CDA program. He considers it wrong to make the deployment decision dependent on the results of the negotiations in Geneva and on nothing else.

De Boer pointed out that during the 1977 government formation negotiations the Loyalists supported the then cabinet despite their objections. "Since then we have learned how loyality is rewarded -- badly," De Boer said.

Aantjes said that the question of the new nuclear missiles was postponed during the 1977 [as published] cabinet formation negotiations and that since then the Loyalists have been "mocked and punished" as soon as they reveal their continued opposition to the cabinet plans.

In Aantjes' view there must be no further postponement. During the next government formation period the matter must be settled by the CDA Second Chamber Group. If there is no guarantee that deployment will not take place, the Loyalists will accept no responsibility for the next cabinet, he said.

Recently Prime Minister van Agt stated his view that, during the next cabinet formation negotiations, agreements must be reached on the deployment of new nuclear arms. The decision whether or not to deploy could be left an open question to be decided by a majority vote in the Second Chamber.

Minister de Koning, number two on the CDA electoral list, said recently that the former Loyalists would not be allowed to join the CDA Second Chamber Group is they did not agree with this point in the CDA program.

Constitutionally, it is possible for CDA members to table reservations with regard to individual sections of the party program for which they are unwilling to accept responsibility.

Last year three Loyalists had their objection to the passages on peace and security acknowledged. They were De Boer, Faber and Scholten. A number of others, including current Defense Minister Under Secretary van Houwelingen, told the CDA Party Executive that they were opposed to the deployment of nuclear arms.

U.S. CONFIRMATION OF PIPELINE EMBARGO CRITICIZED

[Text] Bonn, 30 Jun (DPA) -- On Friday the Federal Government made clear criticisms of the renewed confirmation of the American embargo against the European-Soviet natural gas pipeline deal. On Friday Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl told journalists in Bonn that the well-known Reagan argument for the embargo is seen by the Federal Government as "not conclusive and not very convincing."

Ruehl referred to Chancellor Schmidt's prognosis that the row about the embargo in the alliance would be over by the end of the year. Schmidt made this assessment on the basis of his talks in the United States with Secretary of State George Shultz and his political experience on the duration of such arguments.

SCHMIDT EXPRESSES CONCERN OVER U.S. ECONOMY

LD311812 Hamburg DPA in German 1733 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] Hamburg, 31 Jul (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has expressed concern about the U.S. economic situation. Following a 2-hour talk with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in his Hamburg residence, Schmidt told journalists on Saturday evening that the continuing growth in the U.S. budget deficit is having an effect on interests rates in the United States and all over the world. Canada is hit particularly hard. The chancellor said that at the time of the press briefing Genscher and he had reached no conclusions on the consequences for the Federal Republic.

Schmidt said that there are no differences of opinion between himself and the FDP chairman on FRG-U.S. relations and on the burden inflicted on them by the U.S. embargo on the gas pipeline deal with the Soviet Union. His view to the effect that the dispute with the United States will be settled by the end of the year is not optimistic but realistic, Schmidt said. "The pipeline will be built and the gas will flow," the chancellor stressed. It is time to stop the mutual recriminations on the subject.

The two politicians are going to discuss domestic issues this evening. Asked whether the latest opinion polls, according to which the FDP would barely clear the 5-percent hurdle in an election, would affect the coalition, Genscher, who also stressed agreement with the chancellor, said quite simply, "No."

FDP'S VERHEUGEN VIEWS SITUATION IN POLAND

LD301326 Hamburg DPA in German 1117 GMT 26 Jul 82

[Text] Warsaw, 26 Jul (DPA) -- The Polish leadership is determined, according to Secretary General Guenter Verheugen, to lift martial law by the end of the year. The politician said on Friday in Warsaw that this was confirmed to him in almost all the talks which he had held. Party and government chief Gen Wojciech Jaruzelski spoke on 21 July of the prospect of a "suspension" of martial law by the end of the year.

Verheugen, who ended a 3-day visit to Warsaw on Friday and returned to Bonn, spoke in Poland with representatives of party, government and parliament. On several occasions he was assured that the lifting of martial law would also bring the release of all internees. It is possible, however, that prosecutions will be started against some of them.

The FDP secretary general was in Poland at the invitation of the Democratic Party.

Shortly before he flew back to the FRG, he told German journalists in Warsaw that people should now be thinking of coordinated economic aid for Poland, in case the conditions for it should be fulfilled one day.

In his view people cannot realistically expect the Solidarity trade union to be restored in its old form. Those with whom he talked told him that in future there would be a trade union independent of the administration in Poland. The long-prepared trade union law is to be adopted in parliament as early as September.

KOHL COMMENTS ON STATE OF INTRA-GERMAN RELATIONS

LD311026 Hamburg DPA in German 0851 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] Bonn, 31 Jul (DPA) -- Opposition leader Helmut Kohl will probably be going to the GDR again in the autumn. "I am not prepared to make my private travel plans dependent on political pressures from the GDR leadership," he stressed in an interview for the Sunday edition of the BERLINER MORGENPOST in connection with the recent entry denials for CDU politicians. Kohl added: "We are going there because it is normal for us as Germans to travel in Germany."

The CDU chairman strongly condemned the refusal of entry visas. There is nothing to justify the present attitude of the GDR. It has clearly violated the spirit and the working principles of the existing treaties and agreements. "Disappointingly meager," is how he assessed the results of the negotiations with the GDR since the Schmidt-Honecker meeting at the Werbellinsee in December 1981. Whereas the concessionary overdraft facility for the GDR has been preserved at practically the same level, the reciprocal concessions from East Berlin are not only not commensurate with it, but have already lapsed to a great extent -- for example in the waiving of prosecutions of escapees from the GDR. Any new initiative in intra-German relations must come from the GDR and must not consist of Bonn once again offering East Berlin unilateral concessions.

The interview was prereleased by the CDU/CSU Parliamentary Group.

GENSCHER ON HESSE ELECTIONS, FDP-SPD RELATIONS

DW020933 Stuttgart Sueddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1640 GMT 1 Aug 82

[Interview with Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FRG foreign minister and FDP chairman, by Dankwart Reissenberger; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Axcerts] [Question] Are the Hesse Land elections of essential importance for Bonn?

[Answer] The importance of these elections for the federal Land of Hesse simply cannot be underrated because it is our goal to bring about a change and to form a new majority for an economic policy in Hesse which is oriented toward the future. This means an economic policy which will make it possible to ensure jobs, thus meeting the most important task of German domestic policy for the eighties. Thus what we want to achieve in Hesse is a clear rejection of the Hamburg model where the Social Democrats are kept in power by the alternatives [die alternativen] and where a policy is pursued which threatens jobs and thus deprives social progress of its foundation. In Hesse this decision by the FDP was necessary because the Social Democrats there have made themselves the spearhead of a policy which makes investments difficult and impairs the framework conditions through control measures demanded for the economy and additional burdens on the taxpayers and investments. In view of the almost 2 million unemployed, we cannot afford such experiments based on socialist thought. All forces must be directed at an economic policy oriented toward progress. That's why in Hesse, where the SPD has made itself the spearhead of this development, we have had to decide for a change and for a new majority, and thus for a market economy oriented toward the future.

[Question] Do you feel you can be successful with your present coalition partner, the SPD, in foreign policy affairs in the future?

[Answer] I am in full agreement with the federal chancellor of the importance of the Atlantic alliance and our friendship with the United States as a basis for our security and freedom.

[Question] Aren't you afraid that the SPD organizations could lead the federal chancellor into a direction which in effect would make it impossible for you to continue the coalition with the SPD?

[Answer] As a government member, I consider it to be my obligation to reject the attacks that have been launched in recent weeks against the federal chancellor by some SPD circles as excessive, objectively unfounded and harmful to German interests.

PAPER SPECULATES ON END OF PIPELINE QUARREL

DW391205 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 30 Jul 82 p 3

[Commentary on President Reagan's press conference signed HHG]

[Text] It is not overly friendly of the U.S. President to make it clear without any diplomatic ado that he proposes to adhere strictly to his embargo against the natural gas pipeline deal of the Europeans with the Soviet Union while the chancellor is still on North American soil.

The announcement by the government spokesman that Schmidt has succeeded in mitigating some irritations during his visit to the United States was probably rash. Where the irritations really hurt they will remain for quite some time in the relationship between the Western heads of state and government. But according to Schmidt the "family quarrel" is supposed to be over by Christmas. Hopefully this will not be the same as saying that the solders will be home again by Christmas.

Each side not only has a very divergent view as to the way the Soviet Union should be treated but also a highly sensitive prestige. The leaders of this world don't like to correct themselves because they would thereby have to admit that they have been mistaken. Other people, too, have difficulty doing that, only the consequences are not as far-reaching.

Perhaps the whole, so unnecessary a quarrel will die down in the course of the next few months after all, like the proverbial stillborn child. Still, there will be a happy ending only if the U.S. government does not really resort to the punitive measures it has threatened in the event of violation of the U.S. embargo regulations by the European companies involved, or if the Europeans succeed in building the pipeline without American technology.

HANDELSBLATT: REAGAN 'MURDERING FACTS'

DW301143 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 30-31 Jul 82 p 2

[Jens Eckhardt commentary]

[Text] After Ronald Reagan's first press conference as the President of the United States he still had to face a charge of loose handling of facts leveled at him by the U.S. press. This caused his advisers to extend the periods between the individual appearances and to shift the publicity-promoting television spectacle to early afternoon. In this way it was primarily the uncritical public which enjoyed the live relay, and in the evening news summaries the event appeared to be more coherent than it actually was.

For several months now the intervals between the press conferences have been shrinking, and they are scheduled for the best television time, at 2000 hours. The President, one might conclude, knows how to handle his job, and without remorse can face a forum which just about meets the purpose of a public question hour in parliament.

But it is merely the questioners who are being handled, called by their first names charmingly and with a wink. Jim, John and Helen express their thanks with uncomplicated, predictable questions and are only too often satisfied with empty answers. In their reports they attach supreme significance to any utterance, and newspaper readers the next morning have a hard time recognizing the event of the night before.

The 12th press conference was no exception. The ritual murder of facts, rehearsed time and again, meanwhile is proceeding smoothly. Thus, Reagan termed the relationship among the Western alliance partners "excellent" after the pipeline embargo, and the auditorium did not moan. In his opening statement, which he read, he demanded the passage of a constitutional amendment which would prohibit state deficits. The people demands such a reform, Reagan declared, saying that it would considerably influence the economic recuperation of the country. After all, the cyclic problems are primarily of a psychological nature. The head of the Federal Reserve Board, Volcker, stated on the same day that such an amendment would have no effect on the financial markets, and noted economists termed the initiative "cosmetic makeup" and "dangerous humbug."

Asked about the contradiction between his desire for such a law and the record deficit produced by his administration, Reagan replied with a torrent of dubious arguments. "Decades of big spending policy" are responsible for the deficits. Everything would be different had the Democrats granted him the demanded tax cuts and expenditure reduction in their full amounts.

Forgotten were the victory celebrations of the Republicans last year, the promises that a rapid upward surge was forthcoming and their own fear of railroading through in public the pension cuts as per their program. What also went unmentioned was that it was due to the pressure of his party the Senate had now voted the greatest tax hike in U.S. history so as to show the financial markets an emergency exit from the predicament of the state finances.

As for further U.S. grain deliveries to the Soviet Union, Reagan was reluctant to commit himself yet, but argued that these deliveries withdraw foreign exchange from the hostile system and thus weaken it. It would be ridiculous if the Soviets could be forced to their knees with corn and soya. The battle cry is: Buttered bread instead of missiles.

MINISTER FITERMAN INTERVIEWED ON CANADIAN VISIT

PM300837 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 10 Jul 82 p 6

[Martine Bulard interview with Charles Fiterman, minister of state for transportation -- date and place not specified]

[Excerpt] [Question] Canada's participation in the construction of airbus A-320 must have been one of the main issues discussed.

[Answer] We have in fact discussed the possibility of associating some Canadian enterprise with the airbus consortium. This is a very difficult question, obviously, because the proximity of the United States and the existing links between Canadian and American companies exert great influence. However, I am quite hopeful.

[Question] At the very moment when you were in Canada, the chairman of Boeing strongly attacked airbus in statements to the Washington Post.

[Answer] Yes, such statements were made, furthermore, a series of articles has been published in the Canadian press. However, it appeared from the discussion held that my interlocutors are quite interested in a possible association. This question is being considered and I believe that participation founded on bases advantageous to the various partners concerned would be a completely positive development.

However, this was not the only subject discussed. We considered the possibilities of cooperation in the construction of helicopters, modernization of radar systems and training of air service personnel. We discussed problems relating to railroads and decided to maintain clost contacts in this sphere between our tansportation ministries.

[Question] The Canadian Government has expressed its concern over the harmful consequences of the monetary policy purused by the United States. Did you discuss this question during your talks?

[Answer] Yes, but rather informally since, strictly speaking, this issue did not fall within the framework of our agenda. The Ottawa leaders have obviously been greatly concerned by the matter, The situation with which they were confronted has suddenly deteriorated -- an increase in unemployment and high inflation. Obviously, Canada is now suffering even more than some other countries as a result of the rise in the value of the dollar and the maintenance of exorbitant interest rates.

[Question] Frince has also been affected and the United States has been exerting increasingly strong pressure on European nations by hindering trade exchanges -- the embargo on materials needed to construct the gas pipeline and the hinderance to steel exports....

[Answer] Indeed, the present U.S. policies in the economic, monetary and trade spheres are harmful to us. This is why while restating in Ottawa our country's desire to maintain good relations with everybody in general and the United States in particular and to honor our commitments within the framework of the Atlantic alliance of which we are members and from which we have no intention of withdrawing, I had to emphasize the need to show respect for the interests of all countries, including European countries. Everybody is entitled to a place in the sun, if I may say so.

No ill-founded, artificial obstacles must be put in the path of international exchanges, especially since those who protest against protectionism have adopted the most protectionist attitude toward the matter. The U.S. views are to be applied mainly to others.

The present crisis should, on the contrary, lead toward an expansion of an increase in international exchanges. When talking to my interlocutors, I realized that our views really converged in this sphere. Despite political differences, this found expression in a rather similar concept of the need to develop the so-called North-South dialogue or -- to use an expression more familiar to us -- to seek to build a new world order.

OFFICIAL DECLINES COMMENT ON ARGENTINE ASSISTANCE

NC011036 Paris AFP in English 1015 GMT 1 Aug 82

[Text] Paris, Aug 1 (AFP) -- A French Foreign Office spokesman today declined to comment on a report in today's SUNDAY TIMES in London reiterating allegations that French technicians broke a French arms embargo by helping the Argentine Air Force during the Falklands war.

THE SUNDAY TIMES said a French statement last week did not amount to a denial of the allegations, but confirmed some points and avoided answering others.

The French spokesman today merely recalled the statement issued last week, and noted that when the Falklands conflict broke out the French Government ordered that "no technical assistance of a military character should be given to Argentina".

ORLY GROUP PAPERS FOUND IN ARMENIAN'S APARTMENT

NC311420 Paris AFP in English 1400 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] Paris, July 31 (AFP) — Police here hope that documents found at the house where an Armenian militant was fatally injured in a bomb explosion yesterday will provide details on Orly, a shadowy Armenian terrorist group that has vowed to step up its attacks on French property.

The group, which seeks the release of Armenian activists held in French prisons, has claimed responsibility for two recent bomb explosions in Paris and has warned they are just the beginning of a terrorist campaign.

Police here were today questioning the brother of 23-year-old Pierre Gulumian, who died in the hospital following the explosion of a bomb he was apparently assembling in a house in the Paris suburb of Gagny.

The brother, 29-year-old Katchadour, has reportedly provided investigators little information, but police were examining French and Arabic documents from the Orly group that were found on the premises.

Investigators said both men, who are French nationals born in the Middle East, were not until now known to police here.

Informed sources have said that Katchadour has told police only that the house where the blast occurred had been rented to independent television producer Charles Sansonetti.

Mr Sansonetti, who was not at home at the time of the explosion, was reportedly being questioned by police.

Area residents said Pierre Gulumian had earlier this month accompanied the Sansonettis to Corsica on holiday and returned to their home three or four days ago.

The Orly group has said that a truce reached with French authorities last January was broken with the arrest here in early June of Armenian military Vicken Tcharkutian, sought by American officials in connection with a bomb found at the Los Angeles Airpost last May.

The French Government, however, has denied that any agreement was reached with the group.

Mr Tcharkutian reportedly belonged to the Beirut-based Armenian Secret Liberation Army, ASALA, a number of whose militants are now detained in France and whose release is demanded by Orly.

The Orly group first appeared last November following the arrest at the Paris airport of the same name of an ASALA leader travelling with a forged Cypriot passport under the name of Dimitriu Giorghiu.

The arrest triggered a series of attacks on French interests in both Paris and Beirut that lasted until Orly announced its truce. The incidents had ceased until the explosions recently at a cafe in Place Saint Michel and near the Boulevard Saint Germain in the Paris Latin Quarter.

Orly has been repudiated by French-based Armenian groups such as the Tachnag Party and by an organization called the National Movement in Support of ASALA.

The social democratic Tachnag Party, however, alleged that ASALA and Orly were connected, adding that ASALA has in the past sought to force the release of its imprisoned members through the creation of separate groups prepared to commit terrorist attacks.

3 BOMB EXPLOSIONS ON CORSICA REPORTED 30 JUL

[Text] Bastia, Corsica, July 30 (AFP) -- Three bomb explosions here early today caused major damage to a cafe frequented by north Africans, and to a police station and a warehouse.

There have been 34 explosions of suspicious origin in Corsica this month. The bar hit today was the target of another bomb attack ten days ago which caused only minor damage.

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES ECONOMIC AUSTERITY PROGRAM

AU020823 Rome ANSA in English 0812 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 2 -- The Italian Government announced a far-reaching economic austerity package over the weekend directed at lowering the country's large deficit and safeguarding the value of the lira.

The economic measures will cover 17 months and are slated to enlarge the state's coffers by 8,500 billion lire (about six billion 150 million dollars) in the remaining five months of this year and eleven billion (nearly seven billion dollars) in 1983.

Treasury Minister Nino Andreatta announced that further measures are still on the drawing boards for a target of seven billion lire (about five billion dollars) in revenues.

For the rest of this year, the treasury minister will cut back state spending about 4,500 billion lire.

The measures came with presentation of the 1983 budget. The budget is usually announced at the end of September but concern for the growing deficit led the government to push up preparation of next year's budget.

The 1982 deficit has grown from earlier estimates of 50,000 billion lire to an expected 74,000 billion.

The latest measures should reduce it to 60,000 billion and the 1983 budget ceiling has been set at 63,000 billion lire.

The deficit will still be a high one. The treasury minister said it is "eleven percent of the gross national product".

The specific measures were issued in the form of decrees which must be approved by Parliament within sixty days; a three point hike in the value added tax (VAT) and higher taxes on oil products, beer and bananas.

The harshest of the measures is the ten percent hike in the price of gasoline; it has gone from 1,020 to 1,120 lire a liter (81 cents of a dollar), giving it the dubious distinction of being the most expensive gasoline in the world.

Spadolini on Economic Measures

LD011056 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] The government has launched its economic policy measures. Prime Minister Spadolini said that these measures are very harsh and very bitter but absolutely necessary. We are satisified, Spadolini went on to say, that the financial bill we have provided is an indispensable instrument of reference that will enable the country the understand the sacrifices that are demanded. The measures consists of approval of the financial bill and of a number of decrees, one of which increases the price of gasoline to 1,120 lire, that is, a 100-lire increase. Other decrees will supplement the rationalizing of insurance contributions. The employers' share of such contributions is increased by 0.9 percent.

With these measures, plus the effects of the fiscal remissions and a number of treasury measures, the government expects to mop up a few trillion lire, and so (attenuate) the public deficit, bringing it to some 60 trillion lire.

The government's economic measures have been judged severely by the United Trade Union Confederation. Various political representatives of the majority parties are reacting positively.

BERLINGUER EXPRESSES SOLIDARITY WITH 'ARAFAT

AU311516 Rome ANSA in English 1505 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 31 -- Italian Communist Party Leader Enrico Berlinguer spoke telephonically last night with the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Yasir 'Arafat.

A PCI noted today said that the conversation took place right after yesterday's Israeli bombardment of Beirut had come to a halt.

'Arafat said that the Israeli attack had taken an extremely high toll of civilian victims and that the suffering was great as Israel used fragmentation bombs for the first time.

The PLO leader then outlined his organization's most recent proposals for a settlement of the crisis.

For his part, Berlinguer expressed his party's solidarity and determination to work for a political solution to the ongoing conflict.

PSDI SCORES TREATMENT OF ANTI-TERRORIST SQUAD

AU301943 Rome ANSA in English 1925 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 30 -- Italy's Social Democratic Party (PSDI) has come out strongly in defense of the special anti-terrorist squad, "NOCS", which was responsible for the lightning raid on a terrorist hideout to rescue U.S. General James Lee Dozier early this year.

The PSDI today told a press conference here that there was a scheme afoot to persecute members of the crack squad that had brought off the stunning rescue.

In fact, five "NOCS" agents have been arrested on charges that they tortured during questioning the Red Brigades terrorists who had been holding Dozier prisoner in a Padua apartment.

At today's press conference, the PSDI levelled sharp criticism at Judge Giovanni Palombarini who readily believed the accusations made by Cesare di Lonardo and the other brigadists on trial for the kidnapping.

The behavior of Palombarini, who is also secretary of the Italian judiciary's leftwing faction, is a scandalous example of the"nefarious consequences" of the politicization of the country's magistrates, the PSDI stated.

The party submitted a dossier which claimed that the "NOCS" force had been decimated by the fact that its members rushed for transfers to other departments when they saw the treatment reserved for their colleagues at the hands of the judiciary.

Palombarini is also charged with releasing to the press the names of the agents involved in the raid that freed the kidnapped American general and NATO officer.

Meanwhile, House Speaker Nilde Jotti has asked Justice Minister Clelio Darida to clarify an episode which occurred a few days ago and involved Alessandro Reggiani and Costantino Belluscio, respectively president and vice-president of the Social Democrats in the lower chamber.

Judge Mario Fabiani blocked a visit by these two parliamentarians to "NOCS" agents being held in a Peschiera jail.

In protest of the ban, which violates the right of M.P.'s to personally check on the treatment of police agents, PSDI Secretary Pietro Longo and all of the Social Democratic parliamentarians not having government functions (around 25), will go to the military jail in Peschiera Monday at noon.

BERLINGUER VIEWS 'DEMOCRATIC ALTERNATIVE'

PM020825 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 26 Jul 82 pp 1, 2

["R.C." report: "PCI Calls for Specific Action Leading to a New Political Process"]

[Excerpts] In a speech to the Renzino section in the Foiano Della Chiana commune in Arezzo Province, [PCI Secretary General] Enrico Berlinguer, after brief references to the state of acute international tension and the serious threats to world peace, discussed the PCI's judgement and objectives in the present Italian political situation.

The facts show, Berlinguer said at that point, that many people now are again beginning to place their hopes in us Communists. The facts prove that by adhering to past and present political schemes and relationships people are beating the air or even scuttling the country.

That is why the democratic alternative to the present political and power system and the present government aims and methods which we Communists are proposing is necessary. How can we work to attain the democratic alternative? We have said that it is necessary to start a new political process, involving all the democratic, popular and leftwing forces inside or outside the parties which, like us, want to reform the state, save the economy and renew society through a united effort and work. And a new political process means that it is not possible to revive or repeat any past political experiments and solutions, including that of the majority of national solidarity which we Communists regard as a closed chapter.

Abstruse examinations of political formulas and government hypotheses predetermined in theory must be discarded. Faced with the country's crisis and a very acute social conflict like the present one, we Communists are posing a very simple and practical problem: It is necessary to steer the country out of the dire straits in which it now is and it is necessary to decide to abandon old paths and roads which have already been trodden. Parties and social forces are measured by their actions, behavior and conduct.

Let anybody inside or outside the parties who understands the demands we are making speak out and deal a blow for us.

Any practical step which really leads to a new political process -- whether it comes from the PSI or other democratic forces -- will be appreciated by us because it will mean that they are finally showing concern for the general fate and interests of the country and the state and not for protecting their own party and electoral interests.

If that course is adopted it will be possible to find the means of beginning to reform society and the institutions. And it will be possible to form governments different from the ones we have hitherto had, in other words governments which by their composition, structure and program show in practice that they are starting to unravel the adverse and harmful web between the government parties and the state and that an effort to reform the economy, the parties, the institutions is underway. But, on the other hand, anybody who persists in the sterile and harmful policy pursued in recent years will find that we are his unrelenting adversaries; and furthermore he will be unable to avoid falling into an increasingly obvious conflict on the domestic scene, as, moreover, is already happening.

ANOP CLOSURE SPARKS POLITICAL CONTROVERSY

NC311718 Paris AFP in English 1435 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] Lisbon, July 31 (AFP) -- The Portuguese cabinet's decision to close the country's publicly owned press agency, ANOP, has prompted a political battle between the government and President Antonio Ramalho Eanes. Declaring the matter of national interest for which he should have the last word, President Eanes ordered the agency reprieved.

Prime Minister Francisco Pinto Balsemao, who heads a centre-right coalition, has said he considers ANOP a leftist bastion and has taken action to create an alternate press cooperative, "PORPRESS," which should be operational in September or October. Following last Thursday's unanimous cabinet vote to shut down ANOP, the agency's board of directors quit. But the staff announced the agency would continue to function and that, if need be, it would occupy the premises.

ANOP was created after the July, 1975 'Carnation Revolution' which brought democracy to Portugal.

BALSEMAO NEWS CONFERENCE ON ANOP, OTHER ISSUES

LD310006 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao said at a news conference this morning that his government has entered a new stage in its activity, planned beforehand in September of last year. Speaking only hours after the Council of Ministers had approved a series of far-reaching measures, the prime minister justified these measures as the fulfillment of the promises made by the Democratic Alliance [AD] to the electorate and laid down in the government's program.

[Begin Balsemao recording] The AD has political credit until 1984, as a result of the mandate freely given in the October 1980 parliamentary elections. It is with the strength of this credit and in the full execution of democratic legitimacy which it holds that the AD, through the government, proposes a policy envisaging changes in the economic, social and cultural structures within a political system that can only be one of full democracy, democracy which we know to exist for we are willing to assume power only in such a system. It is for this reason that we have struggled to defend it and shall struggle without truce whenever necessary.

In these agitated times, in which chapters of Portugal's contemporary history are closing, and others beginning which are more promising and more stable, it is indispensable to manifest the belief in and the will to live in democracy and stability. Only such will and belief can give us the strength to expose the daily schemes and the covert or overt maneuvers of those who want power merely for power's sake; only they can ensure the legitimacy of those exercising power in fulfillment of the mandate they have received. [end recording]

That was the prime minister with his opening statement at the press conference held this morning at his official residence, also attended by Deputy Prime Minister Freitas do Amaral; Minister of State Ribeiro Teles; Minister of Finance Joao Salgueiro; and Secretary of State to the Prime Minister for Mass Media Affairs Jose Alfaia.

At this morning's press conference a reporter from ANOP put a question to the prime minister:

[Begin recording] [Reporter] Mr Prime Minister, as a former jornalist, how are your feelings at present, just a few hours after having decided to throw into unemployment dozens of Portuguese journalists of the news agency ANOP, a decision that according to information received by the news agency was based on false information given to you by the secretary of state for mass media affairs.

[Balsemao] I do not reply to you as a former journalist but in my capacity as prime minister. The first part of your question is based on a (?false premise).

Second, the decision concerning the winding-up of the news agency ANOP was unanimously made by the Council of Ministers which is fully responsible for them.

Third, we take the view that a news agency should enjoy sufficient independence from the political, editiorial and financial standpoints.

Fourth, the ANOP news agency was set up in 1975 to serve as an instrument of the government, as can be read in the ordinance bringing it into existence, signed by the then Minister of Social Communication Commander (Correia Jesuino).

Fifth, in its management of the public purse, the government must take into account the whole country's needs and must manage it in the way it believes best. With regard to the news agency ANOP we decided not to continue granting it the subsidies it had been receiving to date, for which reason we assumed that the state-owned news agency could hardly remain viable. It will now be up to the ANOP management council to take whatever decisions it sees fit, and the government will support those decisions taking into account the rights of the ANOP workers and the government's legal obligations, as stated in the communique elaborating on the main measures decided yesterday by the Council of Ministers.

Since Dr Jose Alfaia [secretary of state for mass media affairs] is present at this news conference, and in view of the grave accusation that has been made that a member of the government gave false information, I invite Dr Jose Alfaia to add whatever he sees fit. I also ask him to be brief because this news conference is not intended to deal exclusively with the ANOP case.

[Alfaia] The analysis upon which the Council of Ministers has taken its decision was based on data officially provided by the ANOP management council. These data are available and have also been assessed by the ANOP financial council. We regarded them as reliable. That is all I have to say. [end recording]

Another reporter raised the question of the meeting held in Porto de Mos by a number of military who are said to have discussed aspects of the political situation. Pinto Balsemao was asked if he saw signs of a possible coup d'etat in such a meeting. The prime minister calmly replied that he does not believe in such a possibility.

[Begin Balsemao recording] I think that one should not ascribe to the Porto de Mos meeting more importance than it deserves. What importance it had stems from the fact that it was yet another destabilization attempt carried out by members of the Council of the Revolution. However this importance is only relative insofar as the scarce few dozen military present are not representative of the armed forces. Therefore I do not believe in the possibility of any attempted coup d' tat. On the contrary I do not believe -- and we have had very clear evidence of this - that the armed forces are fully aware of and accept the whole meaning and implications of the revision of the constitution as marking the end of a period of transition and opening up a new chapter in Portuguese life in which the military instututions will bear added responsibilities. [end recording]

Pinto Balsemao was asked if he believed that the president of the republic would dissolve parliament after the promulgation of the new constitution, and should he do so would his act be constitutional.

[Begin Balsemao recording] I am here as prime minister, not as a political (?analyst). As prime minister, I take the view that the government has its own sphere of jurisdiction and it is within this context that I should pass comment.

If his excellency the president of the republic sees fit to dissolve the Assembly of the Republic, this is a decision that falls within his constitutional sphere of jurisdiction. He would also bear the responsibilities inherent to such a decision. [end recording]

Those were excerpts from the news conference held this morning by Prime Minister Dr Pinto Balsemao.

It was 0200 when a loud round of applause greeted the conclusion of the revision of the constitution in plenary meeting of the Assembly of the Republic. On 12 August the Assembly will hold a special session to take the final, general vote on the decree-law formalizing the revision.

CALVO-SOTELO EXPLAINS REASONS FOR RESHUFFLE

LD302300 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1630 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Text] Good evening from the Moncloa Palace, where the prime minister, Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, has just entered the press room to begin the press conference in which he will explain the reasons for the government reshuffle which, briefly, involves the appointment of Luis Gosoulluela as minister of territorial administration and the departure of the first deputy prime minister, Rodolfo Martin Villa, Jaime Lamo de Espinosa and Rafael Arias Salgado. The prime minister wished the reporters good evening and we now give him the floor.

[Calvo-Sotelo -- live] In the autumn of last year I myself defended the view that it was advisable to bring together under one person the presidency of the party and the job of prime minister. It has been asked what were my reasons for this apparent change of criteria. The reason is very simple and does not entail, in my view, any real change of criteria. The electoral setback suffered by the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] in the Andalusian election highlighted the need for an important reform in the party. Moreover, we are now closer to the [words indistinct] and after the summer we will enter a real preelectoral period. Therefore, it appeared to me necessary to bring into the UCD a new team and a new president. And this is what I did when I proposed to the Executive Committee and the UCD Political Council my replacement by Landelino Lavilla.

Before general elections the leading role should pass, as the press has rightly said, from the government to the party. And my obligation is to make way for this in the person of the new president of the UCD. I took the party from one pair of hands and placed it in others best capable of successfully facing the next elections. I think that the first steps of the new president and his team prove me right. This primacy of the party in the period before general elections is also reflected in the bringing into the party of three important ministers. I carried out this operation with the close collaboration and mutual agreement of Landelino Lavilla. I shall deal with matters affecting both the government and the party in the same way in future. I wish to stress that all that has taken place should not be seen as two distinct operations, one of the government and the other of the party. It should rather be seen as a single operation prepared and carried out jointly and together. [words indistinct] the question is not, moreover, one of a balance of forces between party and government, but of the sum total of forces, the sum total of objectives. What is being transferred is now power, in the strict sense. From now on the responsibility for the preelectoral period is being shared.

In the second place I have decided not to make more changes in the government than those which are the direct consequence of the changes in the party. I think I have an effective government team and it did not appear opportune in the present circumstances to make further changes. Moreover, I am convinced that ministerial changes should be kept to a minimum since they always create a serious initial disturbance as far as the administration is concerned and in the conduct of public affairs.

I wish to add that some comments and some speculation about the two decisions I have just told you about have come about, in my view, because we do not have experience of the conclusion of a mandate. It is the first time that we have approached the legal conclusion of the mandate of the representatives of the people, because the first legislature was interrupted barely half way through its course. I believe that all of us, politicians first of all but also you who gather what public opinion says and form public opinion, I think that we should all accustom ourselves to the typical uncertainties associated with the end of a legislature.

I will end by saying that the party leadership does not affect, cannot affect, the effectiveness of the government. The government is continuing to govern and is continuing to deal resolutely with the problems of Spain. It is continuing to carry out the UCD program and the policies set out in my investiture speech. Much has been done since then and it has been collected in a book called "500 Days of Government" which is (?freely available). There also remains much to do and we are prepared to do it resolutely over the coming months.

U.S. EMBASSY DENIES CUBAN MINISTER SOUGHT ASYLUM

REGISTRATION, NAME OF NEW PARTY REPORTED

LD291434 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 29 Jul 82

[Excerpts] This morning the new political party formed by former Prime Minister Adolfo Suarez after his official departure from the Democratic Center Union [UCD] was entered in the official register of political parties and associations at the Ministry of the Interior. The name of the new party is Democratic and Social Center.

After this latest move by the man who founded the party now in power, we now have to wait for possible defections by UCD members to the newly-formed Democratic and Social Center. Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun, a deputy for Vizcaya Province and former president of UCD, applied to leave the centrist party in a letter to UCD President Landelino Lavilla this morning. The letter is similar in content to that which Adolfo Suarez sent to the president of UCD yesterday. Rodriguez Sahagun is one of Adolfo Suarez's closest collaborators in this project of creating a party separate from UCD. As Agustin Rodriguez Sahagun did today, Adolfo Suarez put his seat in parliament at the disposition of Landelino Lavilla and he will only continue to occupy it within the centrist parliamentary group if explicitly asked to do so.

Party Manifesto

LD311524 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] A few moments ago we spoke about the presentation luncheon for the new Democratic and Social Center Party led by former prime minister, Adolfo Suarez. We now go over to Pedro Fernandez Cespedes for more details:

The manifesto of the Democratic and Social Center, Adolfo Suarez's new party, has now been made public. The manifesto begins with a historical analysis of the process of transition in Spain. The second part describes the deterioration which has occurred in Spanish political life, particularly in the political center.

It says that it is necessary to calmly and courageously make the public aware of the fact that there are people in Spain who are trying to use economic structures, and even institutional powers, to decisively influence civil power to the point of manipulating the free exercise of national sovereignty, whose only legitimate holder is the people. These are quotations from the text of the manifesto.

The third part of the manifesto describes the basic outline of the new party. In defining the party's ideology, it says that its system of values is based on community personalism. It says that there are priorities in the economic sphere. They see as urgent and pressing the fair distribution of the cost of the economic crisis which the West is now going through.

On the international level, the manifesto refers to the three basic dimensions of Spanish policy: Europe, Latin America and the Arab countries. An increase is foreseen in relations with Latin America, whose political, economic and cultural importance in today's world is becoming greater.

The manifesto closes with an analysis of what the Democratic and Social Center sees as political priorities and with a definition of the party's basic stance with regard to the forthcoming elections. According to the Democratic and Social Center Party and the men who now lead it, there is one [as heard] basic priority in Spain now: defending national sovereignty, which only resides in the Spanish people, and providing constant support for the supremacy of civil power, which is determined by the will of the Spaniards.

The manifesto's closing phrase reads as follows: In any event, its only unrenounceable postulate will be defending the democratic system which the Spanish people have achieved, and consolidating the monarchy, which today is felicitously embodied in the person of King Don Juan Carlos.

DEFENSE MINISTER ON REASONS FOR AIRCRAFT CHOICE

PM301557 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 24 Jul 82 pp 1, 11

[Excerpts] The Council of Ministers yesterday approved, at the proposal of Defense Minister Alberto Oliart, the purchase of 84 F-18A fighter-bombers manufactured by the U.S. McDonnell Douglas Company, as envisaged by the Future Combat and Attack Aircraft program. The decision, the most ambitious for the purchase of military equipment ever taken by a Spanish government, will involve the expenditure of over 300 billion pesetas at the 1981 exchange rate, and minimum economic compensation from the U.S. firm will total $1.8 billion at this year's rate (almost 200 billion pesetas).

"On the basis of the operational and technical characteristics of the aircraft chosen and the exchange terms secured, the purchase is a success," Minister Oliart told the Council of Ministers yesterday. First, the minister outlined the evolution of the Future Combat and Attack Aircraft program since its inception in February 1978. In this connection, he pointed out that in the first and second phases the Mirage 2000 and Tornado were rejected because they did not satisfy the multipurpose conditions stipulated by the Future Combat and Attack Aircraft program and that their manufacturing companies "did not even submit any tenders."

Alberto Oliart said that on the basis of the armed forces budget law, a reduction had to be made in the number of aircraft envisaged by the Future Combat and Attack Aircraft program, and it was then that the F-18L -- even more expensive than the F-18A -- was rejected, adding that the aircraft in question is still in the planning stage and that several countries have refused to purchase it. Two possibilities then presented themselves: If the F-16C were accepted, 96 of them would be bought; if the option was for the F-18A only 84 would be bought, on account of the greater unit cost. The minister pointed out that the final choice of the latter aircraft was made essentially on the basis of its better operational and technical performance compared to the F-16C.

He said in this connection that the air force regarded the F-18A as more suited to its primary role in air-to-surface attack and only secondarily as an interceptor. This aircraft was regarded as potentially superior to the F-16 with regard to interception missions. Furthermore, the minister said, air force experts also stressed the F-18A's greater capacity to absorb new technology and weaponry.

Another motive argued by the experts was safety and the scale of losses -- the accident rate, which was favorable in the case of the aircraft chosen. The minister did not conceal the fact that the final decision was influenced by the element of cost effectiveness. Referring to the economic compensations, he said that "they were important, but not decisive" and described them as "adequate and acceptable in principle."

He compared the minimum total compensation offered by the two U.S. companies in their tenders, which in the case of General Dynamics, manufacturer of the F-16C, was $1.44 billion at 1981 rates and in the case of McDonnell Douglas $1.8 billion -- a figure considered higher than the one secured by Canada for its purchase. With regard to the economic compensation for the purchase agreement, the minister said that basically it would be directed into investments and joint manufacture. In this connection he said that Spanish aeronautical companies, particularly CASA (Aeronautics Constructions Company Limited), will be assisted by the Future Combat and Attack Aircraft deal, "which is quite the opposite of what has been claimed." In this connection he said that companies such as CASA which are now carrying out maintenance of the Phantoms and F-5's will, when these aircraft are decommissioned, take care of maintenance of Spain's F-18A's and even the American ones based in the Mediterranean.

With reference to possible U.S. pressures on the Spanish Government to purchase the F-18A, Alberto Oliart said: "No pressures were exerted in that direction; if there were any pressures, it could be said that they were aimed more at the F-16C than at the F-18A." The minister stated his belief that the Spanish Government was not mistaken in purchasing the F-18A. "It was a very mature decision, following years of studies on the aircraft on offer. Moreover, there was a need to approve the purchase, and if the government had been slow in deciding, the prices would not have been respected. The decision must also be seen as reflecting the serious situation into which our air defense was beginning to fall. The government believes that this purchase is a success on account of the aircraft's operational and technical characteristics and the counter terms offered. We have decided to purchase one of the best aircraft that exist."

GONZALEZ CITED ON PSOE GENERAL ELECTION POLICY

PM301245 Madrid YA in Spanish 26 Jul 82 p 6

[Anabel Diaz report on Spanish Socialist Workers Party Federal Committee 24-25 July meeting in Madrid: "Stong Opposition to Inclusion of Ordonez Supporter in Spanish Socialist Workers Party Lists"]

[Excerpts] The growing deterioration in the socioeconomic and institutional situation and the opposition to any attempt to change the government other than via elections and the formation of a "social majority" that made possible the advance toward progress were the principal conclusions reached at the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Federal Committee's meeting in Madrid this weekend. The inclusion in the Socialists' electoral lists of people outside the PSOE, the refusal to form a pact with the government for the duration of the legislative term and unease over the pastoral letter published by the Basque bishops Saturday evening were further prominent aspects discussed by the PSOE's top body between congresses.

Though Felipe Gonzalez said, in answer to a question at a press conference about the inclusion of Francisco Fernandez Ordonez supporters in Socialist electoral lists, that the issue "is a working hypothesis that has not been examined," this newspaper was able to discover that a lengthy debate was held on the subject.

According to several Federal Committee members, the atmosphere is one of "absolute reserve" and very few are willing to vote in favor of the presence of PAD [expansion unknown] members among Socialist Party members.

In this connection, in the event of a Socialist victory the least "radical" members would give their approval to Ordonez' joining a hypothetical Socialist government, but not to his inclusion in electoral lists. All this on the understanding that it is not difficult to replace a minister if his work proves unsatisfactory, while a deputy can seriously disrupt the necessary unity of a parliamentary group.

The document released after the Federal Committee meeting asserts "the Socialists' profound anxiety at the growing deterioration in the socioeconomic and institutional situation, whose immediate cause is the prolonged situation of crisis within the ruling party." Second, in a clear reference to the rumored "caretaker government" to be composed of civilians and military men, the Socialists "will oppose any attempt to replace the present government other than by elections or to violate the constitutional framework or democratic logic."

The PSOE confirmed its position with regard to the desire for the legislative term to continue, "as long as the necessary conditions of governability are ensured for the proper functioning of the institutions and the solution of the country's problems." Therefore, unless these conditions are satisfied, it said, elections must be held. Later, in his conversation with reporters, the PSOE secretary general said that to extend the legislative term until May, as some have suggested, would be a veritable "absurdity," the fall being the date which the Socialist leader regards as the deadline.

The communique also states that the PSOE, "in the belief that the majority of Spaniards want a change that will guarantee government and institutional stability and efficiency and that will enable Spain to advance toward progress, freedom and justice, will devote all its efforts to shaping this social majority." In this task the PSOE will maintain an "open mind" with regard to cooperation with everyone wanting to achieve these objectives.

Felipe Gonzalez gave assurances that his party will contest the elections with the intention of achieving a majority. As for possible post-election pacts and within the terms of the aim of the "social majority," he was asked about the groups with which he could form alliances, and specifically about the possible party to be formed by Adolfo Suarez. The Socialist leader expressed himself neither for nor against it.

The secretary general was asked to describe the political spectrum that could exist when the coming general elections take place. He said: "As far as the left is concerned, it is clear, but as for the right, it would be guesswork to talk about it." He added that he did not know whether they would run alone or in a coalition with the PDP [Progressive Democratic Party] and PDL Democratic Liberal Party].

The approval of the new overall budget by parliament is a stumbling block which Felipe Gonzalez considers insuperable for the present government. In this connection he was asked whether the PSOE could present a motion of censorship if it proves impossible to pass the new budget. Gonzalez said that the PSOE "could if it wanted to, but does not want to."

LD301036 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Text] Vice Adm Bengt Schuback, chief of staff of the Swedish Armed Forces, has said in an interview published in SVENSKA DAGBLADET today that a foreign state is preparing military actions against Sweden. Behind Schuback's statement are the recent submarinic incidents in the narrow part of the Gulf of Bothnia, the Aland Sea and the Stockholm archipelago. SVENSKA DAGBLADET notes that the theory of military preparations must be a central topic for the Swedish Armed Forces Staff after the submarine incidents have been appraised.

Lt Gen G.K. Kristensen, chief of staff of the Danish Armed Forces, has given a statement to RITZAUS BUREAU concerning the remarks of his Swedish counterpart. According to the Danish general it is not surprising that the Soviet Union has plans of action against Sweden. The many violations of Swedish territorial waters cannot be coincidences, General Kristensen says. He did not, however, want to speak of any immediate threat against Sweden.

FINNISH FOREIGN MINISTER VISITS, MEETS PYM

PM301059 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 27 Jul 82 p 1

[Jarko Sauli dispatch]

[Excerpt] London -- Finnish Foreign Minister Par Stenback considers reports that negotiations toward an agreement for a total nuclear test ban have run into difficulties worrying. Stenback raised the question of the total ban in London Monday [26 July] when he had talks with British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym.

Stenback stressed that Finland considers it of central importance for the whole system of nuclear arms ban agreements that the negotiations for a total ban on nuclear tests continue. Disarmament questions and the situation in the Middle East dominated the discussions during Stenback's short working visit. Of the situation in Lebanon Stenback said that Finland considers that the United Nations still offers the most realistic framework for a way to reintroduce peace to Lebanon.

Stenback directed much attention to a phenomenon which has recently been worrying not only Finland but also the other Nordic countries. In Stenback's view the United Nations has been increasingly pushed to one side in its central task of serving peace and security. The United Nations should continue to be a central tool for international peace and security and the organization should be consistently used for this purpose, Stenback said.

In the case of Lebanon Stenback pointed out that Israel's disregard for Lebanon's sovereignty and inviolability and the sufferings the civilian population has had to bear as a result of the Israeli attack have caused great concern in Finland and throughout the world. He said that Israel's actions show among other things that the country does not care about the UN Security Council resolutions on Lebanon.

After his talks with Pym, Stenback said that he had gained the impression that we can hardly expect any particularly swift positive solutions in relations between the superpowers and to disarmament problems.

ARAB GROUP CLAIMS SAUDI NEWSPAPER BOMBING

NC311703 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] In a message to the UN secretary general and all state leaders, President Kiprianou denounces the new Turkish illegal act of providing permanent deed of Greek Cypriot properties to the Anatolia settlers. In his message President Kiprianou says: This act, which is the continuation of recent decisions, such as the establishment of the central bank and the abolition of the Cyprus pound in the occupied territory, is provocative, partitionist and illegal and will never be recognized by the Cyprus Government. In conclusion, the president of the republic calls on the international organization and all state governments to intervene to counter these Turkish acts. PAPER SEES DENKTAS 'SOFTENING' ON UN GROUP

NC300900 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 30 Jul 82 p 1

[Text] Turkish Cypriot leader Mr Denktas yesterday said he was satisfied the U.N. Human Rights Commission's team of the working group on enforced and involuntary disappearances did not intend to overshadow the existing investigatory committee for the missing persons and this he stated was a "reasonable and useful" approach.

The statement made after a meeting of the Turkish Cypriot leader with the two-member team yesterday is seen as a softened statement to the one made on the day before in which he complained that warnings from the Turks of the working group not to send a mission to Cyprus were ignored.

The team comprising Lord Colville of Britain and Prof. Tosevsky of Yugoslavia arrived on Wednesday and had seen Foreign Minister Mr Rolandhis and members of the relatives of missing persons on the Greek Cypriot side on the first day and yesterday crossed to the north. They saw the Turkish Cypriot Spokesman for Foreign Affairs Mr Atakol and the Turkish Cypriot committee for the missing. Later they were the guests at a dinner by Mr Denktas at a hotel near Famagusta.

According to Turkish Cypriot Bayrak Radio Mr Atakol said later that the members of the team were told that the Turkish Cypriots too had people missing since the 1963 intercommunal war.

Mr Atakol repeated Turkish allegations that the Greek Cypriot side does not want a settlement keeps the matter open for propaganda.

The members of the team were taken to the Famagusta villages of Maratha, Santalaris and Aloa where the Turks claim they found the mass graves of Turkish Cypriots.

Mr Denktas said after his meeting with the team that he was satisfied that the working group does not intend to overshadow the existing investigatory committee or start investigations of its own and this he said was a "reasonable and useful approach".

The team will be seeing President Kiprianou today and will attend a luncheon to be given at the Hilton by the Acting Director of the Foreign Ministry Mr V. Markidhis. The team will thus wind up its contacts with the two sides and will leave tomorrow for Geneva where it will report to the working group.

As stated in the official announcement about its mission the aim of the visit was to explore the possibility of further discussions with the interested parties.

THREE PAPANDREOU RESIGNATION ATTEMPTS REPORTED

NC310756 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 31 Jul 82 pp 1, 8

[Text] Athens, 30 (Special Service) -- To date, Greek Prime Minister Papandreou has submitted his and his government's resignation to President of the Republic Karamanlis three times, giving an equivalent number of reasons for the resignations.

This is alleged by the new Sunday Athens newspaper the SUNDAY GREEK FUTURE which claims that the reasons which led to the submission of the resignations by the Papandreou government were the following:

1. The abrogation of an old promise -- made even before PASOK took over the government -- by the Soviet Union to the official opposition party of that time on the signing of an agreement for long-term privileged loans to our country at extremely favorable terms from the metropolis of communism.

2. The second reason for the submission of a resignation by Papandreou was the postponement of the visit by Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, which was decided upon when Konstandinos Karamanlis refused to receive him at the airport on his arrival in Greece.

3. The third reason for submitting the government's resignation was the divergence of views between Papandreou and Kiprianou over the methods for conducting the struggle toward a solution of the Cyprus tragedy. At the climax of the dispute, faced with the danger of "blowing up" the cause of Cyprus with his pointless and untimely moves, the prime minister once again submitted his resignation to the president of the republic.

Evren, Numayri Speeches

TA012100 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 1 Aug 82

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren has said that the Islamic world, today, more than ever, needs solidarity and that the strengthening of cooperation between Turkey and Sudan will make significant contributions to this solidarity.

Speaking at a dinner he gave in honor of the Sudanese president, Ja'far Numayri, who is on an official visit to Turkey, Evren said that there are traditional ties of friendship and brotherhood between the two countries. Recalling that Turkey and Sudan, for a while, shared a joint destiny and history, Evren said: Our relations, which are based on such foundations and have never been overshadowed by any problems, will continue to develop and strengthen in all fields. While Sudan is situated in a place connecting the Arab and African worlds, Turkey is a bridge connecting Europe and Asia. This multifaceted role, which our countries have undertaken due to their geographical positions, is among the many similarities between the two countries.

Pointing out that Numayri's visit is taking place at a time when stability in the Middle East is faced with serious dangers, Evren continued: Recent developments in our region have created new problems and tensions. While the Arab-Israeli conflict continues to threaten peace and stability in the Middle East, the occupation of a large part of Lebanon by Israel has rendered perilous the situation in our region. Another problem which Turkey is following with sorrow and concern is the clashes -- which have reached dangerous dimensions -- between Iran and Iraq, neighbors with whom Turkey has friendly relations.

In the last part of his speech, Evren said that the Islamic world needs solidarity now more than ever. Evren said: The Islamic consciousness to realize this solidarity with concrete steps in the political, economic and cultural fields creates hopes for the future.

The strengthening of relations and cooperation between Turkey and Sudan, which are factors of stability in their region, will not only serve their national interests but will also serve stability and security in their region. Therefore, the agreements to be signed in the fields of economic and cultural cooperation between the two countries during this visit will give a concrete aspect to our relations. I would like to confirm my belief that our visit and the talks you will hold here will contribute to peace, tranquillity and stability in our region and that they will yield results which will strengthen the solidarity and cooperation between the two countries.

Also speaking at dinner, Sudanese President Numayri expressed the belief that justice and peace will prevail in the world. Numayri added that the cooperation between Turkey and Sudan will especially contribute to the solution of the problems in the Middle East. Numayri said: The suffering, pain and exploitation in the world will be eliminated, the banner of freedom of the Palestinian people, who have been chased out of their land, will definitely be hoisted in their independent state. The rifles of suffering directed against Lebanon will not continue [to shoot]. Wounded Afghanistan will become the bastion of Islam in that region. The bloody clashes between Iran and Iraq should be replaced by negotiations and dialogues, by security and stability.

Numayri expressed his appreciation of Turkey's efforts toward development and its great role in the problems of peace and freedom in the world through these efforts. Noting that his visit to Turkey will contribute to strengthening the relations between the two countries, Numayri expressed the hope that the friendship between the two peoples will be further strengthened.

They will also try to eliminate the mistakes about the two countries in the history and geography text books in the primary and secondary schools.

In a speech at the signing ceremony, Foreign Minister Turkmen pointed out that President Ja'far Numayri's visit to Turkey showed Sudan's will and determination to develop cooperation and relations between the two countries. Turkmen added that the agreements signed between the two countries would further develop bilateral relations.

The Sudanese foreign minister noted that there were strong historical ties between the two countries. He expressed the belief that these relations would further develop.

An economic and technical cooperation agreement between Turkey and Sudan was signed by Trade Minister Kemal Canturk and Sudanese State Minister Salim Ahmad Ahmad. Under the agreement, Turkey will help Sudan with the acquisition of basic foods and industrial goods and with the implementation of certain projects.

Speaking at the signing ceremony, Trade Minister Canturk stressed that the agreement would be useful in developing bilateral economic cooperation. The Sudanese state minister, Ahmad, noted that bilateral cooperation would develop further with this agreement.

An agreement envisaging cooperation between the Turkish and Sudanese news agencies was signed by ANATOLIA Director General Cevdet Tanyeli and by the Sudanese Ambassador to Ankara, (al-Hatim al-Sunusi). The agreement aims at developing and expanding the flow of news and information between ANATOLIA and the SUDANESE NEWS AGENCY.

Meanwhile, Sudanese President Ja'far Numayri this morning toured the armored units school and the training division command. The visiting president then observed firing exercises and a troop exercise. He will go to Istanbul in the afternoon and he will leave Turkey tomorrow.

CONSTITUTIONAL COMMITTEE ISSUES MEMORANDUM

TA311546 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] Ankara, 31 Jul (AA) -- The Consultative Assembly's constitutional committee issued an "opinions memorandum" Saturday (July 31) explaining the reasons for the constitutional provisions. The report submitted to the speaker of the Assembly states that the committee sought "to fill the gaps in the 1961 Constitution in the section concerning personal rights and liberties, to implement the parliamentary regime as it should be implemented, to strengthen the executive and to have supervision of the judiciary within legal bounds."

With the exclusion of Committee Chairman Orhan Aldikacti and Rafet Ibrahimoglu, all the other members of the committee expressed reservations on part or whole of the draft they have drawn up, the report said. The 148-page report includes the draft and the opinions for and against voiced by the committee members.

The opinions memorandum states that the basic rights and liberties section of the draft constitution is based on the UN Human Rights Declaration and the European Convention of 1950 on the protection of human rights and basic liberties.

The 33rd article of the draft concerning activities of associations was drawn up "in order to prevent associations from activities that degenerate the political life," the memorandum says.

The labour provisions were aimed at "ending the check-off system in the collection of labour union membership fees from members since only personal payment by the member can prevent an inflation of labour unions and bring labour democracy with unions." [as received]

Referring to the abolishment of the Senate of the Republic (upper house), the memorandum stresses that "during 20 years of practice, the Senate did not play an important role in the resolution of political differences and in the formation and dissolution of governments."

MOTIVES BEHIND PAPANDREOU'S MORATORIUM PROBED

NC020842 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 29 Jul 82 p 2

[Viewpoint column by Sami Kohen: "A Period of Tranquillity"]

[Excerpts] For some reason or other, the Greeks keep referring to the agreement signed in Athens as a "moratorium," while we refrain from using the term because it has another connotation and could be used in another sense as well.

No matter what meaning is attached to the word, what is important undoubtedly, is the realization of such an agreement after weeks of diplomatic efforts and negotiations.

The essence of the agreement envisages that both countries should refrain from mutual threats, provocations and statements that are likely to create tension and that they should create conditions conducive to resumption of a constructive dialogue.

In fact, statements issued both in Athens and Ankara indicate that a dialogue at the foreign ministers level will begin at the beginning of October. The two foreign ministers, who will meet in Ottawa, will determine the method they will use to settle the disputes between the two countries. The ministers themselves will tackle the general outlines of these issues. Thus the document signed in Athens will have secured the detente needed for the resumption of this dialogue. This could also be described as "a period of tranquillity" between the two countries.

We have used the term "resumption" for the dialogue, because such a dialogue already had been started and, what is more, was positively developing until Andreas Papandreou won the election and occupied the chair of the prime minister. The PASOK leader had violently opposed the dialogue started during his predecessor Rallis' term in office, arguing that views on the Turkish-Greek disputes could not be discussed and maintaining that "these issues cannot be negotiated." That is why the dialogue was discontinued as soon as Papandreou assumed power and the new Greek administration and a section of the Greek press embarked on a strenuous campaign against Turkey.

It is gratifying that now Papandreou wants a period of "detente" or "tranquillity" which he calls a "moratorium" and that he agrees to the resumption of the dialogue in the near future. This is a happy development, provided that he is sincere in his desire.

In displaying sincerity, Papandreou should rest assured that Turkey will respond in the same spirit. For Turkey has always defended the view that all the problems between the two countries should be resolved through negotiations. Even in those days when the Greek prime minister did not favor negotiations, Turkey patiently waited for the Greek prime minister to alter his attitude. The document signed in Athens has proved that common sense has at last prevailed. Several reasons are attributed to Papandreou's acceptance of the detente and dialogue which he had opposed until recently. One of these reasons is that the Greek leader has realized that the policy of tension and the unnecessary exertions against Turkey will not yield any result and that such acts could even boomerang.

Another reason is the situation he is encountering at home. The PASOK leader is distressed by the fact he has been unable to accomplish what was expected of him both in the political and economic arenas. Meanwhile, the opposition has been increasing and even hardening its criticisms of Papandreou's attitude toward Turkey. Papandreou's inconsistent behavior in the EEC and NATO has also backfired. His hope that he would be able to use Turkey's main allies against it have been dashed. Athens has preferred to use a milder and more intelligent policy during these days when it will begin bargaining with the United States over the bases.

Now the question to be asked is "What is the purpose behind this change in Papandreou's attitude?" Does he really wish to resolve the outstanding issues with Turkey and live in peace and friendship, or is he after gaining time for realizing his own views and aspirations through the "moratorium" or the "dialogue"?

We will not have to wait for long to understand his motives.

'Full Agreement'

LD301254 Hamburg DPA in German 1202 GMT 30 Jul 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 30 Jul (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, who arrived back in Hamburg on Friday from a 10-day North American trip, was able to reach full agreement with Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau on all important problems. During his 4-hour stay in Ottawa on Thursday night Trudeau, according to Schmidt, welcomed the resolute stand of the Europeans in defending their interests within the framework of the alliance community.

Schmidt called the meeting with the friendly Canadian prime minister a "very satisfying conclusion" to his trip, whose highpoint was the almost 5 days of talks with the U.S. secretary of state, George Shultz. Nevertheless the chancellor attached a significance which should not be underestimated to the ramifications of the many meetings with leading politicians and academics in Houston and in a holiday club in San Francisco.

TREATY ON ELECTRICITY EXCHANGE WITH USSR FIXED

[Summary] "The preliminary agreement on the exchange of Austrian electric current in the summer for Soviet winter current was concluded by Power Grid Director General Dr Fremuth with Nikolay Lopatin, Soviet deputy minister of power and electrification, during his visit to Moscow. The final treaty will most likely be signed in October 1982 in Moscow.

"The treaty envisages that, effective in 1985, Austria will supply some 600 million kWh to the Soviet Union daily in the period between 1 May and 31 August every year in the time between 0500 and 2100 hours and, in turn, will receive from the Soviet Union some 500 million kWh daily in the period from 1 January til 30 April as well as from 15 October to 15 December in the time from 2100 to 0500 hours, including Sundays and (Soviet) holidays. Both sides will examine whether the exchange could be started as early as in 1984.

"The transfer will be effected via the CSSR and not -- as originally discussed -- via Hungary." Talks about the details of the power transit will open soon. "The transit fees will be paid in electric currency to the CSSR and an agreement on the quantities involved still has to be reached."

Should additional power deliveries be agreed upon Hungary would be considered as an additional transit country. "In addition, the Soviet side will constantly inform Austria of requests of other European countries for power deliveries and will give preference to Austria as a transit country if such deals should be contracted, something which agrees with Power Grid chief Fremuth's ideas of developing Austria as a distribution center for power transit between East and West."

PEACE MARCHERS ATTEND EVENTS IN LINZ 1 AUG

AU031118 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 3 Aug 82 p 6

[Summary] "For disarmament in East and West"; "No stationing of cruise and Pershing II missiles"; these are the slogans of the marchers who were also joined by some residents of Upper Austria in Linz on Sunday. Buddhist monks from Hiroshima who beat little drums marched in front of the procession which was greeted in Linz, main square by Socialist Party Landtag Deputy Praschl. A message from Communist Party City Councillor Kain in which the fact was mentioned that Linz figures in the plans of the U.S. Army as a nuclear bomb target was read to the marchers. "As the peace friends proceeded along Landstrasse to the Auf der Gugl Sports Hall their number swelled to some 500 people. Addresses were exchanged and people sang "We Shall Overcome."

"Today, Tuesday, some 60 peace cyclists who left London on 17 July will arrive at the main square at 1700 hours. The English cyclists will tour the city at about 1730 and the public is invited to join. The tour will end near the railway bridge, where a peace festival will be held."

DER SPIEGEL REPORT ON CRUISE MISSILES DENIED

LD021552 Hamburg DPA in German 1404 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 2 Aug (DPA) -- The Federal Government denied reports (in DER SPIEGEL) on Monday according to which the European NATO partners were considering the production of their own cruise missiles with conventional warheads. Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl told the press there were no plans for stationing medium-range missiles other than those mentioned in the NATO dual decision of 1979. DER SPIEGEL reported that the NATO armament chiefs had commissioned technical and military studies for the construction of European missiles with conventional warheads.

CDU DEFENSE EXPERT: USSR BASING SU-24's IN GDR

LD031432 Hamburg DPA in German 1154 GMT 3 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn, 3 Aug (DPA) -- According to CDU defense expert Willy Wimmer, the Soviet Union has begun stationing its most modern fighter planes in the GDR. In connection with questions on this subject put to the Federal Government, Wimmer stated in Bonn on Tuesday that, according to information so far available, it is said to involve an initial regiment equipped with 30 SU-24 planes (NATO code 'Fencer'), a powerful supersonic fighter-bomber. Planes of this type have hitherto been stationed in the Soviet Union.

Wimmer said that this plane's 2,000 km range secures for the Soviets, for the first time in NATO air defense history, an operational radius extending beyond Ireland and Morocco. The 'Fencer' helps considerably endanger NATO's air defense which is under pressure anyway, especially as, according to Bonn's plans, the replacement to succeed the 'Nike' air defense missile, the 'Patriot', will not be procured by 1986. The deputy said that, according to the Federal Defense Ministry's plans, the 'Patriot' missile cannot be expected to be procured until the end of the eighties, if at all.

GENSCHER ON INTEREST IN BREZHNEV-REAGAN MEETING

LD031258 Hamburg DPA in German 1037 GMT 3 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn, 3 Aug (DPA) -- Despite the reservations [zurueckhaltung] by American President Ronald Reagan, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today underlined Bonn's strong interest in a meeting between Reagan and the Soviet state and party chief, Leonid Brezhnev. The Federal Government hopes that Moscow will still decide to give a definite promise of a meeting of this kind this year, Genscher said in a Suedfunk Stuttgart interview.

Genscher voiced the opinion that Reagan's statement that this meeting will probably not take place until next year does not mean that the Americans do not desire this meeting. Rather, Reagan's statement comes as a reaction to Moscow's rejection of his proposal for a talk with Brezhnev in New York in June.

With reference to the present difficulties in the relationship between Europe and the United States, Genscher reinforced his demand that European-American consultations be increased. Then settlements can be found, in areas where there are differing opinions, which safeguard the interests of all, but which do not harm the European-American relationship. The Western alliance has to be felt as an alliance among equal partners.

AGREEMENT ON MOZAMBIQUE ECONOMIC AID CONCLUDED

DW031325 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 3 Aug 82 p 4

[Robert von Lucius article]

[Excerpts] Frankfurt, 2 Aug -- The People's Republic of Mozambique after years of hesitation has accepted the Berlin Clause. Angola and Mozambique had been the only African states which rejected that clause and, hence, failed to join the Lome Agreement between the EC and 61 states of Africa, the Caribbean and the Pacific regions. The decision now taken, which took shape during the Bonn visit by Mozambique's Foreign Minister Chissano in June, is considered by the Federal Government an essential success of its African policy.

By an exchange of notes by the end of the week the Federal Republic and Mozambique concluded an agreement on foodstuffs aid. Under this agreement Bonn will deliver 3,000 tons of white corn to Maputo. So far the former Portuguese colony had concluded economic cooperation agreements with all states of the East bloc but none with the Federal Republic. It was above all the GDR which had so far been able to prevent the conclusion of such agreements by exerting pressure. Therefore, neither Mozambique nor Angola had received development aid from Bonn.

In September, Bonn and Maputo will initiate negotiations on development aid. Transport Minister Alcantara Santos is expected in Bonn this fall. The agreement on foodstuffs aid has been considered a "test case" for the fall negotiations. The conclusion very likely was preceded by differences between the dogmatic and pragmatic groups within the government party Frelimo (Frente de Libertacao de Mocambique). Chief of state Machel obviously has now joined the pragmatics.

The Federal Republic's development aid in Africa is marked by the fact that development goals have priority over foreign policy goals. Exceptions are northern and southern Africa. In southern Africa the Federal Ministry for Economic Cooperation tries to reduce the dependence of the African "frontline states" on South Africa's transport roads and economic power and at the same time contribute to the overcoming of racial tension. Here a considerable possibility offers itself for German aid to Mozambique, namely, the expansion of the ports of Beira, Maputo and Nacala as well as the repair of destroyed railroad lines and bridges.

INFORMATION ON FRG TERRORISTS IN LEBANON SOUGHT

LD021124 Hamburg DPA in German 1011 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 2 Aug (DPA) -- The CDU/CSU opposition has asked the Federal Government for information concerning the possible arrest of German terrorists by the Israeli authorities during the hostilities in Lebanon. The opposition also wants to know what the Federal Government has done, or will do, about ensuring that detainees are extradited to the Federal Republic.

CDU/CSU representatives Carl-Dieter Spranger and Karl Mildner said that there have been numerous reports in past weeks of the Israeli authorities finding evidence that the PLO is training foreign terrorists, including Germans. Although such evidence is of considerable importance both for countering terrorism and for foreign policy the Federal Government has not issued a statement on the matter.

A spokesman for the Federal Ministry of the Interior said when questioned on 30 July that the Foreign Ministry and relevant security authorities have no information about Israeli forces taking into custody in Lebanon left-wing or right-wing extremists from the Federal Republic. The Israelis have not confirmed that German terrorists were in besieged west Beirut either.

EGYPT'S 'ALI MEETS MITTERRAND, VIEWS ISRAELI TIES

NC031600 Paris AFP in English 1543 GMT 3 Aug 82

[Text] Paris, Aug 3 (AFP) -- Egyptian Foreign Minister Kamal Hasan 'Ali today warned that Egyptian-Israeli relations would suffer if Israel staged a final assault against west Beirut.

In an interview here with the daily LE MONDE, Mr 'Ali said: "If Beirut is taken by storm, I don't see how we could continue to maintain normal diplomatic relations with Israel".

The Egyptian foreign minister, who held a 30-minute meeting with Foreign President Francois Mitterrand today, said that moves to "normalise" ties between Egypt and Israel had been "99 per cent frozen" since Israel's invasion of Lebanon. Talks on Palestinian autonomy in Israeli-occupied territories were also suspended, he said, as the Israelis contended that "autonomy is an end in itself" while Egypt believes "it must rapidly lead to a Palestinian state".

Mr 'Ali said that the Lebanese crisis was at the top of the agenda of talks with Mr. Mitterrand today, but added that he was pessimistic as to a speedy solution of the conflict.

"The major problem is to obtain that Israel respects the west Beirut ceasefire", he said, adding that "the United States faces a heavy task in this respect".

Egyptian sources here said Mr 'Ali's 48-hour visit to France, ending today, was part of ongoing consultations between Cairo and Paris following their co-sponsorship of a draft United Nations Security Council resolution prepared last week.

The joint draft resolution is aimed at resolving the Lebanese crisis and establishing recognition for the Palestinians' right to self-determination. But France and Egypt have delayed submission of the draft to avoid a U.S. veto in Security Council debates as Washington continues to oppose moves to recognize Palestinian rights.

Mr. 'Ali, who met U.S. President Ronald Reagan in Washington last weekend, said earlier today that Egypt had noticed a positive shift in U.S. Government thinking since June, when he met with former Secretary of State Alexander Haig.

But he told THE INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE today that Washington should be "more forthcoming" on the Palestinians and begin direct talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) if it wants lasting peace in the Middle East.

Sources in the visiting Egyptian Foreign Ministry delegation said Cairo was trying to convince Washington to broaden its idea of Palestinian autonomy to include self-determination while maintaining the general framework of the Camp David agreements.

Cairo, the sources said, hoped that the European nations would also pressure Washington to adopt this stand.

COT SPEAKS ON FRENCH POLICY TOWARD CHAD

AB031247 Paris Diplomatic Information Service in French 0935 GMT 3 Aug 82

["Excerpts" of interview with Jean-Pierre Cot, minister of cooperation and development on 20 July 1981 to unidentified correspondent; place not given -- recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Have you failed in Chad?

[Answer] No. I believe that France was fairly successful in attaining the goals which it had established. First, avoiding outside intervention, second, supporting the efforts of the OAU and, third, helping in the peaceful reconstruction of Chad.

We had a fair amount of success on these three points. Today Chad is free of foreign troops, the civil war took place with a minimum of foreign intervention, the OAU limited its involvement in clashes and did not interfere, thus doing a very positive job in Chad. In the end, France will help in the rebuilding of Ndjamena, the rest is none of our business -- France has neither the intention nor the means to interfere in a Habre-Goukouni reconciliation, even if Habre and Goukouni don't clearly understand that we do not want to interfere.

[Question] You gave military aid to Goukouni's government. Will you do the same for Habre?

[Answer] We did not give significant military aid to the Goukouni government. We helped it a little with light arms at a time when arms were hard to get. Our important aid was civil aid for the rebuilding of Ndjamena in order that a Chadian administration could stand on its own two feet.

BANKING SCANDAL FIGURE ARRESTED IN SWITZERLAND

AU311949 Rome ANSA in English 1917 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 31 -- Rome magistrates confirmed today that they have already filed a request for the extradition with Swiss authorities of Flavio Carboni, the 40-year old Sardinian businessman who is accused of helping banker Roberto Calvi flee Italy and was arrested in Switzerland last night.

Carboni was arrested in a villa in Lugano in the company of his brother and a woman friend.

According to unconfirmed reports, the Italian national had been under surveillance for two weeks and was arrested in a joint operation of the Italian secret police, Interpol and Swiss police.

Carboni is also charged with providing the false passport Calvi used to get first to Austria and then to England where his body was found hanging from a London bridge June 18.

Italian police believe that the Sardinian builder organized Calvi's flight from Italian justice, directing his collaborator Emilio Pellicani to accompany the banker to Venice and Trieste.

In the latter city, according to this version of events, Calvi was put in contact with Wilvano Vittor, a local smuggler, who joined the banker in Klagenfurt, Austria, and then accompanied him to London.

Calvi, president of Italy's largest private sector bank Banco Ambrosiano, fled Italy where he was appealing a four-year prison sentence for illegally exporting capital from the country.

Banco Ambrosiano was under investigation by Italy officials who dissolved the board of directors and appointed three commissioners to supervise operations after Calvi's disappearance.

The bank is investigating 1.4 billion dollars in external risk loans issued to Ambrosiano's Latin American subsidiaries on the basis of letters of patronage from the Vatican Bank. [sentence as received]

The Vatican Bank owns 1.58 percent of the Ambrosiano's shares, making it one of its largest single shareholders.

The Italian Justice Ministry officially notified the Vatican Friday that its bank's president, American Archbishop Paul Marcinkus, is under investigation in connection with the Ambrosiano shortfall. But the Vatican refused to accept the notices because they were not sent through diplomatic channels to the independent city-state.

Meanwhile, Italian police have not confirmed reports that fugitive venerable master of the outlawed P-2 Masonic Lodge Licio Gelli was also residing in Carboni's Swiss villa and that police moved Friday in the hopes of also arresting Gelli.

Police confiscated large sums of money and a quantity of documents in the villa.

L'UNITA VIEWS EASING OF MARTIAL LAW IN POLAND

PM021407 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 25 Jul 82 p 17

[Romolo Caccavale commentary: "What is Changing and What Is Not in Jaruzelski's Poland"]

[Text] In assessing the decisions taken by the Polish military government announced by Gen Wojciech Jaruzelski in his speech to the Sejm on Wednesday it is necessary to draw a distinction between the measures to ease "martial law" which concern human and civil rights, and political pledges proper. From the first viewpoint the decisions should be viewed positively. Of course they fall short of the amnesty which rumors circulating just before had said was certain, but the simultaneous release of two-thirds of the internees was a significant action but was taken in a context which is still characterized by the measures adopted after the military coup. The restoration of telephone and telex communications with other countries and the resumption of the issuing of passports for the West are initiatives which have value for the Poles in view of the scope of their ties with their fellow nationals living outside the country. However, the speech was more reserved on political decisions. The task has been set of "reactivating" some social and cultural associations and reviving the enterprise self-management councils "so that they can become the workers' true representatives." The workers' councils are the prerequisite for carrying through the economic reform started at the beginning of the year. The aim now is to see how those pledges will be implemented in practice and hence which associations and how many will be "reactivated" and what real power the workers' councils will have and how they will be elected.

Finally, Jaruzelski's report to the Sejm on the general political plane seems worrying. Of course we do not underestimate the impact, including the political impact, which the easing of restrictions on human and civilian rights may have, but "martial law" remains in force in Poland and its abolition, planned for before the end of the year, is linked to conditions which the government will assess. That means that even the measures to ease the situation which have been taken are conditional. The government reserves the right to reintroduce the very regulations which have now been set aside. That happened in early May, as will be remembered, with the curfew and severing of urban telephone communications being immediately reapplied, even if only temporarily, in the cities in which young people had staged demonstrations involving clashes with the police.

The speech was even more ambiguous on the resumption of trade union activity and in particular of Solidarity. Indeed how can anybody fail to note that not only Lech Walesa but all the major Solidarity leaders are still interned? It is being said that there will be no return in Poland to the trade union which existed before August 1980 and which was bureaucratic and incapable of expressing the workers' interests but at the same time there will be no restoration of the situation as it was before 13 December with a Solidarity which was becoming less and less of a trade union and turning into a political organization under the influence of leaders who aimed to overthrow the Polish socialist regime.

In the speech he delivered in the Sejm after General Jaruzelski, Deputy Prime Minister Rakowski admitted that it is impossible to condemn Solidarity "as a whole" and that it is necessary to draw a distinction between extremists with whom it is impossible to have dialogue and representatives who think it is necessary for Solidarity to critically review its experience prior to 13 December. However Rakowski did not put forward specific proposals for dialogue with those forces. The result is that Solidarity's future is still in a limbo of uncertainty. And yet the government in Poland is well aware that the future of the trade union movement is a real test-case for a cautious gradual line but one whose objective is really to overcome the present situation. From that viewpoint the Hungarian experiment, to which some observers refer in judging the current Polish problem, does not see very relevant. The Polish situation has some original aspects which prevent it from following any model used elsewhere and one of the characteristics of that situation is the Catholic Church's strength and its policy which reflects awareness of the extent to which external conditions influence the Polish situation. Recent proof of the church's realism was given by the decision not to make the date of the pope's visit to Poland a reason for a clash with the government.

In the context of Poland's international position, Stefan Olszowski's appointment to the post of foreign minister can probably be attributed solely to the desire to give the outgoing leader of the party secretariat a prestigious post. Olszowski's biography is not consistent. As foreign minister under Gierek for a time in the seventies Olszowski gained a reputation as a skillful defender of Polish interests. He was removed by Gierek because of his reformist positions in the economic sphere and returned to the party's major bodies after August 1980. In the past 2 years he emerged as the most important political figures among those PZPR forces who thought that the process of not only economic but also political and social renewal underway went too far and his reservations frequently coincided with those of the Soviets. But in June 1981, when, after the CPSU Central Committee's letter, there was an attempt to oust Stanislaw Kania, Olszowski sided with then first secretary. All those stances may have prompted the choice of Olszowski to represent Poland's difficult international position.

Just a few words about the measures announced by Jaruzelski. After Primate Monsignor Jozef Glemp's mainly positive verdict, the reaction of Solidarity's leaders operating underground is now awaited. But the real reply from society and from the trade union organization which represents the vast majority of workers will probably come in August -- a month rich in those anniversaries which punctuate the present Polish situation. Among other things, 15 August 2811 be the second anniversary of the start of the strikes at the Lenin Shipyards and in the other enterprises on the Baltic coast and 31 August will be the second anniversary of the signing of the Gdansk agreements. Some people are afraid that they will make it possible to take another step toward national reconciliation.

SOVIET GOLF SUBMARINE LEAVES BALTIC FOR ATLANTIC

PM031415 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 31 Jul 82 p 5

["Auni" report]

[Text] One of the six nuclear-armed Golf class submarines, which the Soviet Union has had permanently based in the Baltic for a number of years, has sailed out into the Atlantic through the great belt in the last 24 hours.

The passage took place at the same time as Soviet propaganda surrounding the Scandinavian peace march in the Soviet Union reached its peak, and immediately before new episodes involving foreign submarines created fears that a "foreign power" is making preparations for war against Sweden.

The passage of the Golf class submarine did not cause alarm in Danish defense circles.

With their arsenal of medium-range nuclear missiles, which could reach any target in Scandinavia, the six submarines from the base in the Eastern Baltic represent the most immediate threat to the area on which the Soviet Union is exerting political pressure in order to have it declare itself a "nuclear-free Nordic region."

NORWAY

STRAY CITED ON COOPERATION WITH EEC, USSR

PM031359 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 30 Jul 82 p 3

[Text] Norway's growing access to the EEC's foreign policy cooperation, the European Political System (EPS), will continue and Norway will be given the opportunity to put forward Norwegian views when individual issues are dealt with. This was confirmed during Norwegian Foreign Minister Svenn Stray's visit to his Danish counterpart Kjeld Olesen in Copenhagen yesterday. Denmark is chairman of the EEC until the end of the year, and one of the aims of yesterday's talks was to win confirmation that previous arrangements for consultations with the EEC can continue.

At a press conference at the Norwegian Embassy after the talks Foreign Minister Stray stressed that the present arrangements have great importance in foreign policy questions which could have repercussions for Norway and Norwegian policy. The EEC will be kept fully informed of the Norwegian view of current issues and what possible consequences there might be for Norway, before any decisions are made.

At the meeting with the press Stray was asked by some Israeli journalists why in Israel's view Norway was the most anti-Israeli country in the West in connection with the invasion of Lebanon.

Stray dismissed the suggestion that Norway is anti-Israeli. On the contrary, he said, relations are very good, even though Norway had stated quite clearly that it cannot accept everything that Israel is doing. Stray added that he will be paying an official visit to Israel in November.

Norway has rejected a Soviet proposal that the Norwegian state provide economic guarantees in connection with Norwegian participation in oil and gas prospecting in the Barents Sea, Foreign Minister Stray told the press conference. Stray also rejected speculation that Norway has been subjected to Soviet pressure for Norway and the Soviet Union to form a partnership for the exploitation of the North's resources. This is an old Soviet wish which has been rejected several times by Norway.

The foreign minister said that relations between the United States and West Europe have become strained. "Norway has not decided on its attitude toward the question of supplies of gas pipeline equipment to the Soviet Union, but we do have full understanding for the countries in West Europe which are reacting to the Reagan administration's policy," Stray said.

As far as Norwegian-Soviet cooperation in oil and gas prospecting in the Barents Sea is concerned, Norway has made it perfectly clear that there is no reason for the Norwegian state to accept any economic risk for prospecting on the Soviet part of the continental shelf.

The Russians have brought some equipment from Norway. If they want to buy more, and if they want Norwegian technical assistance, they do have access to this. But participating as a partner with a Norwegian state guarantee in the production of oil on the Soviet section of the continental shelf is out of the question, Stray said.

KIPRIANOU REJECTS DENKTAS' STANCE ON UN RECOURSE

NC040600 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 3 Aug 82

["Text" of statement by President Spiros Kiprianou 3 August -- read by announcer]

[Text] Mr Denktas has proceeded with new threats in a new attempt to blackmail the Cyprus Government into not taking recourse to the forthcoming UN General Assembly session. The Cyprus Government has every right to appeal to the United Nations and all international organizations and to exert every effort internationally to restore the rights of Cyprus as long as the Turkish Attila continues to occupy Cypriot territory, demonstrating provocative defiance of the repeated resolutions and decisions of the United Nations and other international organizations. Nobody can deprive the Cyprus Government of this legal right.

Mr Denktas' attempt to prevent the Cyprus Government from exercising this inalienable right shows, on the one hand, the spirit of arbitrariness characteristic of the actions of the chauvinistic Turkish Cypriot leadership and Turkey and, on the other hand, it shows their indisputable guilt and responsibility for the continuing deadlock in the Cyprus issue because Turkey will be called to account for its failure to comply with the UN decisions and resolutions when the Cyprus issue is debated again at this international organization.

Mr Denktas' blackmailing warnings are indicative of a mentality based on the might of one who is militarily stronger, that is Turkey. The promotion of partition has always been Mr Denktas' firm pursuit. At various times, he brandishes the threat of declaring a separate, independent statelet either in order to impose his will and that of Ankara on the Cyprus Government, or in order to blackmail the Cyprus Government into accepting the unacceptable Turkish demands concerning the solution of the Cyprus issue. The Cyprus Government, however, will not give in to blackmail nor will it abandon its legal right to once again bring up the Cyprus problem at the United Nations and other international forums in order to secure support for a Cyprus solution in accordance with the UN Charter and decisions.

We denounce internationally this new Turkish blackmail and call upon the international community to adopt all the necessary measures to put an end to the Turkish threats and blackmail and to implement the UN resolutions.

[Text] Sudanese President Ja'far Numayri completed his official visit and left Turkey today. It was announced that Turkey and Sudan are determined to further develop their existing cooperation in every field.

Numayri was seen off at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport by Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen in a military ceremony which was attended by the Istanbul governor, the 1st army deputy commander, the western garrison commander, the mayor, the north sea area commander and other officials.

A communique issued in connection with Numayri's visit says that the two sides are determined to further develop their existing cooperation in all fields.

According to the communique, the Turkish and Sudanese Presidents expressed their concern about the recent negative developments in the international area and stressed the need to exert every possible effort to strengthen peace and security. The two sides pointed out that Israel's occupation of Lebanon threatens regional and universal peace and therefore the efforts to ensure the immediate withdrawal of the Israeli troops from Lebanon must be supported.

The communique says that a just and lasting solution to the Middle East problem can only be achieved if the Palestinian people's legitimate and inalienable rights, including their right to establish their own state, are recognized.

It is stated in the communique that Sudan appreciates Turkey's just attitude and continuous support for the Arab cause. It is also stressed that solidarity and cooperation among the Islamic countries must be increased.

It is also stated that Turkey and Sudan agree that a just and honorable solution must be reached in the Iran-Iraq war and a political solution for the Afghanistan problem.

According to the communique, Sudanese President Numayri invited head of state General Evren to Sudan and the invitation was accepted.

U.S. VOTE ON CYPRUS TROOP WITHDRAWAL 'DEPLORED'

NC020817 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 29 Jul 82 pp 1, 9

[Text] The decision of the U.S. House of Representatives regarding Cyprus has caused anxiety and repercussions in Ankara. Observers have, for some time, been maintaining that relations between Ankara and Washington were very good. Now an incident has cast a shadow over these relations.

Last week the House of Representatives adopted a decision with 405 votes in favor and only 6 against, asking President Reagan to call on Turkey to withdraw its troops from Cyprus. According to an interpretation of the decision, the presence of Turkish troops on the island is also creating problems within NATO. The State Department has adopted an attitude opposing the decision. This event also reflects the traditional divergence between the U.S. Congress and the "White House" on matters of foreign policy. Nevertheless, the weight of the great majority of the House of Representatives is expanding the dimensions of the event. Ankara has officially characterized the decision as "deplorable." The Foreign Ministry spokesman has stated that the decision "identifies itself with the views of only one side." It is obvious that this "side" is Greece. TFSC President Denktas characterized the decision as "an open act of pressure."

There is no doubt that Ankara's troubles will be increased by this new pressure originating from the United States. Already its relations with Europe are intensely strained. The effects of the arms embargo imposed on Turkey by the United States for 3 years are still fresh in our minds. This new decision has revived these memories. It is understood that for the time being, the tendencies displayed in the House of Representatives will be halted by the White House. However, this dual picture no longer carries any meaning for Turkey. It even sounds like a trick to pressure Ankara. This new wind blowing from the United States has provided new support for Athens, which is already pursuing a negative policy on the Aegean and Cyprus issues. This wind will serve as an encouragement for Papandreou to implement the strategy which he is carrying out.

ISRAEL'S PERES EXPLAINS PARTY POSITION TO PSOE

LD022246 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1800 GMT 2 Aug 82

[Text] PSOE [Spanish Socialist Workers Party] Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez has received a note from Israeli opposition leader Shimon Peres regretting the Spanish party's decision to support the expulsion of the Israeli Labor Party from the Socialist International because of what is alleged to be its attitude to the Lebanon conflict. Peres asserts that the PSOE does not understand labor's real position, which the Israeli leader says is one of (?demanding) that Prime Minister Begin limit himself to a security belt of 40 kms to the north of Israel, avoid war with Syria and work for the establishment of an independent Lebanese Government.

In response to the Israeli Labor Party's charge that the PSOE has been guilty of lack of solidarity in the Socialist International, PSOE Spokesman Pedro Bofill has said that the PSOE's solidarity with members of the Socialist International leads the Spanish party to formulate demands for the defense of principles inherent in the Socialist International itself, based on recognition of the human rights mentioned in the UN Charter which free and democratic countries have taken as their own.

SPECULATION ON APPOINTMENT OF NEW U.S. ENVOY

AU031408 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 3 Aug 82 p 3

[Georg Possanner dispatch from Washington]

[Excerpts] It is almost 4 months to the day since the death of U.S. Ambassador to Vienna Theodore Cummings. The fact that no successor has yet been appointed and that only a few names are being rumored can be assessed among other things as a measure of the Reagan administration's present interest in Austria. The phase of obvious ill feeling over Chancellor Kreisky's personal attacks against the President and over his single-handed action concerning the PLO and Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi is over. Indifference toward Vienna has prevailed following the purifying thunderstorm touched off by the lecture in Vienna of Eugene Douglas, Reagan's personal special envoy. Washington now has other priorities.

Among the names which are repeatedly mentioned in connection with the Vienna Embassy, that of Al Spiegel, Reagan's special adviser for relations with the Jewish communities in the United States, a man who comes from California, is being mentioned most often in prominent places. Spiegel, who is in his late fifties, is a successful lawyer with connections with show business. Together with the late Theodore Cummings, he was responsible for Reagan's election campaign in California. He told DIE PRESSE that he knows nothing of such rumors. If, however, he were offered the post of an ambassador he would "seriously consider it."

It is also evident that efforts are under way -- though belatedly -- to have President Kirchschlaeger make a state visit to Washington. Even private quarters, including Austria-fan and SALT I negotiator Ambassador Gerard Smith, have bombarded political authorities with letters in which they pointed out how absurd it is that the head of state of Western-oriented, absolutely neutral Austria had to travel first to Moscow because Reagan's predecessor Carter -- unlike Brezhnev -- was not in a position to extend an invitation at the signing of SALT II in Vienna. Currently a date for a visit in early 1983 is being cautiously considered, and efforts are being made to adjust Reagan's appointment schedule accordingly.

Nothing has been fixed yet, of course. Only one thing is certain: That some time before such a visit Vienna will have another U.S. ambassador.

W. GERMAN ARRESTED IN CONNECTION WITH BOMBINGS

AU050842 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 5 Aug 82 p 2

[Excerpt] State police officers have apprehended the wanted person whom National Democratic Party [NDP] chief Dr Norbert Burger had charged with committing the attacks in the federal capital and in Salzburg this year at a press conference in Vienna yesterday afternoon. The man's arrest took place in the evening shortly after 1900 hours near Moenichkirchen without incident.

The person arrested is 33-year German Ekkehard Weil, who has been on the international list of wanted persons for some time. Weil is regarded as a political criminal. He is well-known as a terrorist and violent criminal of a radical rightist type and has already been sentenced in the FRG for various crimes.

A sensational incident on the night of 1 August 1977 in West Berlin where shots were fired at a Soviet monument and where a Soviet soldier was injured was also touched off by Weil, who was subsequently sentenced to 6 years' imprisonment. Earlier he had -- according to the court, "for extreme rightist reasons" -- committed an incendiary attack for which he had been sentenced to 2 years imprisonment. At the trial in West Berlin Weil hit a journalist in the face and broke his nose.

Weil has been transferred to Vienna for questioning.

GENSCHER INTERVIEWED ON U.S.-EUROPEAN RELATIONS

DW050809 Stuttgart Sueddeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 1605 GMT 3 Aug 82

[Interview with Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher by Dankwalt Reissenberger in Bonn; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] German-American relations have again become the topic of conversation during the past several weeks. There are differences of opinion over the natural gas pipeline deal with the Soviet Union, over steel exports and perhaps also over the question of how to proceed in U.S.-Soviet negotiations on the European medium-range weapons. Do you believe that German-American relations have not been harmed in spite of this?

[Answer] Yes, unequivocally. We must understand the Western alliance as one of equal partners. This means that no one can force his will on another -- not the Europeans on the Americans, nor the Americans on the Europeans. For this reason we have always taken it for granted that we will honor the treaties we have concluded, to stay with the example of the natural gas pipeline deal.

However, more important is the fact that we never disregard the basis of our cooperation, of European-U.S. cooperation. This is made up of common concepts with regard to freedom and human dignity as well as self-determination. It is formed by common security interests in the face of a threat to all, a threat to which Western democracies are exposed, and by the awareness that only together can we counter this threat.

I am convinced that it is now important for the states of the Western alliance to concentrate on the great common projects they are pursuing -- the disarmament negotiations in Vienna on conventional armed forces in Central Europe, the disarmament negotiations in Geneva on medium-range missiles, the disarmament negotiations in Geneva on intercontinental strategic missiles and, finally, the continuation of the CSCE followup meeting where we intend to institute a European disarmament conference. For the sake of U.S.-European relations, we must simply concentrate on intensified consultations. Then we will also be able to find solutions in areas where different views exist, solutions which will maintain the interests of all and which will not cause any damage to the relationship between Europeans and Americans.

[Question] Are you satisfied with the course of the negotiations in Geneva so far, and do you have the impression that the Americans are negotiating there with all their energy?

[Answer] I have no doubt at all that the Americans are negotiating with all their energy in Geneva. After all, we shared in the preparations and we have been closely following the progress of the negotiations as never before in any disarmament negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union. For these negotiations to succeed it is important for us to consistently promote our demand for the renunciation of land-based medium-range missiles by both sides -- in East and West alike. To this end it is necessary for the Soviet Union to finally agree to the elimination of the nuclear threat against West Europe by its medium-range missiles.

It is solely up to the Soviet Union to clear the way for the exclusion on both sides of a weapon of mass destruction, namely the medium-range missiles, for the first time in mankind's history. This in turn would justify the hope that we will be able to achieve such a total exclusion of other weapons systems as well. For this reason we attach great significance to the implementation of the so-called zero option of renouncing medium-range missiles on both sides. The Western goals at the negotiations will be endangered only if the impression is created in the West that it is possible to agree to a little bit of a threat from the East. There is no such thing as a little bit of threat. Rather the Soviet Union's medium-range missiles targeted on West Europe constitute a threat to the existence of West Europe. They must disappear, and this is what we hope to achieve at these negotiations.

[Question] As far as you are concerned, the zero option is not just an initial negotiating position, but a concept which must be stood by.

[Answer] This is the West's common goal because in view of the desire of the people in the West and East for peace there can be no greater goal than the renunciation by both sides of land-based medium-range missiles. It is understandable for me, particularly as FDP chairman, to represent this goal because it was contained in the FDP platform for the 1980 Bundestag elections. We are glad it has become part of the Federal Government's policy and subsequently also part of the alliance's common policy.

[Question] Mr Foreign Minister, what importance do you attach to U.S. President Reagan's statement that we will possibly not meet with the Soviet chief of state this year, but only next year?

[Answer] This statement was not intended to mean that the American side does not want this meeting, rather it was a reaction to the refusal by the Soviet side to accept the proposal that a meeting take place in New York in June. It was also a reaction to the fact that to date no definite affirmative answer regarding a meeting this year has been received from the Soviet Union. I can only say that we are extremely interested in such a meeting taking place. We hope the Soviet Union will still decide to give its definite consent to a meeting this year.

VERHEUGEN: SANCTIONS AGAINST POLAND 'INHUMAN'

DW021049 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0546 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Telephone interview with FDP Secretary General Guenter Verheugen by reporters Kokotowski and Assion -- live]

[Excerpts] [Kokotowski] How is the discussion here in the West being assessed in Poland -- that is, the discussion about introducing economic boycott measures unless normalization is introduced soon [in Poland]?

[Answer] The political leaders are naturally unanimous in condemning [this policy], but recognize that the Federal Republic has played a moderating role in the Western alliance.

[Assion] The conflict we have with our American partner will probably not be settled soon.

[Answer] When you talk to people in Poland you increasingly gain the impression that it possibly would have been better [for the United States] to choose other forms of political influence than economic sanctions. The political situation in Poland has caused the rulers to say: We cannot risk any political experiments in a situation where we have had to ask our people to accept a deterioration in their living standard and income cuts of almost one-third during the past 20 months. It is necessary to tell the Poles clearly that in our view the normalization of the state of affairs in the country, and thus the normalization of political and economic cooperation with us, includes an amnesty for those people who were sentenced to 10 years imprisonment because they distributed pamphlets, for instance, or came out for the solidarity trade union.

[Assion] Yet you support further aid at the moment?

[Answer] Yes, I consider this to be absolutely right. Economic sanctions which in fact only hit individuals there and don't disrupt the system in general are, in my view, inhuman.

JOBERT INTERVIEWED ON PIPELINE DEAL WITH USSR

DW041109 Cologne Westdeutscher Rundfunk Network in German 0530 GMT 3 Aug 82

[Interview with Michel Jobert, minister of state for foreign trade, by reporter Hoehn; date and place not given; in French with superimposed German translation -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] The U.S. Government is standing by its embargo on the American top technology that West European firms wanted to use in the billion-dollar Russian natural gas pipeline project. A French electrical company is also affected. How will matters proceed now?

[Answer] The governments involved have expressed their opinions. We are aware of the American position that the technology coming from the United States is to be embargoed to prevent quite a number of European firms from fulfilling contracts they concluded earlier with the Soviet Union. Thus the only question raised here is whether or not U.S. laws have become French, German, British or Italian laws. The four European governments have answered this question. We have our laws and our practices and we will abide by them.

[Question] Exactly how do you in Paris view the legal aspects of this conflict?

[Answer] I am not a professional jurist and cannot assess every legal aspect of this affair. In my initial answer, however, I pointed to the actual significance of this matter. Does the United States have the power to decide on behalf of the other states? In view of the current level of our civilization that answer is no. You see, what is involved here is not a legal problem but the way we deal with each other in the Western community of states. Therefore, I am also quite sure that if we get away from laws and rights -- which can be all too easily adapted to fit any situation -- we will ultimately come to an agreement between the five states, that is Great Britain, France, Italy, the FRG and the United States. This matter has quite far-reaching aspects. If the European states accept the current U.S. position, they will eventually have to accept other measures affecting the limits of their freedom of decision and action.

[Question] The Belgian Government has bailed out of the gas deal with Moscow. Is this really Paris' final word on this matter? After all, considerable delays of the gas deliveries from western Siberia are anticipated.

[Answer] As in other areas, in industry and commerce there is no total immobility or total stagnation. Things around us are changing and thus also the way we assess them. We will see. Several years ago, even as recently as months ago, experts were sure that in the second half of the eighties West Europe would have to cope with a period of gas shortage. I am not sure that this still holds true today. By the way, I have always said that there will soon be a considerable oversupply of gas in the world. On the one hand, there are the gas contracts of various countries with the Soviet Union which were concluded with the justified concern that the industry of the countries involved could be affected by a gas shortage; on the other, there will be substantial gas supply offers from elsewhere by 1986. This alone means for me that the Western world will be much less dependent on Moscow in the energy sector than has been said here and there. There are huge quantities of gas in the world -- off the coast of Africa, in Canada, in the Caribbean and so on. The main thing is knowing when these sources will supply world energy markets. As for the Soviet Union, its deliveries will start soon if this natural gas pipeline is completed within a time that does not deviate too much from the original schedule.

[Question] The U.S. ambassador to France has already announced serious consequences for your electrical company if it supplies the turbines produced under U.S. licence to the Soviet Union. Wouldn't you cut off the American market for French firms by the gas deal with Moscow? Given the FR25 billion balance of trade deficit with the United States last year and the extremely high deficit in the first six months of 1982, this market is more important for you than ever.

[Answer] You know, ambassadors say what they want. France has signed a contract with the Soviet Union. Except in the case of let's say, force majeure, we want it to be fulfilled by both sides. The energy France needs is not supplied by Germany or the United States. Therefore, we are forced to help ourselves in other ways -- be this by our nuclear energy program, by oil imports which heavily burden our foreign trade balance, by gas imports or even by coal imports which could very well come from the United States, provided the price of this coal is competitive and the American ports can handle modern large freighters. This is not the case today.

LE MONDE: U.S. HAS 'TWO STANDARDS' ON USSR

[Editorial: "In Election Year"]

[Text] After weeks of consultations and delays President Reagan has decided to allow his administration to "explore" the possibility of a 1-year extension of the agreement for the sale of grain to the Soviet Union due to expire on 30 September. If the USSR accepts this compromise it will be the second time that the United States has used it, the first being last year, also to avoid having to negotiate a long-term extension of the 1975 agreement.

Washington thus hopes to impart the impression of the precariousness of its commitments to a client anxious for assurances. The Treasury secretary even mentioned the possibility of another embargo in the event of the USSR committing an "odious crime." This remains a latent warning for the present, because U.S. farmers are willing to supply Soviet customers with the millions of metric tons of wheat and corn needed to compensate for the disastrous Russian harvests of these grains.

The U.S. harvests, on the other hand, have been huge, though. In "normal" times it would seem logical for the underproducer to seek supplies from the overproducer. Except that at this time of "normalization" for Poland the United States believes that the point must be driven home and the weight of its displeasure felt. It remains to be seen how this will be done.

The extension of the grain contract obviously creates a breach in the arsenal of "reprisals" introduced by the United States against the USSR. Washington's arguments, though pointing out that the United States "is doing what it can" to oppose Moscow and also that the grain supplies will obviously not help to strengthen the USSR's military might, will not make people forget that it could have banned grain sales to the Soviet Union. It is true that this would have meant sacrificing a welcome outlet for the U.S. grain surplus, but it would also have been consistent with the anti-Soviet crusade mentality which Mr Reagan would like to instill in the West.

This, moreover, is the argument used by the hardliners in the President's entourage. They have been heard but not heeded. The private interests of the Midwest farmers have prevailed over the cause of punishing the USSR for its misconduct. In an election year -- in November all the seats in the House of Representatives and a third of Senate seats will be up for reelection -- it would have been difficult to upset a social sector which is already not as prosperous as it once was and which generally votes Republican.

This is undoubtedly the principal reason for President Reagan's decision. All the circumlocutions with which Washington officials have surrounded it betray the embarrassment which this charitable act has caused him: Under Secretary for International Trade, Lionel H. Olmer told a Senate committee the same day of his administration's decision to penalize companies contravening the U.S. embargo on goods manufactured under licence and destined for the Siberian gas pipeline.

So there are to be two standards. The United States authorizes itself to feed the USSR but forbids its allies to help the USSR equip itself, even if this benefits them. The moral of history is that there is virtually no morality.

ARAB ENVOYS, PLO APPEAL FOR END TO LEBANON WAR

AU041941 Rome ANSA in English 1936 GMT 4 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, Aug 4 -- The organization of Arab diplomats and residents in Italy issued an appeal in Rome today to all governments and peoples throughout the world to take "immediate" steps to make Israeli authorities abide by the United Nations resolutions.

The appeal for a stop to the "massacre" in Beirut, issued by the council of Arab ambassadors and residents, said Beirut was "exposed to a barbarian assault aimed at annihilating the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples".

A similar appeal was issued today by the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) in Rome with the announcement that "the Israelis' final attack on Beirut has already started with an unprecedented, hellish bombardment".

The PLO called on the Italian Government to do something to make Israel "respect the resolutions of the international community before it is too late".

TRADE MINISTER ON USSR, ALGERIAN GAS SUPPLIES

AU040935 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 4 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, Aug 4 -- The full implementation of Italy's national energy plan requires gas supplies from both Algeria and the Soviet Union, according to Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria.

In statements to the lower house, industry commission Tuesday, the Rome government official upheld the right of European countries to stand up for their autonomy with respect to Washington's embargo against the shipment of material to the Soviet Union from the construction of the Siberian gas pipeline.

"Aside from the rhetoric...", Capria said of Reagan's veto on European supply shipments, "it is right to protect the autonomy of European countries, which should coordinate their stands."

Elaborating on Italy's energy requirements, the minister cited what he called "the delicate issue of energy dependency", asserting that "...real security stems from the diversification of energy sources as well as of the geographic and political regions they come from".

Capria particularly insisted on the interdependence of supplies, pointing out that gas provides 18.9 of Italy's energy needs and Algeria and the Soviet which supply the (?bulk) of the product. [as received]

Without Algerian supplies, he warned, Italy's fuel dependency on the Soviet Union would reach "imprudent" levels in the neighborhood of 48.4 percent.

Failure to renew Italy's contract with Algeria, he went on to warn with regard to the ongoing price disagreement between the two sides, would require, in any event, a revision of Italy's entire national energy plan.

Negotiations with Algeria, the foreign trade minister insisted, must nonetheless be conducted in "rigorous and resolute" manner.

Capria announced plans to meet with Algerian authorities on September 6 on the occasion of the Algiers trade fair.

"The construction of the underwater pipeline between Algeria and Sicily", the official concluded, represented a major political intuition [as received] in energy and Mediterranean policies and its meaning should not be lost".

MASONS LINKED TO BOLOGNA TRAIN STATION BOMBING

AU311927 Rome ANSA in English 1910 GMT 31 Jul 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, July 31 -- Two young German neonazis materially placed the bomb which killed 84 and injured 200 at the Bologna train station August 2, 1980 and the worst Italian post-war massacre was ordered by fugitive Masonic Venerable Master Licio Gelli, according to an article in the forthcoming issue of the Italian weekly "PANORAMA". [sentence as received]

The article revealed that a key Italian neofascist, Stefano Delle Chiaie -- who was also involved in the 1969 Milan massacre which killed 16 and injured 106 -- hand-picked two other neofascists who in turn got in contact with the German neonazis.

Delle Chiaie took direct orders from Licio Gelli, the mastermind of the outlawed P-2 Masonic lodge that is believed to be involved in all the major scandals in the country in the last decade, and of the Montecarlo-based "Comite' Maconique".

Magistrates in Bologna investigating the train station massacre arrived at these conclusions, according to the article, on the basis of confessions made in a Lausanne prison by Elio Ciolini, a petty swindler who had contacts with Gelli's Montecarlo Masonic lodge.

Gelli created the Montecarlo branch of the P-2 lodge in 1979.

At an April 1980 meeting in Montecarlo, the lodge members planned a number of financial operations -- stock market speculation and a return to the private sector of Montedison, the country's largest chemical corporation.

In order to cover up these manoeuvers and operate undetected, the lodge members decided to trigger a "hot climate" in Italy that summer.

The task was entrusted to Gelli, according to the weekly.

The venerable master picked Delle Chiaie, who has been working for some time at the Bolivian Ministry of the Interior in La Paz.

The neofascist then hired two members of "Avanguardia Nazionale", the best-known Italian ultrarightist organization who in turn contacted the Germans.

"PANORAMA" also claimed that "prominent members of the Italian financial world and politicians of all parties, except the Communist Party, attended the Montecarlo meeting".

OLIART DENIES MILITARY POLITICALLY MOTIVATED

PM041455 Madrid YA in Spanish 30 Jul 82 p 8

[Text] Alberto Oliart has said in remarks to EUROPA PRESS that the military has never exerted any pressure or made the slightest suggestion on the mode of government and that it has never influenced the development of Spanish politics. In the interview the defense minister denied that the military fears a Socialist victory or that it is trying to form an autonomous entity above the civil government. The minister said that the Spanish people must help the armed forces recover from the 23 February [1981 attempted coup] trauma and gave assurances that any repetition of such a venture would meet the same fate. He also rejected the charges leveled by various sectors against him personally and his department -- charges which, Oliart said, originate from members of the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD].

"The present council of chiefs of staff, like the previous one," Oliart said, "has never involved itself in what we call politics, much less to exert pressure on the government." "Interest in politics has been much less in the military than in any other sector of the population," the defense minister said.

Asked about the armed forces' fear of a possible Socialist victory, Alberto Oliart replied: "Within the present reserve and secrecy of the military, I have not observed any fear regarding a victory by the Spanish Socialist Workers Party. What I have observed is an anxiety regarding radical and violent changes in Spanish society. They always talk about the major ideals: Spanish unity, respect for symbols and so forth. But they do not translate this into any specific policy or party. It is something that they carry within themselves, as a raison d'etre. Their concerns are similar to those of the majority of Spaniards."

In this connection, he said that within the armed forces everyone thinks what he wants, but that there is total respect for the constitution and loyalty and obedience to the legitimate government and the king, as the permanent symbol of the state.

"The fact is," he explained, "that the military as a whole always tries to defend its professional interests -- its staff, its promotions, its future and so forth. This is not very different from my experience in other groups of civil officials. All such bodies tend to rally together to defend themselves from outside pressures. Nevertheless, the sense of discipline in a member of the armed forces is so strong that he will accept orders, like them or not. Orders may be carried out with greater or lesser enthusiasm, but they are carried out. The bodies of command are working very well and the council of chiefs of staff has the respect and esteem of all its colleagues."

According to the minister, there is at present no reason to believe that there could be a repetition of 23 February -- "an adventure that would meet the same fate, since the majority of the people and of the armed forces do not want a regression."

With regard to certain charges levelled at him by various sectors, accusing him of being "weak" and "complacent," the minister said that this campaign is the result of the political struggle, and specifically that it stems from UCD members "whose names I know," he said, "but against whom I hold no rancor and will take no measures."

In the minister's opinion, it is very important to continue in the future with the task of rapprochement between the armed forces and the universities and the media. He ended by stressing the effort that has been made in the Cortes to provide information about military plans.

[Text] The Iranian delegation led by Industries Minister Mostafa Hashemi that has been visiting Spain over the last few days has signed sizable orders with a number of Spanish firms for the purchase of steel products and machine tools.

The Iranian delegation has spoken repeatedly of its wish to step up trade relations with Spain.

During its stay it visited over 80 firms and held talks with Ignacio Bayon, minister of industry and energy, and with Luis Ortiz, minister of public works and urbanism. The official talks dealt principally with measures to be adopted by the two countries to even out the trade balance, which is currently very unfavorable to Spain because of our large purchases of oil from Iran; they are not matched by exports on our part.

ARCHBISHOP ON CHURCH'S RIGHT TO SUPPORT STRUGGLE

NC041030 Nicosia ALITHIA in Greek 4 Aug 82 p 1

[Excerpt] "Parallel to its religious duties, the church will unceasingly continue the national struggle, irrespective of whether some people want this or not, so that our people may be free to live on the land that was bequeathed to them by their ancestors." The above was stressed among other things in a speech yesterday at Panayia by Archbishop Khrisostomos during the unveiling of a statue of Makarios.

The above excerpt from the archbishop's speech is a slap at the AKEL leadership which, in a fit of immoral polemics accompanied with unbecoming descriptions of the person of the leader of the church of Cyprus, tried to dispute the church's right to express an opinion on the national issue. Actually, at some stage of its policy the AKEL leadership had gone so far as to ask Archbishop Khrisostomos to resign and resort to new elections.

After calling on the Cyprus people to unite and rally around the militant line that has been charted by Greece, the archbishop stressed in his speech that "nobody, neither the West nor the East, will come to help us in our struggle." Specifically he said: "Greece has charted a militant line and has asked us all to unite and rally. Let us not delude ourselves. Nobody from the East or from the West will come to our help -- only Greece and the line of the Greek leadership, the line of struggle and repositioning [of the Cyprus problem] constitutes the basis for unity, for liberating our homes. We must seek this unity."

DENKTAS DENIES MAKING THREATS TO KIPRIANOU

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, has said that the Greek Cypriot administration, which is continuing to exert political and economic pressure on the Turkish Cypriot community, has brought about a situation in which the intercommunal talks could be eliminated.

Denktas called on the Greek Cypriot administration once again to continue with the work for the establishment of a bizonal federation within the framework of the principle of secrecy.

Denktas criticized Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou's allegations that the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus had tried to prevent his recourse to the United Nations by means of threats and blackmail. Denktas stressed, however, that recourse to international organizations ran counter to the agreements of principle reached between the two communities. He added that with this attitude, the Greek Cypriots were undermining the intercommunal talks.

ASSEMBLY BEGINS DEBATE ON DRAFT CONSTITUTION

[Text] The Consultative Assembly has begun to debate the draft constitution. Speaking to the Assembly, Constitution Committee Chairman Orhan Aldikacti has said that Ataturk principles have been placed at the foundation of the state and that ideologies aimed at destroying freedoms have not been included in the draft constitution. In an opening speech, the Assembly deputy speaker, Refik Kitapcigil said: No one should doubt that this Assembly and the National Security Council, which will make the final decision, will present the Turkish people with the ideal constitution it desires.

The Consultative Assembly general council met at 0930 this morning to begin the debates on the draft constitution. Refik Kitapcigil, who chaired the meeting, made an opening speech before the debates began. He said that the Turkish nation and the Turkish homeland had been saved from the brink of disaster by the 12 September operation. He said: We are well aware that following the bitter days of suffering the great Turkish nation has pinned its hopes on this assembly and this constitution. It is our moral obligation not to disappoint it. He continued: The Turkish Armed Forces, which successfully realized the 12 September operation, has succeeded in restoring to its distinguished world position the current strong and highly esteemed Turkish state and the tranquil Turkish community which is sure of its future through the great efforts it exerted to restore national unity, to strengthen national solidarity which was damaged, to reinstate the Ataturk principles and reforms which were discared, to put an end to fraternal strife which was rampant, to insure the security of life and property, to restore the state authority which was eliminated and to guarantee human rights and freedoms together with the tranquillity, security and prosperity of the community.

Pointing out that the second goal of the 12 September operation was to establish a democratic parliamentary regime, Kitapcigil added that the preparation of a new constitution as well as laws on political parties and elections is envisaged in a bid to attain this second goal. He said that the Consultative Assembly has been functioning without the inferference of any authority or organization and that today it will begin to debate the draft constitution which is its reason for being.

Also speaking at the Assembly, Aldikacti explained the philosophy according to which the draft constitution was prepared. He said that the major philosophy was based on filling the voids seen in individual rights and freedoms, strengthening the executive branch and enabling judicial control to operate within legal boundaries.

Noting that the Ataturk principles were used as the foundation of the state and that restrictions and limitations of individual rights and freedoms were clearly determined according to unequivocal principles. Aldikacti added that ideologies trying to destroy freedoms were not included in the draft.

Aldikacti said that prior to 12 September, judicial organs, from time to time, were influenced by political trends and made decisions in contradiction to the 1961 Constitution. He continued: This philosophy is the sacredness of humans and their opinions. Our committee is aware that human opinions are sacred, that they can in no way be destroyed, that they should be protected and that it is necessary to keep them away from any possible attack. At the same time the committee thinks that contemporary people should seek happiness in unity and cooperation and that there can be no place in our community for ideological trends that cause enmity among human beings. The basis of this concept is, above all, belief in mutual love and respect and the organization of state activities and the expression of beliefs without enmity among human beings. Noting that the committee always remained within the boundaries of contemporary thought, Aldikacti added that within these boundaries social and economic rights have been reorganized and that articles dealing with the activities of unions and associations have been based on new principles.

Aldikacti said that the authorities of the president have been increased in line with the spirit of a parliamentary system, that the prime minister has become the real leader of the government and that the judicial power has been envisaged as an organ functioning within the boundaries of law. Noting that the necessary amendments will be made and new articles might be introduced following the debates at the Assembly, Aldikacti said: Just as the 1961 Constitution was ahead of the 1924 Constitution, this draft will be ahead of the 1961 Constitution.

Debates on the whole of the draft constitution began after Aldikacti's address. Until now 87 members have requested to express their views on the draft. Two members expressed their views in the morning session of the Assembly. The Assembly will meet again at 1400 and will continue the debate.

Constitution Criticized

TA041645 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 4 Aug 82

[Text] The Consultative Assembly is now discussing the draft constitution in general. The members who took the rostrum in today's session expressed their views on the various aspects of the draft constitution. They pointed out that the articles on the limitation of freedoms were expressed in ways open to interpretation and that this situation might lead to difficulties in their implementation. They also said that there were contradictions regarding the separation of forces, that exceptions were treated as the rule, and therefore the draft constitution must be made mature.

Some members criticized the stipulations organizing the relations between the president and the council of ministers, as well as the clause which says that deputies must have at least 8 years of formal education. They stressed that the duties of the contemplated state consultative council might become more powerful than the legislative assembly.

Meanwhile, Constitutional Committee Spokesman Sener Akyol announced that 92 articles of the draft constitution were accepted by the committee without opposition. In a news conference today, Akyol said that the number of articles opposed by 1 member was 56, the number of articles opposed by 2 members was 22, and the number of articles opposed by 3 members was 13. He added that 4 members opposed 10 articles, 5 members opposed 5 articles, and 1 member opposed 6 articles.

Akyol stressed that the main philosophy of these articles was accepted by the members, but that there were differences of opinion on details. Akyol said that the draft constitution would improve with the will of the Consultative Assembly.

SCHMIDT ON U.S. ECONOMIC, POLITICAL ORIENTATION

LD061534 Hamburg DPA in German 1328 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn, 6 Aug (DPA) -- The United States' leading role and responsibility for further world economic development has been stressed by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. In an article for BERGEDORFER ZEITUNG (Saturday edition) released on Friday, Schmidt wrote that whether the path out of the present global economic recession leads into a global depression or a new common upturn largely depends on the United States. Thus, in the interests of its own power, the United States can only exercise leadership by consensus and mutual consultation with the partner countries.

Schmidt, who recently visited the United States, took the view that a shift of the focus of power in the United States would have consequences for the Europeans and the Germans. The political and intellectual groupings that have arisen from the East Coast states of the United States have traditionally been towards Europe. On the other hand the interest of the leading representatives of the so-called U.S. Sun Belt has been directed more inward and partially towards the regions of Latin America or the Pacific. Without mentioning President Reagan, who comes from California, Schmidt added that here there is a danger "that Americans in Florida, Georgia, Texas, Arizona or California will lose sight of Europe and allow overly-simplified cliches about European interests and concerns to be foisted upon them."

SPOKESMAN: U.S. TO FINANCE TROOP REGROUPING

[Excerpts] Bonn, 6 Aug (DPA) -- The FRG is not obliged to finance the planned regrouping of some of the American troops in Germany. Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl told newsmen in Bonn on Friday that, according to NATO's troops statute, it is the Americans' responsibility to bear both the costs of such a move and the construction of new barracks.

Irrespective of this assurance, Bonn government circles expect the Americans to make financial demands when the talks on regrouping within the forward defense framework begin again in Bonn in September. Sums of billions of Deutschemarks are involved, to which -- it is being reliably reported -- the U.S. will expected the FRG to contribute. Government Spokesman Ruehl did not want to offer any opinion on this. He said one would have to wait and see whether the Americans bring up the financial question during the Bonn meeting.

Ruehl explained that what is involved is a regrouping "from American land to other American land," something that is primarily a matter for the Americans. It could not be gleaned from the government spokesman's remarks what attitude the Bonn government would ultimately take to U.S. demands for financial support. Ruehl said that the government wants to make no comment on the usefulness of regrouping within the forward defense framework, since this is a NATO military matter.

MAGAZINE SAYS HONECKER STILL WANTS TO VISIT

LD071604 Hamburg DPA in German 1536 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Hamburg, 7 Aug (DPA) -- According to information acquired by the news magazine DER SPEIGEL, the chairman of the GDR State Council and SED chief, Erich Honecker, is still interested in a visit to the Federal Republic this year.

DER SPIEGEL states that SED officials are talking of November as the planned date. At the end of July Bonn Government Spokesman Lother Ruehl rejected speculation that there were differences of opinion within the Federal Government about the Honecker visit due to the GDR's refusal to grant entry visas to CDU politicians Bernhard Vogel and Heiko Hoffman. Ruehl stressed that Bonn is basically still interested in the visit.

DER SPIEGEL names three important reasons for Honecker's undiminished interest in a visit to the West. It is still Moscow's policy to deepen the differences between Bonn and Washington on the disarmament issue, an aim that "the Kremlin hopes" could be served by Honecker's visit to Federal Chancellor Schmidt. The GDR also hopes that talks between Schmidt and Honecker could lead to an agreement on the Elbe border. Last, the precarious economic situation has forced East Berlin to expand economic relations with the Federal Republic. "The SED chief will of course not be giving anything in return," writes DER SPIEGEL.

DIE WELT VIEWS ECONOMIC HAZARDS OF PIPELINE DEAL

[Heinz Pentzlin article]

[Text] Rarely in negotiations on an international large-scale transaction have the conditions whence the parties to the contract proceeded changed so drastically by the conclusion of the contract as they have in the case of the natural gas pipe line deal. Today the situation on the natural gas market is completely different from what it was at the opening of negotiations in late 1979. This is why it is hard to comprehend that the German parties to the contract so tenaciously cling to the project and, unlike the Belgians, have failed to use the delay in the conclusion of the contract to withdraw from the deal.

There is not, however, such an advantageous solution for the German business partners as that which has offered itself to the Italians. Despite the U.S. embargo the Italians propose to go through with their deliveries for the construction of the pipeline while not making any definite commitments concerning the purchase of Soviet natural gas, If the German natural gas buyers would withdraw, then in all probability the Soviets would drop their project of building the long pipeline to Western Europe; and then the German deliveries would no longer be required.

It is understandable that German supplier companies, foremost Mannesmann, AEG and, not to forget, the Salzgitter Steel Corporation which is owned by the Federal Government and which only too often operates with hard luck, adhere to the agreement; after all, this agreement insures for them a sale of their products with a guarantee of payment receipts in the amount of 85 percent of the sales price. This relieves them of the trouble of seeking other sales options, especially since they can say in times of declining cycle that this sale serves the preservation of jobs.

When the Soviets offered the agreement people had been under the impact of the onrushing, second large oil-price wave as a result of the OPEC price dictate. At the same time they saw the strong increase in the consumption of natural gas. Even the Netherlands, which had Europe's biggest natural gas deposits, deemed it wise to participate in a purchase of Soviet gas so as to stretch the exploitation of its own deposits. This in turn caused the Belgians, who depend on the purchase of Netherlands gas, to participate in the deal. Then the Italians, too, did not wish to stay aloof, especially since the Algerians, with whom they had jointly built a pipeline to their country through the straits of the Mediterranean, proved to be difficult business partners.

Moreover, at the opening of the negotiations the Soviets profited from the detente euphoria. Even after the invasion of Afghanistan, and even after the imposition of martial law in Poland,the economists interested in natural gas believed that such political events need not affect East-West trade.

But the high credit demands by the Soviets and difficulties in the price agreements entailed delays in the conclusion of the contract. Under the terms advocated by the Soviets in their own country an interest rate of more than 6 percent is considered exorbitant. Rarely do they pay more than 7 percent for financing credits. But it has long become common practice that the sale price contain a percentage which compensates for the difference with a country's customary interest rate level by payment of the supplier to the bank.

In the case of the pipeline deal most of the interest rate difference — with an increase of the official interest rate of between 7.75 and 7.80 percent -- is to be balanced by the buyers of the natural gas who must, therefore, receive the gas at a correspondingly cheaper rate. So far natural gas prices on a long-term basis had mostly been linked with the price development for petroleum. Lately there has been an ample supply of natural gas, and this supply will further increase quickly. New deposits will be tapped in the North Sea and elsewhere. The transport of liquid gas from remote deposits increases strongly.

The consumption of natural gas, in contrast, is on the decline and not just as a result of economizing in energy consumption. Coal, too, has become a competitor for gas, in some fields of consumption being cheaper than gas — wherever the price for import coal has a telling effect. Meanwhile, a price clause has been agreed with the Soviets which makes allowances for price changes not only for petroleum but also for other energy sources. But it is not at all sure whether the consumers of the gas will thereby get what they expect and raise without any trouble the payments for covering the difference in interest rates, in the event of greater price shifts in the future.

Besides, they will have to create safeguards against interruptions of deliveries, interruptions which may occur not only for political reasons but also as a result of technical breakdowns. Granted, the gas from the Soviet Union is supposed to amount to "only" 6 percent of the total German energy import -- coal, petroleum and gas altogether, yet, it will be more than 20 percent of the gas import. In that respect the gas economy must create safeguards through additional storage facilities and purchase options which will cause considerable costs. Thus, the pipeline contract may well come dear to the parties involved -- quite apart from the political damage it has done.

ARRANGEMENTS MADE TO SEND TROOPS TO BEIRUT

AB071340 Paris AFP in French 1319 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Paris, 7 Aug (AFP) -- France has made arrangements for the sending of a French detachment to Beirut "in a very short time" within the framework of an international neutral force, it was announced officially in Paris.

In a communique published on Saturday afternoon, the Elysee indicates that, "as France has already said, it is prepared to assume the responsibilities incumbent upon it in the setting up of an international neutral force for Beirut."

"Measures have therefore been taken to allow a French detachment to be stationed in Beirut in a very short time within the framework of that force as soon as the conditions laid down on several occasions by France are fulfilled; that is the request by the Lebanese Government with the approval of the warning parties and in conjunction with the United Nations," the communique adds.

No Naval Officers in Beirut

LD072038 Paris Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] According to Israel Radio, French naval officers are reported to have already landed in the eastern sector of Beirut, the sector controlled by the Christians, in order to discuss the possible role of the French Navy in the evacuation of the Palestinian fighters. However, the Ministry of Defense in Paris has just denied this.

Envoy on International Force

LD081806 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 8 Aug 82

[Text] Tomorrow morning the Lebanese Government may officially ask the French, U.S. and Italian Governments for contingents to be sent to Lebanon. The French ambassador in Beirut, who has just announced the news, pointed out that the French contingent could initially number 350 men and then rapidly be increased to 800 men. The total strength of the international force, still according to the ambassador, would comprise 2,500-3,000 men. The ambassador went on to point out that no date had been set for the contingent to be in place but he suggested 15 August as a possible date.

Cheysson 'Optimistic'

NC090803 Paris AFP in English 0753 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] Paris, Aug 9 (AFP) -- French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson today expressed a prudent optimism about latest developments in Lebanon on his return from an Asian tour.

Mr Cheysson said, however, that he did not wish to say too much as "we are too close now to a possible end" to the Lebanon crisis. He said that for weeks now the French Government had agreed to a Lebanese request that France take part in an international force which would supervise the departure of Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) forces from the besieged Lebanese capital.

"One of our conditions was that the PLO also agreed to our presence, which is now the case," said Mr Cheysson. The minister added that a calendar for the deployment of the force should be drawn up by parties concerned: the Lebanese, Israelis and Palestinians, along with those countries taking part.

Replying to Israeli objections that a multinational force which would include troops from France, the U.S. and other Western nations as well as possible UN observers might be a way for PLO militants to remain in west Beirut, Mr Cheysson said: "I understand Israeli suspicions....but we are going over there to allow the PLO to leave in a dignified manner not to allow them to stay."

Asked whether the international force might have to push the PLO out of Lebanon, Mr Cheysson said: "The PLO has asked us to come so as to help them leave. If they then wanted to stay that would change the whole scenario."

PCF DEPUTIES MEET LEBANESE FACTION LEADERS

PM061319 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 4 Aug 82 p 1

[Text] A delegation of PCF deputies is visiting west Beirut where it was welcomed Monday [2 August] by French Ambassador Paul-Marc Henry. The delegation, comprising European Assembly Deputy Rene Piquet, National Assembly Foreign Affairs Commission Vice Chairman Robert Montdargent and Senator Marie-Claude Beaudeau, had talks Monday with Lebanese Communist Party Secretary General Georges Hawi and Lebanese National Movement Chairman Walid Junblatt. It had talks yesterday with PLO chairman Yasir 'Arafat.

'Arafat Meeting Described

[Text] A delegation of French Communist deputies returned from Lebanon yesterday. Rene Piquet, chairman of the Communist group in the European Assembly, met Yasir 'Arafat in Beirut. The PLO leader is determined to remain in the Lebanese capital, whatever the cost. At least this is what Rene Piquet reported in an interview.

[Begin Piquet recording] Yasir 'Arafat and the Lebanese fighters are determined to fight to the end, just as they are determined to find a political solution quickly, immediately. This has been systematically denied them to date, and so they are determined to fight. I found 'Arafat, like the other Lebanese authorities, very determined on this point. They know that in any case, whatever happens to them personally, the cause of the Palestinian people -- and moreover of the Arab nation or nations -- will not disappear with the death of the fighters. On the contrary, it is the first time that the Arab forces have succeeded in holding out for so long against the Israeli Army. The lightningstrike is finished for Israel; it is now faced with a real adversary. [end recording]

USE OF PRISONERS ON USSR PIPELINE TO BE PROBED

[Text] The French Government is taking seriously reports on the use of political prisoners for the construction of the Siberia-West Europe gas pipeline. The Quai d'Orsay has asked the French Embassy in Moscow to investigate the way in which the Euro-Siberian gas pipeline is being built.

In Paris the Soviet Embassy has categorically denied this, while condemning this propaganda which, it says, is aimed at sabotaging East-West cooperation.

LE MONDE VIEWS U.S., FRENCH STANCE ON OAU SUMMIT

PM061309 Paris LE MONDE in French 6 Aug 82 pp 1, 6

[Special correspondent Jean-Pierre Langellier dispatch]

[Text] Tripoli -- Did the United States, with the help of its Saudi ally, do all it could to "torpedo" Al-Qadhdhafi's summit? For the hotheaded colonel there is no doubt. He accuses "American imperialism" of bribing some African heads of state and threatens to confound both "corrupters" and "corrupted" by publishing documents compromising everyone.

Mr al-Qadhdhafi's complaints will doubtless be hard to substantiate. And it is amusing to hear the Libyan leader attacking, in the name of morality, methods which he has long since made his own. Even if proved, the American maneuvers and pressure are not enough in themselves to explain the failure of Tripoli. Mr al-Qadhdhafi's excesses, his expansionist views on the countries of the "Sahara belt," and in addition his financial or military support for African opposition forces, representative or not, from Dakar to Kampala and from Bangui to Khartoum, had obviously caused some firm hostility toward him even before Mr Reagan took up residence in the White House and before Washington could get a firm foothold in the Maghreb thanks to the Saharan conflict. Mr al-Qadhdhafi is today paying the price of his arrogance yesterday.

This does not mean that U.S. anti-Libyan activity has not had a decisive effect, by "tipping the balance" for enough of those who were hesitating. The countries opposed to the admission of the SADR (Saharan Arab Democratic Republic) had had the idea, like Nigeria, of going to Tripoli to present and defend their viewpoint. In the end they preferred the politics of the empty seat. What made them change their minds?

Without seeing the "hand of Washington" everywhere, one can still be disturbed by certain causes of shilly-shallying, surprised by some obstinate stands or struct, conversely, by some belated about-faces. Thus France, which favored the holding of the OAU summit, was apparently assured not long ago that Gabon would sent a delegation to the Council of Ministers. The Djibouti Government gave the impression of hestitating over what attitude to adopt for a long time. The same uncertainty was observed in Niger, Upper Volta and Togo. The first two, opposed to the admission, and the third, favorable to it, had nevertheless wanted a "massive participation" by African leaders in the summit.

Is it a coincidence that several of these countries are receiving growing financial aid from Saudi Arabia? Can Djibouti, for instance, ignore the advice of its chief financial backer? The Saudi factor is important in this matter, even if it does not explain everything. Riyadh has never forgiven Colonel al-Qadhdhafi for publicly insulting the royal family and calling for the liberation of the Islamic holy places. Africa has become the new battlefield for their struggle for influence. In the face of the Saudis' hard cash arguments, Libya, in the grip of a serious financial crisis, finds itself in a weak position.

In recent months the "26" have erred on the side of optimism. But their predictions had some appearance of logic: President Sekou Toure [of Guinea], they assured us, would not boycott Tripoli, for fear of suffering the same fate in 1983. Tunisia, seat of the Arab League, would not defy its neighbors too much. Africa would not neglect the OAU tribunal, which it so badly needs. All these calculationa proved false. And the "26" were far from predicting desertions from their midst: the enigmatic absence of Sierra Leone, with its whimsical diplomacy, or the defection of Uganda, annoyed by Libyan arms deliveries to the antigovernment guerrillas. Other people appeared better informed about President Obote's intentions, since Moroccan diplomats had placed him on the list of future absentees with certainty some weeks ago.

The boycott of the summit by a majority of heads of state constitutes a substantial defeat for French diplomacy. While affirming its neutrality on the Saharan affairs, Paris had come out clearly in favor of holding the summit as normal.

The French position seeks to be realistic: The OAU, Paris says, is a useful structure for dialogue, the only forum where Africans' feelings -- however discordant -- are expressed. True, its charter is in need of revision and its principles are often contradictory. But an imperfect institution is better than nothing. If the OAU collapses nobody will gain, except the two superpowers, which would then enjoy freedom of movement.

French Failure

Moreover in the short term the death of the OAU would do nothing to facilitate the quest for a negotiated settlement in the Sahara. As regards Libya, France made an optimistic bet. Exacerbating Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's isolation could only encourage him to strengthen his ties -- already close -- with Moscow. It is better to make him face his responsibilities and force him to learn sense. Has he not already begun, by withdrawing his army from Chad last year? He wants to chair the OAU. For a year, as the Africans decided in Nairobi? Why not? After all, he will have much less of a free hand than if he is kept in quarantine.

That has been France's line to its traditional friends in Africa in recent months. It must be noted today that this view did not "take." Not one of its allies -- apart from the Central African Republic -- has accepted this analysis since the Addis Ababa meeting. France's best friends are almost all boycotting Tripoli, while France finds itself off the mark. It will have to think about this setback.

The Americans, whom Paris deplores at least for their lack of subtlety, tried to capsize the Tripoli conference. Their total hostility toward Colonel al-Qadhdhafi prevailed over all other considerations. With the help of the Saharan situation, they exploited to the utmost the distrust felt by some of the continent toward the Libyan leader. Since Washington's total cessagion of Libyan oil purchases and the embargo on all exports of technological goods to Tripoli, Colonel al-Qadhdhafi has certainly taken the measure of American danger.

Mr al-Qadhdhafi will not be OAU president for now. But has Washington succeeded in increasing Libya's isolation in Africa? If the colonel succeeds in assembling some 20 heads of state and government, the United States will paradoxically have strengthened the cohesion of the progressive camp and increased the stature of the man who wants to be its leader.

LE MONDE REPORTS ON CHEYSSON'S CHINA VISIT

[R. P. Paringaux dispatch]

[Text] Beijing -- The political part of Mr Cheysson's visit to China, which began with some apprehension on the French side, ended this Monday 2 August with a meeting described as warm and friendly with CCP Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping. On Sunday Premier Zhao Ziyang "reiterated" the invitation to Mr Mitterrand to make an official visit to China. According to the Chinese formula Mr Mitterrand could come "next year, in spring blossom time."

Mr Cheysson's visit seems to have made it possible to dispel some clouds which had gathered over the past few months and were casting something of a shadow over French-Chinese relations. First it provided an opportunity for a broad international and bilateral review vital to clarifying the two sides' positions and intentions -- a vital precondition for a "new start," to use the French minister's expression. As regards French policy in the Kampuchean conflict in particular, Mr Cheysson seems to have essentially removed some of the rather acute Chinese apprehensions. During Mr Cheysson's meetings the atmosphere of the talks and the tone of the statements, which was reserved at first on the Chinese side, gradually became warmer every day.

Both sides reaffirmed the desire to revive dialogue at the highest level, the desire for a concerted search for common positions at the international level and, at the same time, for increased trade and economic, technical and cultural cooperation at the bilateral level. Mr Huang Hua expressed satisfaction at the "responsible and effective work" carried out in broadening relations. Mr Zhao Ziyang showed his appreciation of France's independent policy, its fight against the superpowers' hegemony and the interest it shows in the Third World. Both sides made arrangements for further contacts. The statements of good intentions now have to be put into practice and the process of revival has to be given the substance and quality vital to make the president's visit to the PRC next year an unqualified success.

Regarding the Kampuchean question, which occupied a major place in most of the talks, the Chinese seem satisfied in the short term with their guest's statements. Although differences remain, they prefer to stress areas of agreement. In the case of Kampuchea, as of Afghanistan, Mr Cheysson reaffirmed France's opposition to any invasion, the need for a withdrawal of foreign troops in keeping with UN resolutions and the right of peoples to independence and self-determination. However he explained to his interlocutors that there is no question of French opinion backing or supporting Mr Pol Pot's Khmer Rouges, to whom Beijing is giving its logistical and diplomatic support. France does not intend to support the new coalition government any more than it intends to recognize the government installed in Phnom Penh by the Vietnamese.

On the other hand Mr Cheysson noted France's favorable disposition toward the other two components of the Kampuchean resistance front: Prince Sihanouk and his former Prime Minister Son Sann. This partial rapprochement of viewpoints does not mean that the Chinese approve of the French policy of resuming economic aid to Hanoi and of a rapprochement with Hanoi -- a policy which runs counter to their anti-Vietnamese strategy and which the Chinese press vigorously condemned when it was implemented.

In addition Mr Cheysson and his interlocutors made a broad examination of international problems. That exercise gave the Chinese the opportunity to launch a strong indictment of the Soviets. It did not spark off fundamental differences between the two sides on other questions. On the Near East, however, positions are very close.

At the bilateral level the French ardently wish to remedy the trade imbalance now in China's favor by establishing more extensive industrial and technological cooperation, especially in the energy and transportation spheres. France, Mr Cheysson said, is not prepared to supply arms and offensive military equipment to China, but sales of nonoffensive equipment have not been ruled out. As regards the plan for a nuclear power station to be built by the French, the Chinese say that its implementation will depend on the technological, price and credit conditions granted by Paris. In the cultural sphere, and especially in relation to the teaching of the French language -- which has reached its lowest level in a long time and which the French minister was anxious to stress -- an agreement in principle was reached for Chinese television to show programs teaching the French language.

Finally, as regards the delicate Li Shuang affair [Footnote: Miss Li Shuang, a Chinese national engaged to a French diplomat, was arrested by the Chinese authorities in November 1981 while Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert was on an official visit to Beijing], the minister was anxious to be very discreet. However, according to his entourage Mr Cheysson never fails to raise what is generally termed "humanitarian cases" in his talks.

Mr Cheysson and those accompanying him are leaving Tuesday for 2 days touring the provinces before flying via Hong Kong for South Korea where more, particularly difficult, talks await them.

DAILY ASSAILS 'EGOISTICAL' U.S. POLICY

PM031501 Paris LE MONDE in French 1-2 Aug 82 p 1

[Maurice Duverger article]

[Text] Can the world's greatest power afford to pursue a policy of national egoism? The answer to that question determines relations between Europe and the United States and the fate of the whole universe. It is constantly being asked. It fades under presidents who embody the moralizing side of the collective culture and becomes more acute with those who have the businessman's style, all oscillating to some extent between the Bible and Wall Street. Mr Reagan's dynamism sharpens the corners which Mr Carter's weakness rounded. But essentially things do not change much. Some see in U.S. history an alternation between phases of introversion and phases of expansion, between isolationism and interventionism. In fact the two attitudes are constantly mixed. They stem from the same fundamental feeling: Other people are only important in relation to yourself. Sometimes they are ignored and sometimes they are used. That behavior developed quite naturally over the generations in a nation whose neighbors were not big enough to oppose its plans. Protected from intercontinental missiles, it tends to persist in the spheres of influence determined by the agreement of the two superpowers. Does the United States not unconsciously cherish the dream of generalizing the Yalta technique, replacing the Monroe Doctrine to extend its preserves to half of the world?

In any case it is showing lofty indifference to the interests of mankind in general and its allies in particular. By destroying the Bretton Woods system, the abandonment of the dollar's convertibility was the thing which really sparked off the world crisis which the oil blows later accentuated. It is still the fundamental obstacle preventing recovery. It is aggravated by the uncontrolled fluctuations of the greenback and by the insane level of interest rates. Of course U.S. economic recovery is the driving force vital to world economic recovery. But the absence of a stable international currency and the high price of credit are prolonging the depression for both.

Europe is greatly hampered by these obstacles, which make it pay a high price for the oil it does not have and make it pay the price of a flow of money being diverted toward the United States. It is directly victimizing its enterprises by trying to impose an embargo on their products manufactured under license and intended for the USSR. In this case there is nothing more specious than the argument of Western solidarity in face of the Soviets. Their military development is not favored any more by future currency earned from a gas contract than by the present supplies of U.S. grain. The latter make it possible to allot to arms production Russian workers who would otherwise be forced to produce that grain to feed their compatriots. The advantage is no greater when the workers in question are released by supplies of industrial equipment.

The West's common defense is weakened much more by the material crisis shaking the old continent, by the increasing threats to the Persian Gulf and by the splits which Washington's tougher line is causing in the Atlantic alliance. In fact the question asked at the beginning of this article was badly worded. All countries pursue policies of national egoism: small countries and big countries. Appeals for solidarity scarecely alter such situations. The precise problem is as follows: Is the United States going to understand that "its policy of egoism is contrary to its real national interest"?

If it allowed the second biggest industrial concentration in the world situated between the North Atlantic and the Oder-Neisse to fall into the USSR's sphere of influence, the latter would dominate the earth and its independence would not last very long. To envisage the possibility of that zone being subjected to limited nuclear battles, as President Reagan did not long ago, to aggravate its economic difficulties, as he is now doing, and to weaken cooperation with it by an omnipotent attitude which tends to transform allies into satellites is to strengthen the Soviet Union and sacrifice fundamental U.S. interests. The pacifism, neutralism and disarray spreading on this side of the ocean are increased by the egoistical policy pursued on the other side. After 4 years in which the flagship seemed to have no pilot it is now being steered without concern for the fleet. If in so doing it leads them onto the reefs, it would not escape itself.

SOCIALIST MINISTERS QUIT; GOVERNMENT RESIGNS

PSI Ministers Resign

AU062028 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Excerpts] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 6 -- Italian chief-of-state Sandro Pertini starts consultations with all political parties that have parliamentary representation Monday in a bid to settle the virtual crisis the Rome government entered today as quickly as possible.

Pertini comes home from his vacation in the Italian Alps tomorrow to formally receive Premier Giovanni Spadolini's resignation from office, expected to be offered right after a cabinet meeting at noon.

On Thursday, the seven Socialist Party (PSI) ministers in the cabinet announced plans to resign in protest against the parliamentary debacle, thereby sparking the crisis which will only become formal tomorrow when Spadolini announces his decision to quit to Pertini.

With next week's timetable of consultations set for Monday and Tuesday, the chief-of-state may be ready to appoint a premier-designate with the job of setting up a new government as early as Wednesday or Thursday.

Spadolini flew north to the Italian Alps today to consult with Pertini. No statements were issued about their meeting, except for the announcements that the cabinet will be called into session tomorrow at noon and the chief-of-state will return to Rome.

While the president and the premier were conferring in Selva di Val Gardena, the Socialist Party leadership in Rome gave its endorsement to the decision of the party's ministers to quit office.

PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi rejected criticisms of the move, saying "no one has the right to play down the seriousness of what happened."

If coalition members are free to defect in parliament, he asserted, "there is no credible majority anymore, and there is no possible governability".

"We could not turn the other cheek, Craxi argued to justify the Socialists move of sparking an untimely government crisis in the midst of Italy's August vacation period.

"A tough period of reflection now opens for the political and institutional affairs of our nation", he said.

Government Resigns

AU071950 Rome ANSA in English 1945 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 7 -- Premier Giovanni Spadolini and the 27 ministers in his five-party cabinet handed their resignations to head of state Sandro Pertini this afternoon to formally open Italy's latest government crisis.

Spadolini, who took office on June 28 last year as the nation's first non-Christian Democrat premier since shortly after the Second World War, thanked the 85-year-old president for the "affectionate confidence" with which he followed the work of the coalition.

The outgoing premier also noted that the sudden crisis "did not catch the executive tired and disarmed" and referred to the government commitment to the package of financial decrees and bills presented to Parliament on July 31.

Spadolini concluded his statement by affirming that "the only path to follow now, with determination and firmness, must be more than ever one of the solid commitments of political and other forces" in serving the interests of the country.

At the end of the last meeting of Spadolini's cabinet, the Christian Democrat Treasury minister, Beniamino Andreatta, disclosed that he was "very worried because the beginning of the economic recovery maneuver requires a working parliament and competent ministers" while "the prospects for early general elections push back the approval of the financial legislation".

On Monday, Pertini will open consultations beginning with meetings with the two former heads of state, Giuseppe Saragat and Giovanni Leone.

In the afternoon, he will confer with delegations from the Christian Democrat Party, the Socialist Party and the Communist Party.

By Wednesday, the president will have conferred with delegations from the other parties represented in Parliament.

COLOMBO HOLDS PHONE TALKS ON LEBANON PEACE FORCE

AU071524 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 7 -- Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo discussed the prospects for a multilateral peacekeeping force for Lebanon in telephone conversations with Premier Giovanni Spadolini and with officials in Washington, Paris and at United Nations headquarters in New York, it was learned here last night.

Foreign Ministry sources noted that the Palestine Liberation Organization, whose leaders are besieged by Israeli forces pushing in on west Beirut, explicitly referred to Italy, France and the United States when the Lebanese Government questioned the PLO on the makeup of a multilateral force along the lines of the United Nations recommendations.

Colombo's telephone conversations on the issue, these sources reported, took place Friday. The foreign minister is now in Brazil on a Latin American tour which began in Peru and will wind up in Argentina.

These sources also reported that before Colombo's departure for Latin America last weekend, the Italian ambassadors to Lebanon and Israel, who had been recalled to Rome, were instructed to return to their embassies to keep the Rome government up to date on the developments in the hostilities in Lebanon.

Spadolini on Peace Force

AU071601 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 7 -- Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini condemned the Israeli Government's persistent war actions in Lebanon and called on all sides, especially Israel, to observe the cease-fire agreement and abide by all United Nations resolutions on the conflict at a cabinet meeting in Rome today.

The Italian Government leader issued the statement on the Lebanese war before announcing to his ministers his decision to resign from office.

The continuation of the use of force in Lebanon, the violence of the fighting and the massive bombardments, he said, are extremely dangerous and may irreparably undermine the mediation efforts underway, "with tragic consequences for the civilian population, innocent victims of a conflict that may totally destroy the Lebanese capital".

It is "imperative", Spadolini stressed, that hostilities stop immediately as a first step towards a complete and speedy withdrawal of all foreign troops in Lebanon, except for those authorized to stay by the legitimate Lebanese Government.

The authority of that government, the Italian Government leader insisted, must be fully restored over the entire national territory.

On Spadolini's recommendation, the Rome government voiced its readiness to send an Italian military contingent to the Lebanese capital as part of a multinational peace-keeping force.

The Italian Government, Spadolini continued, stands ready to move to assure that the negotiation efforts underway, aimed at restoring normal conditions in Lebanon, receive full support and solidarity.

The same goes for the steps taken by the United Nations secretary general to see that the decisions taken by the Security Council, upon the Lebanese Government's request, are implemented. These include plans to deploy U.N. observers in and around Beirut.

Spadolini also argued that all signs of flexibility from the warring sides, not least of all the indications from the Palestinian leadership of a readiness for dialogue, must be exploited in the "urgent" peace-making effort for the sake of assuring the broadest possible success in negotiations for a comprehensive settlement.

Italy will not fail to take any appropriate step, he concluded, to make sure that the negotiations process prevails "unequivocally" and that the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) is encouraged to play a political role that could lead to mutual recognition between Israel and the Palestinians.

[Text] Rome, Aug 8 (AFP) -- Two Italian army officers are in Beirut to study the logistics of deploying an Italian contingent with the proposed international force to supervise a Palestinian pull-out, the Defence Ministry said here today.

A communique said that the Italian contingent was ready to leave for Lebanon as soon as required.

The force comprised a battalion of the elite "Bersaglieri", with 529 volunteer soldiers, and 200 vehicles including tanks.

CUBAN VICE MINISTER REQUESTS POLITICAL ASYLUM

PA081231 Paris AFP in Spanish 1212 GMT 8 Aug 82

[Text] Madrid, 8 Aug (AFP) -- Luis Negrete, 34-year old Cuban vice minister of industry, "requested political asylum in Spain" and is "under official protection at an undetermined place," the Madrid newspaper EL PAIS reported today.

It has not been possible to establish contact with any spokesman for the Spanish Foreign Relations Ministry for confirmation of this report.

Barbara Melcom, Negrete's sister, who lives in the United States, confirmed for the newspaper that her brother has defected and said that he plans to take up residence in the United States.

Melcom added that she spoke briefly with her brother on the telephone last Wednesday, 2 days after a U.S. official advised her of the matter.

Luis Negrete is under the protection of Spanish authorities, in order to prevent possible reprisals by Cuban authorities, his sister explained.

She disclaimed any knowledge of why her brother, a member of the Communist Party of Cuba who is married and whose two children are still in Havana, decided to request political asylum.

UCD SAID NOT LOOKING FOR COALITION PARTNERS

LD062336 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 2200 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] A relaxed conversation onboard a plane could be to blame for everything. Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo talked with reporters off the cuff. There were no taboo subjects and no off-the-record. The talk was of Spain and general elections and at one point he said the UCD [Union of the Democratic Center] was looking for a coalition and a partner -- at least this was how he was understood. All this was 48 hours ago. Today, more calmly, the prime minister insisted that the UCD would go to the polls alone. Luz Rodriguez reports:

Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo has denied newspaper reports and said the UCD is not preparing any coalition. In a news conference before leaving for Bogota, Colombia, he said his impromptu remarks to reporters accompanying him in the plane were misunderstood.

Special correspondent Angel Gomez Fuetes recorded the prime minister's denial:

[Begin Calvo-Sotelo recording] The UCD must stand at the next elections as the UCD, in other words without coalitions or federations entered into beforehand. I have said this repeatedly over the last few days. The last time was at a press conference after the cabinet meeting last Friday, that is, a week ago. As a result, I am not working for any preelectoral coalition or federation between the UCD and other groups akin to us or stemming from the UCD itself. This does not mean I do not regret that there has been a break-up of forces in the center and that I do not realize that this break up of forces could, in an electoral system like ours, in an electoral system like the Spanish one, produce results unfavorable for groups occupying the center. MADRID REPORTS ON CALVO-SOTELO'S ECUADOR VISIT

LD061106 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] [Announcer] Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo ends his 48-hour visit to Quito, the capital of Ecuador today. From here he goes to Colombia to attend tomorrow's installation of the new president, Belisario Betancur. Calvo-Sotelo's tour is Spain's most important diplomatic offensive in Latin America in recent years and coincides with the new political situation in that region following the Malvinas war. In a clear reference to the recent conflict, Carlos Robles Piquer, president of the Institute of Latin American Cooperation and a member of the Spanish delegation accompanying the prime minister, said that Spain had avoided making European decisions against Argentina which could have been erroneous.

During the talks held between the Spanish prime minister and the president of Ecuador, the latter made an important political proposal: the creation of a Latin American committee which would act during times of crisis. Angel Gomez Fuentes now reports from Quito, the capital of Ecuador:

[Begin recording] [Gomez Fuentes] Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo, the Spanish prime minister, and Oswaldo Hurtado, the Ecuadorean leader, agreed on the need to boost relations between the two countries during their 1-hour talk. As far as foreign policy is concerned, they made a special analysis of relations between Europe and Latin America, relations which are now at a low point because of the Malvinas crisis. After reiterating that our relations with Latin America have priority status, Calvo-Sotelo said that Spain would help the Latin American countries to realize the need to maintain close links with Europe. The Spanish prime minister said that Spain's NATO membership would enable it to act as the spokesman for Latin American anxieties.

For his part, Oswaldo Hurtado said that friendship with Spain is a fundamental aspect of Ecuadorian foreign policy and he expects Spain to play a prominent role in Latin America. In this respect, President Oswlado Hurtado would like to have Spain's support for his plan to create a Latin American committee to act in crises. Ecuador's goal is to reform the inter-American defense treaty, which served no purpose in the Malvinas war, and at the same time the ability to act outside the OAS which is now totally dominated by the United States and almost serves its interests, as was shown during the Malvinas war. Calvo-Sotelo expressed interest in the Ecuadorean proposal:

[Calvo-Sotelo] In principle, we are following a line very close to that (?held by Ecuador).

[Gomez Fuentes] Calvo-Sotelo said that Spain should not be absent from any attempt to establish Latin American unity, and he made Oswaldo Hurtado aware of this:

[Calvo-Sotelo] I believe that at the moment there is a desire to overcome the difficulties and create a true Hispanic community from which my country, Spain, the mother country, cannot be absent.

[Gomez Fuentes] In short, there was broad agreement between Calvo-Sotelo and Oswaldo Hurtado in the political sphere. This was not the case in the economic sphere, where there are grave problems due to the fact the balance of trade favors Spain by a ratio of 10 to 1. The Spanish delegation had a meeting with the Ecuadorean minister of finance and 12 experts to try to overcome this imbalance in the long term. It does notseem that this is going to be easy, because the main Ecuadorean export products -- oil, coffee, bananas and fish -- are not easy to introduce into the Spanish market. In any event, imports of coffee and oil will increase. They also analyzed cooperation projects. There are possibilities for Spanish companies in the mining, electrical and fishing sectors.

Calvo-Sotelo also made a brief statement in which he said that the Middle East is the problem which most preoccupies Spanish foreign policy. He set out our country's viewpoint on the Palestinian problem which is now the key to the conflict in the Middle East:

[Calvo-Sotelo] At the moment the Middle East problem, because of its current importance, but for many weeks the Malvinas was was the problem which most concerned us. [sentence as heard] Our position is clear. It is always based on a rejection of the use of force — force should not be used to resolve international conflicts — and it is also based on the need for the recognition of the Palestinians' right to have their own land, their own fatherland.

[Gomez Fuentes] Calvo-Sotelo ends his 48-hour visit to Quito today. Bogota will be the second and more politically interesting leg of his Latin American tour. [end recording]

CALVO-SOTELO ON ATTEMPTED COUP, TERRORISM

PA080359 Buenos Aires LATIN in Spanish 1331 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] Quito, 7 Aug (LATIN-REUTER) — Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo has said here that at present "there is no threat of a military coup" in his country.

"As an institution, the army is perfectly loyal to the Spanish Constitution and disciplined about the government's orders," he said in the course of a lengthy news conference held last night for local newsmen at the end of his official 2-day visit to Ecuador.

Recalling the attempt against the government which Col Antonio Tejero led in February last year, Calvo-Sotelo described it as a "failed coup, which the immense majority of the army neither supported nor put up with, as it was staged by a small group of officers."

"At this moment there is no military problem in Spain and its army has never been Franco-ized [franquizado]," he said in answer to a question about the possible existence of military loyalties to the government which Gen Francisco Franco headed for 40 years.

"Undoubtedly, many officers and Spanish political leaders made their careers during General Franco's regime. However, this does not mean they have not now loyally accepted the Spanish Constitution or are not now at the government's disposal," he explained.

Calvo-Sotelo refused to accept the existence of a Spanish army that was "nostaligcally loyal to the memory of General Franco, who is in history for all Spaniards but not in politics."

"In Spain," he said, "there is just one power: civilian power. The armed forces are subordinated to it, as the constitution establishes when it attributes the military policy to the government."

Calvo-Sotelo expanded on his views on current domestic policy by admitting that his powers include dissolving congress and advancing the date of parliamentary elections.

"However, if you ask me how I plan to exercise that power, I will not answer because that is one of the political weapons that the president of the government has in his hands and it would be naive to reveal my plans. One thing I can say is that elections will be held in the spring of 1983," he stressed.

On the subject of the problems posed by terrorism, Calvo-Sotelo said it is "a plague affecting Spain and other countries in all latitudes."

"However," he added, "terrorist activity in Spain has declined in the last 2 years due to the greater effectiveness of police action against it and because slowly but surely the terrorist groups active in the Basque country have become dissociated from the people in the area."

FINLAND, SWEDEN ON LATEST SUBMARINE INCIDENTS

LD061738 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Unidentified submarines have again been observed in the waters of the Aland Sea. The border guards have intensified their surveillance activity since the weekend, when submarines were found to be moving near Finnish territorial waters. According to the border guards staff, the intensified surveillance is to be continued for the time being. Jussi Nurmi reports from Turku:

[Nurmi] As far as Finland is concerned, the submarine debate started just before midsummer. On 16 June it was noted that a submarine violated our territorial waters. The vessel was driven away from our waters by means of warning charges from the direction of Aland. The border guards staff points out that the latest case cannot be compared with the incident in June. This time in the area of unfortified Aland warning charges have only been used to show the position of the border line and to warn the submarines against crossing it. The intensified surveillance is based on observations made on 30 July and 1 August by the coast guard. On those days observations were made of submarines moving below the surface and in this connection it is possible that our territorial waters were violated. Besides coast guard vessels navy patrol vessels are taking part in the intensified surveillance. The 30-meter vessels are equipped with echo-sounding gear. Since the weekend further observations of submarines have been made in close proximity of our territorial waters.

The border guards staff stresses that the situation is by no means alarming. Surveillance has been intensified as an entirely normal measure to prevent territorial violations. The use of warning charges is also in accordance with normal procedure. According to the border guards staff, the intensifed surveillance will be continued for the time being.

Foreign Minister Par Stenback noted yesterday to representatives of the Swedish Foreign Ministry that during the summer submarines have violated Finnish territorial waters.

The submarines have also aroused high excitement among the Finnish public. The coast guard has received a number of reports of so-called submarine sightings in the vicinity of Maarianhamina and elsewhere, all in an area where it is impossible for submarines to navigate.

[Announcer] Foreign Minister Par Stenback did not want to comment today on his statement made yesterday, according to which several submarines have violated Finnish territorial waters in the Gulf of Bothnia during the summer. According to the foreign minister, he has nothing to add to his statement of yesterday.

Sweden has not officially commented on the statement made by our foreign minister concerning the submarine observations. The leadership of the Swedish Armed Forces has recently discussed in public the signifiance and aims of the violations of the territorial waters. Marja Nikkila reports from Stockholm:

[Nikkila] The Soviet submarine that ran aground off Karlskrona last summer gave rise in Sweden to a discussion about the military-political importance of the Baltic. The Finnish-Swedish cooperation in submarine incidents mentioned in Finland by Secretary of State Leif Leifland from the Swedish Foreign Ministry is commented on by the Foreign Ministry here which says that this statement should not give rise to too far-reaching conclusions. Joint supervision of northernmost sea areas has already been mentioned in Sweden, including exchange of information. Dozens of Warsaw Pact and NATO submarines continue to navigate in the Baltic and in its vicinity. After the latest submarine incident Swedish experts on foreign and defense matters hold the view that these submarines carry more nuclear weapons than previously estimated.

CENTER, COMMUNIST PARTIES CENSURE ISRAEL

PM090943 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 5 Aug 82 p 4

[Text] Both the Center Party Eduskunta Group and the Communist Party Politburo condemned Israel's military action in Lebanon Wednesday.

The Center Party's Eduskunta Group and the party's ministers, who were holding their summer meeting in Jyvaskyla, said in a statement that Israel's military action violates Lebanon's territorial integrity and has caused boundless human suffering among the civilian population.

The Eduskunta group gives its full support to the action taken by the United Nations to reestablish peace. It also stressed that the Palestinians' political and statehood rights should be recognized as part of a peaceful settlement.

For its part the Communist Party Politburo said that Israel's attack on Lebanon is reminiscent of genocide. Despite world public opinion Israel is continuing, with U.S. support, its policy of terrorism, the Politburo said in its statement.

The Finnish Communist Party called for swift action from Finland's foreign policy makers condemning Israel and its supporter, the United States. The Communist Party also wants Finland to give political and humanitarian support to the PLO. The United Nations should increase its pressure on Israel, the statement said.

Both the Center Party Eduskunta Group and the Communist Party Politburo appealed for Finnish citizens to support the collections now being made for humanitarian aid for Lebanon.

OFFICIAL URGES RENEWAL OF UNIFIL MANDATE

PM060943 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 4 Aug 82 p 3

[Terje Svabo report]

[Text] "Norway is concerned that the mandate for the UN Force in Lebanon has not been renewed, despite the fact that it is due to run out 19 August. If no definite decision is reached in the course of the next few days, Norway can see no other solution than an interim extension of the mandate," Norwegian Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Eivinn Berg said in an interview with AFTENPOSTEN.

Yesterday Berg briefed the Young Conservative summer course at Reistad in Lier on international questions. He commented particularly on the situation in the Middle East and pointed out that the mandate for the UNIFIL force runs out in 2 weeks.

Under Secretary Berg told AFTENPOSTEN that the UN Secretary Council must take the initiative for a renewal of the mandate for the force. Berg stressed that Norway would take an active part in the debate on a new mandate and that this debate should be started in the next few days. He said that conditions attaching to the new mandate have already been discussed by the Lebanon committee chaired by the under secretary.

"If the Security Council considers that the UN forces do have a peace-keeping mission in Lebanon, Norway will stress in the debate on the new mandate that the UN forces' peace-keeping must be meaningful. The force must play a sensible role in peace-keeping activities," Berg said.

Berg pointed to the situation in southern Lebanon and in particular to the fact that no solution has yet been found to the problems of West Beirut as the reason the Security Council has still not raised the question of a new UNIFIL mandate. In reply to a direct question Berg said that Norway is skeptical about an international force for Lebanon and would prefer the peace-keeping force to remain under UN control.

Berg said that the Norwegian UN troops are today busy supplying humanitarian aid to the civilian population in the area. In all the government has granted 700,000 kroner for humanitarian aid provided by the troops, and the under secretary praised the men's efforts. In addition the under secretary said that humanitarian aid work has helped maintain morale among the Norwegian troops while they have been waiting for the situation in the area to be clarified.

ROLANDHIS MEETS IRAQI ENVOY ON DRAFT RESOLUTION

NC081850 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 8 Aug 82 p 1

[Excerpt] Turkey has intensified its anti-Cyprus activities within the Nonaligned Movement by using the special relations that it maintains with some of these countries as a means of applying pressure. An example is Turkey's pressure on the Iraqi Government to change the draft resolution on Cyprus which Baghdad is expected to submit for approval at the Nonaligned summit scheduled to convene in Baghdad at the beginning of September.

The Turkish actions seem to have borne fruit, because the only Iraqi oil pipeline abroad passes through Turkey. Through this pipeline Iraq exports oil worth $8 billion. The Iraqi Government has prepared a draft resolution which is far from the Havana Nonaligned summit resolution, which stipulates that the draft must be based on the final decision of the summit conference.

This development seriously threatens the good relations that the Cyprus Government maintains with Iraq.

The Cyprus Foreign Ministry reacted immediately in order to avoid future confrontation. Foreign Minister Rolandhis made the appropriate strong protests to his Iraqi counterpart, Sa'dun Hammadi. In view of this, the Iraqi Foreign Affairs Ministry has sent the Iraqi ambassador in Athens to Nicosia, and yesterday he met Mr Rolandhis on this matter.

During the meeting Mr Rolandhis explained Cyprus' position on the resolution that Iraq will submit, as a host country, at the Nonaligned summit conference. Mr Rolandhis asked that the resolution be drafted in accordance with the final resolution adopted at the Havana summit conference and with the movement's relevant principles.

Of course it is uncertain whether the conference will convene in Baghdad because of the Iraq-Iran war and the practical difficulties that this situation creates. The Nonaligned Movement is going through its greatest danger of being split up on the eve of this conference.

KIPRIANOU RESPONDS TO DENKTAS' 'THREATS'

NC071124 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] President Kiprianou denounced to the world community the threats Denktas made yesterday regarding the settlement of Famagusta and various other activities, adding that the possible implementation of these threats would constitute a most serious provocation and would strike a serious blow at every effort to promote a peaceful solution in accordance with UN resolutions and the summit agreements.

The president also stated that the Cyprus Government will continue to be vigilant and closely watch every development, doing everything possible to confront the situation. Refuting Denktas' claims, the president stressed that an economic embargo does not exist and has never existed against the Turkish Cypriots, adding what Denktas and Ankara call an economic embargo is nothing else but the government's effort to thwart the illegal exploitation of Greek Cypriot properties in the occupied areas and the usurpation of the rights of the uprooted refugees and the state.

These measures, the president pointed out, are not aimed at the Turkish Cypriots who are the victims of the situation created by the Turkish invasion of the island. He also stressed that Denktas' threats about reprisals in case the so-called economic embargo continues constitute part of the extortionist policy followed by the chauvinistic Turkish Cypriot leadership.

As regards the threat for a gradual settlement in Famagusta, the president emphasized that such an act would be contrary to the UN Security Council resolution and to the provisions of the summit agreement between Kiprianou and Denktas which clearly stipulates the resettlement of the Famagusta inhabitants and, in fact, calls this a matter of priority.

President Kiprianou added that the Cyprus Government intends to revert to this issue at the appropriate moment despite the Turkish Cypriot side's systematic refusal to adhere to this provision.

DENKTAS REJECTS KIPRIANOU STATEMENT ON MAKARIOS

TA061659 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the independence of Cyprus is a natural outcome of the resistance of the Turkish Cypriot community.

Replying to a statement by the leader of the Greek Cypriot administration, Kiprianou, to the effect that Makarios had exerted efforts for Cyprus' independence -- which both the Turkish and Greek Cypriots have enjoyed -- Denktas said that Kiprianou cannot make the Turkish Cypriots see Makarios, who during all his life struggled for enosis, as a disciple of friendship and independence. Noting that had it not been for the resistance of the Turkish Cypriot community and the [word indistinct] and support of Turkey, Cyprus would have become a Greek colony, Denktas added: Kiprianou cannot prevent us from cursing Makarios -- who was a modern Rasputin for the Turkish Cypriots, a bloody pope, a fanatic enemy of the Turks, a leader who pledged to (?revive) Byzantium, and a fanatic racist -- over the graves of the Turkish Cypriots he killed in the name of enosis between 1963 and 1974. Denktas said: It should be our duty to introduce to the world this (?mentality) capable of [word indistinct] whole villages because the current Greek Cypriot leadership has announced that it is following in the footsteps of this Rasputin called Makarios.

PLO, NEW DEMOCRACY STATEMENTS ON 'ARAFAT VISIT

NC071641 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 7 Aug 82 p 1

[Excerpt] The PLO office in Athens issued a statement on 5 August in which it expressed its "great surprise" over New Democracy Chairman Averof's 5 August remarks (on the government statement that there is an open invitation for Yasir 'Arafat and his entourage to visit Greece).

Among other things, the PLO stressed that "it does not accept that a probable official visit by the PLO chairman to Greece will produce negative reaction by certain Arab countries."

The statement added: "We expect Mr Averof -- who in the past has expressed his support for the Palestinian people's national rights and who had a meeting with Yasir 'Arafat in Athens last December -- to join those who do not accept this inhuman slaughter by strongly condemning Israeli action."

Last night New Democracy issued the following statement:

"In reply to the statement issued by the PLO representation in Athens, it is pointed out that in an 8 June statement, the New Democracy chairman condemned the use of arms in Lebanon and expressed the wish that a way be found to restore peace and order in the shortest possible time in accordance with the principles of the UN Charter and its relevant resolutions on the question.

"Moreover, the friendliness toward the Palestinian people clearly emerged in Mr Averof's 5 August statement. In any case, this statement contained no malice toward the unfortunate Palestinian people.

"This is one thing, while the duty of the official opposition party, and every Greek, to comment on specific actions by the Greek Government is another."

NEW DEMOCRACY HITS LIBYAN 'INTERVENTION'

NC082024 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 8 Aug 82 pp 1, 14

[Excerpts] A new and unacceptable case of intervention in Greek domestic policy occurred yesterday -- this time from Libya -- with the government's tolerance.

The Libyan intervention -- just like yesterday's by the PLO -- had to do with the criticism leveled by New Democracy against the embassy's [as published] handling of the Palestinian issue.

The difference is that the Libyan intervention -- in the form of a statement by its embassy in Athens -- uses unacceptable terms to describe New Democracy deputies, attempting to present them as "victims of Zionist propaganda."

New Democracy reacted with its own statement in which it stresses that "it is unacceptable for foreign missions to comment on the host country's domestic policies."

The government maintained a peculiar silence both on the Libyan statement yesterday and on the one issued by the PLO because, obviously, it considers it useful to have its opponents attacked by foreign countries.

The Libyan Embassy statement, which was sent to newspapers yesterday for publication, is as follows:

"We, like many others, were surprised by the actions of certain New Democracy deputies who accused the government of antisemitic tactics by proclaiming its total alignment with the Palestinian people and condemning the barbaric and criminal activities of the Zionist gangs.

"We in no way want to adopt a position of supporting the government but, because the accusation has to do with an Arab issue and a political position adopted by the Greek masses, through their various representatives, both political and civil, in support of the Palestinian struggle, it is imperative that certain things be put in their proper place and that certain truths be underlined so that those who attempt to distort the facts do not go unanswered.

" -- The allegation reminds us of the original reaction of the representative of the Zionist gangs in Athens when he described the Greek peoples' marches and demonstrations, which swept past the mission of these gangs, as an antisemitic movement and as part of the world's enmity toward the Jewish people.

" -- This definition is suspicious and expected, because it follows the same course as that followed by certain poisonous pen-pushers who have tried very hard to find excuses for the barbaric Zionist attack and to destroy the Greek position -- both official and popular -- which supports the Arab cause.

" -- This definition is considered an effort to ridicule the Greek people's will and position, which are full of nobility and humanism stemming from religious, moral, cultural and historic roots. It is thus firmly established that these people did not hasten to support the Palestinian people out of racial motives but only as a natural response to the history of the Greek people, which is full of a series of struggles and hard battles for liberty.

" -- Use of this definition by certain representatives of the Greek people in parliament indisputably proves that they have fallen victim to Zionist propaganda and the filthy methods it has used ever since the antihistoric Zionist movement first appeared. This, however, has become a wornout trick which can only deceive the flippant or idiots.

" -- It would be better if all those who proclaim themselves to be protectors of international Zionism took the trouble to defend the women and children and the old people who are being murdered daily by cluster and phosphorus bombs in the greatest massacre ever witnessed by the world on the orders of Begin and Sharon. Racism, hatred and distortion are self-evident.

" -- The attempt to distort facts and to destroy historic evidence was the brainchild of international Zionism, which continually deceives and lulls international public opinion in order to be able to implement its satanic plans and goals. This filthy and hateful method, however, ceased to produce results because it was unmasked, thanks to the campaign of activization and enlightenment of the masses, which are now fully aware of the facts.

" -- Cheap and insignificant efforts and allegations will convince nobody, because they have more or less become the object of jokes and ridicule, and those who plan them -- thanks to their impotence -- have already been relegated to the trashcan of history."

In answer to the above, the central office of New Democracy issued the following statement:

"Given the day and the time at which the Libyan Embassy statement was issued, it was impossible to inform the leadership of the party in time, or at least to inform the deputies who signed the interpellation.

"Irrespective of the accuracy of views expressed on certain matters of substance, certain passages of the Libyan Embassy statement require our immediate reaction in order to stress that in countries where a system of political democracy and a multiparty parliament exists, it is unthinkable that foreign missions should comment -- in the tone used by the Libyan Embassy statement and using terms such as 'poisonous pen-pushers' and 'trashcans of history' -- upon matters connected with the host country's domestic policy."

OIL, NATURAL GAS DISCOVERY -- The public oil corporation has discovered an oil and natural gas deposit in the sea west of Katakolon. The first results of tests indicate that average production could be 1,000 barrels per day. The quality of the oil is good, but there are hydrosulphate and carbon dioxide in the natural gas. An initial assessment leads to the conclusion that the deposit would yield several million barrels. However, the limited area of the deposit coupled with the fact that it lies 270 meters below the sea leads to the conclusion that the deposit is not for immediate exploitation. EVREN ISSUES STATEMENT ON AIRPORT ATTACK

[Head of State Gen Kenan Evren's 8 August 1982 message to the Turkish nation in connection with the Armenian terrorist attack launched at Ankara's Esenboga Airport on 7 August 1982 -- read by announcer]

[Text] My Dear Citizens, our nation witnessed with deep hatred and grief an armed attack carried out by an international Armenian terrorist organization called ASALA at Ankara's Esenboga Airport on 7 August, an attack which resulted in the death of nine persons, including three policemen, and the wounding of 72 persons. Whatever the source of this incident, it has opened an incurable wound of rage and indignation in the hearts of all Turkish citizens. It is diffucult to understand what ASALA and s[illegible]ar international terrorist organizations -- which are composed of a handful of [words indistinct] murderers -- are trying to make the Turkish nation do through such inhuman and monstrous attacks which indiscriminately kill or wound.

It should be known to all the countries that shelter, grant nearly legal status and even support -- for fear that the terrorist actions might spread into their own lands -- the Armenians and terrorist groups who, under the protection of the countries of which they are citizens and under the guise of innocence, get involved in all sorts of dirty businesses and intrigues, and who materially and morally and encourage these organizations for their personal interests -- it should be known to all the countries that shelter these monsters that the Turkish nation is the proud guardian of the country's unity and integrity within the borders drawn by our war of independence. It is like a huge granite rock that breaks up and eliminates the wild waves even if the latter manage to break away a few small particles of that rock.

The Turkish nation has given numerous martyrs to this end over the centuries and it has sworn to sacrifice many more martyrs for this principle. The Turkish Armed Forces will continue to fight these international terrorist organizations with determination and ardor and they will continue to bring to light their nests inside and outside the country.

Our people must be very careful and help the security forces and the martial law commanders must use all their legal powers. This is of utmost importance in the struggle to catch, as quickly as possible, all the terrorists who have infiltrated our country.

I would like to once again point out the necessity for the countries which claim to be the champions of human rights and for their international organizations to set aside their opportunistic and politically oriented activities which meddle in a country's domestic affairs and even attack that country's sovereignty turning instead to more humanitarian and civilized aims such as establishing cooperation that will eliminate the scourge of international terrorism from the face of the earth.

I extend my deepest condolences to the families of our policemen and the other innocent persons who lost their lives in the incident. I wish the wounded a speedy recovery. The grief of our nation is very deep. An accounting for the lost lives and the shed blood will be made.

I urge my citizens to act calmly and prudently and not to be tricked by these organizations with dark aims which have nothing to do with being Armenian or by the sources that guide these organizations.

Ulusu Statement

TA081810 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 8 Aug 82

[Statement, dated 8 August 1982, by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu on the Armenian terrorists' attack on Esenboga Airport on 7 August 1982 -- recorded]

[Excerpts] My Dear Citizens, I am here because of a deplorable incident that has caused us great sorrow.

Obviously, it is a great mistake to see the attack launched by Armenian murder gangs at Esenboga Airport yesterday as an action aimed exclusively against Turkey. The attack's aspect concerning Turkey is the fact that it is a pitiful action that can lead to no results, that it is a common attack and the murder of innocent people. The only result these inhuman murders can bring about for their perpetrators is to stain them and the community they belong to and to condemn them once again before humanity. To expect any other result is to daydream.

The most important aspect of the attack carried out yesterday is the fact that it showed once again the dimensions reached by terrorism which has become a common calamity for the international community. The main factor that encourages and provokes such murders is the underestimation of their danger by certain states or the latter's tolerance of these murders because they believe themselves to be outside the threat. Certain recent developments have shown that there is no country that will remain unscathed if international terrorism is established as a tolerable method. These developments have also shown that tolerance and passivity -- due to a fear of terrorism -- are not a solution. It would be very useful for all countries to realize that it is high time to cope collectively with terrorist incidents. I repeat, the issue does not concern Turkey only. It is the common problem of the international community. Consequently, it is of increasing importance for the countries which so far have not participated in the collective work against terrorism in proportion to the gravity of the problem to take into consideration the dimensions reached by the danger and to display the serious and sincere concern the problem deserves.

Unless all the states undertake a serious and determined part in the collective struggle, the deplorable incidents in which innocent people are killed will not end. The moral responsibility for that will lie with the states that have not coped with the terrorist incidents with sincerity and determination.

With this in mind, I call on all the states of the world to participate in a sincere and determined struggle against terrorism.

ASALA Assumes Responsibility

TA071740 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1730 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Text] A person called news agency offices in Athens in order to notify that the Armenian association ASALA assumed responsibility for the Ankara incident. The person added that the operation was codenamed "Erzurum" and that it was implemented by the Pierre Gulumyan suicide group of the organization. Gulumyan is the Armenian killed in Paris last week apparently while preparing a homemade bomb.

Another person who called the AP news agency offices in Beirut said in Arabic that the operation was carried out in protest of the occupation of Armenian lands. He added that the Erzurum operation was carried out by the members of the Harmiyan Hayrik suicide group.

EVREN 'MISSION' TO END IRAN-IRAQ WAR DISCUSSED

NC080810 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 4 Aug 82 pp 1, 11

[Sedat Ergin report]

[Text] Ankara -- Turkey has shifted its efforts within the Islamic Conference -- which aspires to put an end to the continuing war between Iraq and Iran, its two southeastern neighbors -- to a bilateral level and has intensified its efforts in this direction. These top level efforts being conducted by Turkey can be described as "sounding."

Turkey's exploratory efforts began with a special message from Head of State Kenan Evren to President 'Ali Khamene'i of Iran about 2 weeks ago at the beginning of the Bayram holidays.

In his message, Evren expresed his anxiety over the continuation of the war and the hope that it will be terminated. In the meantime, the message sought to obtain Iran's views.

The Iranian president answered Evren's message without delay. He sent his special envoy (Mustafa Mir Salem) to Erdek where Evren was vacationing. The message was handed to Head of State Evren in Foreign Minister Turkmen's presence.

As soon as he received Iran's reply, head of state Evren sent a special similar message to Iraq's head of state Saddam Husayn at the beginning of last week. Saddam's reply came on 30 July through his Foreign Affairs Minister Hammadi. Like Mir Salem, Hammadi too went to Erdek and delivered his reply to Evren.

No details have been divulged by official circles regarding the contents of the messages exchanged. The only information obtained is that the messages sent aimed at sounding the views of the sides concerned. Another point to which diplomatic circles draw attention is that the messages were not sent simultaneously but successively. Turkey, which had so far been expressing its anxieties to both sides simultaneously through diplomatic channels, has now -- for the first time -- abandoned this method and adopted a new one.

According to news that leaked, both sides are at this stage maintaining their positions. Following this first stage, which was confined to exploration Prime Minister Ulusu is going to Tehran this week. This is interpreted as shifting efforts to a still higher level and exploring the possibility of mediation. Ulusu is definitely going to Tehran. It is however, stated that a similar visit to Baghdad is out of the question for the time being.

Although Turkey had so far been expressing its anxieties to both sides unilaterally, it has pursued its efforts for finding a solution within structure of the five-member peace committee of the Islamic Conference. Undertaking the initiative alone this time is evaluated as an important development from Turkey's point of view.

It has not yet been ascertained whether the Iranian and Iraqi views are becoming more flexible in the direction of ending the war. Evren's messages and Ulusu's subsequent visit to Tehran and Baghdad were taken up at the press briefing held yesterday at the Foreign Ministry. Responding to such questions as "Is Turkey undertaking mediation work?" Foreign Ministry Spokesman Nazmi Akiman said: "No. We could put it this way: We are expressing our worries, and seeking to obtain their views within the framework of developments. They are thus expressing their views."

Responding to another question: "The United States wants us to mediate. Is this true?" Spokesman Akiman simply said: "I have heard such reports."

FURTHER CRITICISM OF DRAFT CONSTITUTION NOTED

Consultative Assembly Debate

TA061632 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1600 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, 6 Aug (AA) -- A member of the Consultative Assembly, Ismail Arar suffered a heart attack after taking the floor in Thursday afternoon's session to criticize the draft constitution submitted by the committee.

Head of State Gen Kenan Evren and other members of the National Security Council entered the audience section to follow the debate.

Arar, in an hour long statement, found the draft constitution "disillusioning," devoid of unifying and convincing elements.

It would be misleading to put all the blame for the pre-September 1980 situation on the 1961 Constitution, Arar said, for it would lead one to overlook the other factors.

Arar claimed the draft seemed to follow closely proposals for constitutional amendments by one of the two major parties of the 1960's and 70's, reminding the Assembly that an opposition front had formed in reaction to the 1961 draft constitutions before the referendum, and a similar but different opposition front seemed to be forming now.

The Turkish people looked favorably upon a strong government by tradition, Arar said, but also expected "justice" from it.

The major function of modern constitutions was to find the "equilibrium" between the rights and obligations of the individual and the state, he noted, thus replacing the concept of the "l'etat, c'est moi."

It would be wrong to provide in the basic law for institutions of an extraordinary transition period, Arar said.

He noted the draft gave 27 separate powers to the president, which tended to imply a presidential system, but the election of the president was taken from the parliamentary system. "We should play the game by its proper rules," he commented.

Arar disapproved of extending presidential powers too far, adding, "we have unlimited confidence in current leaders," "but men are mortal, and I would be deeply concerned about who would be filling this post in future."

Arar feared the true president under the current draft would be the target of political quarrels, and would find himself in the position of an "isolated individual."

Member from Mardin Besir Hamitogullari said at least 100 draft articles, half of the document, needed revision.

A constitution was a "national contract," he commented, and would be short-lived if it "disregarded" the individuals who made up the civil service, small business, and labor. The current draft would not be a good basis for stable socioeconomic and political development, Hamitogullari claimed, reminding the Assembly that frequent constitutional amendments increased instability.

Turkey needed to be strong in the presence of enemies at home and abroad which hoped for "an oppressive or weak government" in order to prepare for the [word indistinct] country.

There was need for a 5 or 7 year restoration period, Hamitogullari said, and a strong president during that time. He believed head of state Gen. Kenan Evren would use the powers of a popularly elected, strong president "judiciously". He added, however, he could not say the same for any successors.

Hamitogullari said he was in favor of holding a presidential election at the same time as the constitutional referendum.

Turk-Is Criticism

TA081023 Ankara ANATOLIA in French 0924 GMT 8 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, 8 Aug (AA) -- The Turkish Confederation of Labor [Turk-Is] has violently criticized the draft constitution being debated in the Consultative Assembly. A statement issued Saturday by the Turk-Is confederation says that in the event the draft constitution is ratified in its present form, it would lead to the concentration of all executive power in the hands of one person, in contrast to the legislative powers. This situation the statement claims, could cause social conflicts rather than restore an atmosphere of social peace.

Pointing out that those who prepared the draft constitution showed a lack of confidence in the Turkish nation, the statement adds that the following shortcomings would result: No pluralistic democratic system will ever be established in Turkey; the liberties of expression and press will be (?undermined); the concept of a social state will be lost; liberties will become the exception and restrictions the rule; individual liberties, including that of staging strikes, will be endangered; and the trade unions would be faced with the possibility of being closed down by administrative directives.

The Turk-Is statement ends by appealing to the Consultative Assembly to correct these points and carry out the historic task expected of it.

EFFORTS TO BRING CYPRUS ISSUE TO UN DENOUNCED

TA061347 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] Foreign Ministry spokesman Ambassador Nazmi Akiman has said that the Greek Cypriot application to the United Nations for the discussion of the Cyprus problem would undermine the intercommunal talks and would weaken its prospects.

In reply to questions by reporters on this subject, Ambassador Akiman said that those planning to make representations to the United Nations, as well as those inciting them to do so, were in fact worried about the constructive developments achieved at the intercommunal talks in the last 2 years. Akiman said that the main purpose of such moves was to overtly interrupt the intercommunal talks. Noting that Turkey was not at all concerned about the Cyprus problem being referred to the United Nations, the Foreign Ministry spokesman said that in that case, the interruption of the intercommunal talks on Cyprus was inevitable. Nazmi Akiman reiterated that intercommunal talks were the only means to solve the Cyprus problem and that all peace-loving countries held this view.

'OUR RADIO' ON WELCOME FOR AFGHAN 'TERRORISTS'

TA051220 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0700 GMT 5 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "Welcoming Ceremonies for the Terrorists"]

[Text] The first group of 4,331 Afghan counterrevolutionaries has arrived in Adana. These terrorists, who undertook armed action against the legal Afghan Government and carried out acts of sabotage, were received in Adana with ceremonies. The junta government, its interior minister, Salahattin Cetiner, Adana Governor Hayri Kozakcioglu and the martial law commander were all there to welcome this gang of bloodstained gangsters with ceremony. The Haci Omer Sabanci student lodgings were given to these gangsters as homes.

Interior Minister Cetiner said: The situation in Afghanistan is a shameful one for all of humanity. Turkey respects human rights and freedoms.

Just look at this hypocrisy! The situation in which country is a shame for humanity? In Turkey or in Afghanistan? Afghanistan was a country that lived in the darkness of the Middle Ages for years and years. Until 4 years ago, the country used to be ruled by remnants of the Middle Ages such as shahs and khans. Some 99 percent of the people were illiterate. Now, the Afghan people have taken their fate into their own hands and are working with all their might to emerge from the darkness.

U.S. imperialism, which is the enemy of all progressive forces, is carrying out all kinds of intervention both inside and outside Afghanistan in order to prevent the awakening of the brotherly Afghan people. It is provoking the counterrevolutionary gangs, the feudal landlords by using arms, money or any other means, against the legitimate Afghan Government.

In Turkey, however, the junta generals turned the entire country into a big dungeon. They rudely trampled upon all democratic rights and freedoms. The officials of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] are facing death sentences. The officials of the Turkish Peace Committee are facing prison terms of up to 30 years. More than 100,000 patriots are rotting in the dungeons. [The junta] is trying to impose a shameful document it calls a constitution on the Turkish people in the last quarter of the 20th century.

Now let us ask once again: Which country is a shame for humanity? Is it not the junta generals who are shameful? The junta generals should be the last ones to talk about human rights and freedoms while tens of thousands of democrats and patriots are tortured in the dungeons.

The junta generals who easily strip their own citizens of their Turkish citizenship are now giving Turkish citizenship to those Afghan gangsters. The junta generals who stripped of their citizenship Turkish Labor Party [TLP] leader Behice Boran, Turkish Teachers' Unity and Solidarity Association [TOB-DER] leader Gultekin Gazioglu, Turkish Mine, Metal, Metal Works and Machine Industry Workers Union [Maden-Is] leader Mehmet Karaca and Turkish Bank Workers Union [Bank-Sen] leader Metin Denizmen are now granting the rights of Turkish citizenship to these terrorists who are the murderers of hundreds of innocent Afghan people.

Can there be a sadder picture depicting the present situation in Turkey?

Executions, torture, prisons, dungeons and expulsion from citizenship to the patriots and democrats and welcoming ceremonies as well as Turkish citizenship to the blood-stained Afghan terrorists; land and agricultural equipment to the gangsters while not even an inch of land to the Turkish and Kurdish peasants.

On the other hand, on 1 April, Rauf Tamer wrote in TERCUMAN that 4,500 extremely anticommunist Afghanis were coming to Turkey. He said: While we look for three or four such people in every quarter, fate has sent us 4,500 of them in one go. Rauf Tamer was thus making plans for using these terrorist gangs as a striking force against our people. Velican Oduncu from the Nationalist Action Party [NAP] who had once said "whenever I saw a leftist I killed him with pleasure" is the son of a counterrevolutionary Uzbek. Mehmet Kengerli escaped from Azerbaijan and became a colonel in the Nazi army. Then he served as Turkey's labor attache in Bonn for years. Zeki Velidi Togan who had escaped from Turkestan was a leader of fascism in Turkey. Isa Yusuf Alptekin, the executioner of the people of eastern Turkestan, fled to Turkey and placed the entire gang of bandits, whom he held under his own control, under NAP leader Turkes' orders.

The Reagan administration did not settle these Afghan gangs in the United States, in Alaska. It preferred to have them settled in Turkey. U.S. imperialism, the CIA, the local reactionary and fascist forces, the junta generals want to use these bloodstained terrorists as a striking force aginst the Turkish people and on the side of reaction. They are figuring out the details now. These are the truths that lie behind the ostentatious welcoming ceremonies organized for the Afghan terrroists.

HAFERKAMP VIEWS STEEL TALKS, COMPROMISE

LD071340 Hamburg DPA in German 1259 GMT 7 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Washington/Brussels/Bonn, 7 Aug (DPA) -- The EC is unable to make further concessions to the United States after the rejection of the latest steel compromise by U.S. firms. This was stated by Wilhem Haferkamp, vice president of the EC, on Saturday in an interview with West German Radio. I hope, however, Haferkamp said, that the U.S. administration might still succeed in implementing the agreement.

On Friday, the EC and the United States agreed after several days of negotiations in Washington to reduce European steel exports to the United States with 11 types of steel from the present 6.3 to 5.754 percent. The distribution of the market to the individual EC member countries is to be decided internally by the Europeans. Pipes are not included in the agreement. They are to be part of separate negotiations up to 15 September.

UNEXPLODED BOMB FOUND IN VIENNA'S RUDOLF SQUARE

AU061115 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1000 GMT 6 Aug 82

[Text] There was apparently another attempted bombing in the center of Vienna last night. This morning a garden worker discovered a suspicious parcel behind an advertising pillar in the park in Rudolf Square. He alerted the police and explosives experts found a pipe stuffed with explosives in the parcel as well as a time fuse. The clock of the time fuse had already run down, without the bomb's having exploded. It has not yet been clarified whether the abortive attempt is connected with the bombing attacks in Vienna and Salzburg.

FOREIGN MINISTER ISSUES STATEMENT ON LEBANON

AU091300 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 8 Aug 82 p 2

[Text] In a statement published yesterday Foreign Minister Dr Willibald Pahr appealed to Israel to respect the Security Council resolutions and to withdraw its troops. Pahr reminded Israel that it owes its own existence under international law to a UN resolution and that hence it is particularly hard to understand that this state itself disregards UN resolutions.

Pahr's statement then continues verbatim: "Austria is watching with great concern the flaring up of fighting in Beirut and denounces the recent expansion of Israeli military actions to other sectors of the city. This Israeli action as well as the turning back of UN observers constitutes a gross disregard for the UN resolutions. The Israeli actions are taking place at a moment in which the PLO has stated its readiness to withdraw its armed forces from Beirut and they are causing additional immense suffering to the civilian population.

Israel's negative attitude with respect to the readiness expressed by the UN secretary general in Vienna to travel to Israel and Lebanon for talks with the parties concerned delays the efforts for a solution and worsens the situation of the grief-stricken and innocent civilian population of west Beirut.

Israel owes its own existence under international law to a UN resolution. Hence it is particularly incomprehensible that Israel itself has repeatedly disregarded resolutions of the world organization.

Austria appeals with all possible urgency to Israel to withdraw its armed forces in keeping with the Security Council resolutions. Austria further endorses the view that a just and durable settlement of the Middle East problems requires the mutual recognition of Israeli and Palestinian rights and that such a settlement can only be found in a constructive dialogue between the parties concerned, including the PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people."

REPORT ON PEACE MARCHERS ACTIVITIES IN VIENNA

[Summary] "The events staged by the peace marchers who had picked Vienna as their target and which have been scheduled to last 4 days began yesterday afternoon with rallies in front of St Stephen's Cathedral under the slogan 'Never again Hiroshima' and at the so-called peace camp in Vienna's Prater. State Secretary Dohnal will address the participants at the rally in St Stephen's Square." Deputy to Vienna's municipal diet and Chairwoman of the Socialist Party Women's Association Friederike Seidl, speaking at the beginning of the events, endorsed a world without nuclear arms.

"A large-scale police action involving about a dozen radio patrol cars and heavily armed police took place yesterday shortly before 1400 hours in front of Vienna's Presse Building. The occasion: Participants in the peace rally, English, Canadians, Scandinavians and Germans who had come to Austria on bicycles had, after a visit to the International Press Center (IPZ), subsequently called on the editorial office of Vienna's KRONEN-ZEITUNG. Evidently the people there felt threatened and had applied for police protection."

The participants in the rally then gathered in front of the Presse Building and sang their peace songs with laughter. "At the same time, participants in the peace rally demonstrated in front of Vienna's Israeli Embassy in Vienna-Waehring, on the corner of Weimarer and Frank Streets. As was reported from police quarters 20 demonstrators were detained there after they refused to clear the sidewalks in front of the embassy building."

SPOKESMEN VIEW REDEPLOYMENT OF U.S. FORCES

[Excerpts] Bonn, 9 Aug (DPA) -- Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl on Monday rejected speculation that the Federal Government is adopting a negative stance on American plans to move U.S. troops in the FRG toward the FRG-GDR border out of consideration for East-West relations. At the same time, Ruehl made it clear to the press that Bonn has no obligation to make a financial contribution toward such a step.

The government spokesman stressed that the Federal Government will not be guided in this (?matter) by considerations of relations with the East. Federal territory is alliance territory and the allies deploy their forces here according to their defense needs and the possibilities provided in this respect by the country.

Ruehl pointed out that the East deploys its forces, which are "strongly offensive in terms of organization and weapons," without any consideration for optimum conditions for detente.

Alfred Biehle, the defense policy spokesman of the CSU group in the Bundestag, pointed out today that the U.S. plans, which were approved in principle by the union, presented more than just a financial problem. Apart from the "to some extent total structural changes" for the German population in the frontier zone area, consideration must also be given to possible effects on the Vienna force reduction talks in progress.

NO DATE SCHEDULED FOR HONECKER'S VISIT

[Dispatch signed CO]

[Text] Bonn -- "GDR" State Council Chairman Honecker so far has not done any probing in Bonn for establishing a date for his visit. With this statement pertinent Bonn government authorities yesterday reacted to a news report according to which Honecker intends to follow up on the invitation of Chancellor Schmidt for a visit to the Federal Republic in November. Nobody in Bonn dares predict whether the planned visit will take place before the end of this year or only next year.

Following the entry refusal by the "GDR" to the minister-president of Rhineland-Palatinate, Vogel, and another CDU politician 2 weeks ago Government Spokesman Ruel had stated that no acute interest in a Honecker visit may be expected from Bonn. On principle, however, one continues to be interested in this visit from East Berlin.

INVESTIGATION BEGUN ON USSR USE OF PRISONERS

LD091342 Hamburg DPA in German 1314 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Moscow, 9 Aug (DPA) -- The Federal Government is pursuing reports in Moscow which allege that prisoners are being used to construct the new gas pipeline from Siberia to the western border of the USSR. The German Embassy in Moscow said, when questioned on Monday, that at Bonn's instigation it was "conducting an investigation to the extent possible." They vigorously denied that the question involved making contact with the Soviet authorities.

It was stated that there had also been an exchange of information with interested Western embassies. An embassy spokesman added that the outcome, the details of which have not yet been made public, has been passed on to the Federal Government.

FOUNDING OF NEW COMMUNIST PARTY REPORTED

DW091225 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 9 Aug 82 pp 31-32

[Text] A new communist organization, the "Marxist-Leninist Party of Germany," was founded with conspirative secrecy.

Nobody knew where things were leading to. At first the 133 participants of a conference of several days were ordered in groups from all over the Federal Republic to meeting places. Only there did they learn that the meeting point would be the Hotel "Novotel" in Bochum.

Nobody was supposed to know who they were. They came as a "group of travelling teachers" and were registered in the "Novotel" as "Association of Free Social Scientists." "They were so very disciplined," the hotel management raves unsuspectingly even today, saying that "it was the most decent group we ever had."

They surely were disciplined, for the conference organized from 17 through 20 June was the 5th central delegates' meeting of the "Kommunistischer Arbeiterund Deutschlands" (KABD), the sole intact communist organization to the left of the DKP in the FRG, which has existed for 10 years now. After two days the delegates' meeting renamed itself the founding congress of the "Marxist-Leninist Party of Germany," abbreviated MLPD.

Even this was supposed to remain under cover for the time being. As liaison men reported to the Office for the Protection of the Constitution, the delegates were "strictly forbidden" to leave the assembly hotel or to make phone calls and without the approval of the Central Committee (CC) nobody was allowed to report to his comrades at home about what had happened.

Only as late as the last day of July, 6 weeks after the event, the "RED FLAG," the KABD central organ, announced that a new communist party had been founded in the "Ruhr area" and reported at a length of six pages on "our declaration of war, the founding of the party." But the "RED FLAG," which according to a staff member of the editors' collective usually "writes in a way that is also understood by an ordinary worker," did not reveal anything about the people elected to the leadership.

The fact that the paper only quotes from speeches without giving the names of the speakers is a tradition with the KABD, which, according to the latest report by the Baden-Wuerttemberg local Office for the Protection of the Constitution always behaved in a "strictly conspirative" way: "Thus, the group now as before avoids any disclosure of its central and regional leadership bodies' composition and also publishes almost all its publications under an imprint that cannot be checked."

A conversation of KABD functionaries with DER SPIEGEL the week before last only materialized "on behalf of the CC" which wanted to test "what questions journalists will actually ask us to answer" — almost all of them, as was shown, being "questions of a cadre-political nature"; questions about the number of members, acting persons, finances and about the course of the party congress, which remained unanswered "for reasons of protection and because it was otherwise useful."

But perhaps an organization must act this way whose aim is "that the working class rise up under the leadership of the revolutionary mass party in armed resistance, the utmost form of the class struggle, for the overthrowing of capitalism and the crushing of the bourgeois state apparatus, so as to build socialism on the ruins of the former society."

This is not supposed to happen today or tomorrow but "only when the ruling class is undergoing a crisis so serious it will no longer be able to rule in the same old way and when the overwhelming majority of the working people no longer wants to tolerate it." This may take quite some time.

For the time being, the ruins which are to be passed by the new party on its "way ahead toward socialism" exist on the very political ground where the party has settled itself and where no progress can be made at the far left-hand side:

The old "Communistische Partei Deutschlands" (KPD) which sees itself as the legitimate heir of the party of Rosa Luxemburg and Ernst Thaelmann, was banned as early as 1956 as unconstitutional by the Federal Constitutional Court. The KPD, founded in 1970 by the sons of the bourgeoisie Christian Semler and Juergen Horlemann soon no longer knew "who we are and where we want to go" and dissolved itself in 1980;

A "people's front" separated itself from the KPD of Marxists-Leninists for the 1980 Bundestag elections and scored 9,319 votes from all over the FRG;

The "Kommunistische Bund Westdeutschlands" (KBW) got 8,174 votes during the last Bundestag elections and split into the KBW and the BWK, "Bund Westdeutscher Kommunisten;"

The "Kommunistische Bund" (KB) lost its "center faction" which since then pursues a policy of its own as "Group Z."

The decay of all these groups of the "new left" had the same causes. In the long run they were unable to explain to their comrades the wondrous ways their great example, the People's Republic of China, followed after Mao's death and the overthrow of the "Gang of Four." This is quite different from the KABD, which -- with the roughly 2,000 people it has rallied around itself -- wants to once again make a new start. Unaffected by what has happened afterwards, it regards the Chinese cultural revolution and "the teachings of Marx, Engels, Lenin, Stalin and Mao Zedong" now as before "the decisive basis for the emerging of a new communist world movement."

Everything else that has been practiced, recently in China and in the Soviet Union for a longer period, is described as "revisionist degeneration": What happens in the GDR, in Poland and elsewhere in the East bloc "is," KABD functionaries say, "no socialism. A new type of capitalism has been restored."

The reproach is also aimed at the "Deutsche Kommunistische Partei," DKP, which marches firmly unswerving behind Moscow and East Berlin and "real socialism" practised there. "The very break" with this East bloc socialism is what the KABD people term their "decisive reasons for the building and founding" of their new party: "Over there" in the East, "a degenerated bureaucracy lives beautifully at the expense of the workers."

The KABD believes itself immune against such temptations — this in the first place because of its "proletarian way of thinking," which accepts only one question, namely: "What benefits the proletariat?"

"A membership and leadership which is composed of more than 90 percent workers and ordinary employees" ("RED FLAG"), constant controls and a semi-annual "new assessment" of the party leaders, who are to serve as "models of proletarian morality," the functionaries say, are to guarantee the straight "revolutionary road" of the new Marxist-Leninist party.

The "working intelligentsia" will also be included, although it is supposed to be a party "in which the workers have their say" and in which everything theoretical is to take second place -- theory, according to a saying by Stalin, merely serves as "a beacon light for practices."

The emblem of the party is, accordingly, hammer, sickle and book. The red flag with the new emblem is to flutter for the first time by the end of next week before the Duesseldorf Philips Hall at the official MLPD "founding meeting" under the motto: "He who does not want to be an anvil must be a hammer," thereby making free use of Goethe and Georgi Dimitrov, who according to the MLPD people have recited the verse at the trial of the Reichstag fire. The hundredth birth anniversary of this communist has just been observed.

A "song on the party's founding" is to be sung then, too. For the time being it is still being composed.

PREMIER MAUROY COMMENTS ON PARIS KILLINGS

LD091842 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] Various personalities have visited the scene of the attack [in the Rue des Rosiers]. Pierre Mauroy himself arrived a little after 1700 this afternoon at the scene of the outrage and went immediately to the Goldenberg Restaurant, where he expressed his feelings to [correspondent] (Eric Billar).

[Begin Mauroy recording] Criminal elements have struck death in this area, in the heart of Paris. I have come on behalf of the government and for myself personally to honor the victims, to give assurance of our support and our sympathy for the entire Jewish community. ARMENIAN TERRORIST GROUP MEMBER ARRESTED IN UK

[Text] Paris, Aug 9 (AFP) -- A French national wanted in connection with inquiries into the Armenian terrorist group "Orly", which has claimed responsibility for a number of attacks in Paris and abroad, was arrested in Portsmouth, southern England, yesterday, a reliable source said here today.

The family of 21-year-old Jean Charles Sansonetti owns the house in which an Armenian militant, Pierre Gulumian, was killed on July 30 while manipulating a bomb. Police found a number of weapons and documents allegedly pertaining to the Orly group, which was formed following the November 1981 arrest at the Paris airport of the same name of Dimitri Giorgiu, a member of the Armenian Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia [ASALA).

The group, which has called for the release of several Armenian militants detained in France, has claimed responsibility for two recent bomb attacks in the Paris Latin Quarter in which 17 people were injured.

Four members of the Sansonetti family, who had reportedly rented their house out, were arrested on August 2 while holidaying on the Mediterranean island of Corsica. Gulumian's brother, Katchadour, was also arrested.

Jean Charles Sansonetti was due to be brought back to France today.

PARATROOP DIVISION IN READINESS FOR LEBANON

NC100743 Paris AFP in English 0730 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Paris, Aug 10 (AFP) -- Two regiments of France's 11th Paratroop Division are on alert, ready to go to Beirut if necessary to participate in an international peacekeeping force, Defense Ministry sources said here Monday.

The regiments are based in Calvi, on the Mediterranean island of Corsica, and in Carcasonne, southwest France.

But the Defense Ministry refused, for security reasons, to confirm if these particular units would be sent if parties in the Lebanese crisis asked for a French contingent. Its only comment was to recall that France had taken necessary steps so that a French force could be dispatched "very quickly."

The 11th Paratroop Division permanently has a division on alert to [words indistinct] the troops [word indistinct] overseas on less than 24 hours notice.

PCF AIDE CITED ON LEBANON VISIT, SOLUTION

PM091621 Paris LE MONDE in French 8-9 Aug 82 p 3

[Interview with PCF Politburo member Rene Piquet; date and place not given; first two paragraphs are editorial introduction]

[Text] PCF Politburo members Maxime Gremetz and Rene Piquet were received by Mr Jean le Garrec, minister delegate to the premier, Friday 6 August, to convey to him suggestions on the situation in Lebanon. It is probable that the suggestions are similar to those which the PCF plans to make to the EEC Commission: Indeed Piquet, chairman of the communist group in the European Parliament, wishes to meet with [Commission President] Gaston Thorn to ask him to urge the EEC to take sanctions against Israel? Mr Piquet returned from Beirut late Thursday, 5 August, after succeeding in meeting [PLO Chairman] Yasir 'Arafat. He answers our questions below.

In addition, several leftwing parties and trade unions, including the PCF, PS, CGT, CFDT and the National Education Federation, have decided in principle to take "united initiatives," but they have yet to be defined.

[Question] Did Mr 'Arafat entrust you with a message for the French Government?

[Answer] The message is simple: The massacre must be stopped.

The PLO has made as many concessions as it can. The PLO leader and, with him, the other Palestinian leaders and the Lebanese left reaffirmed to me that they accept all the UN resolutions; but they also ask for the existence of the Palestinians to be recognized. Thus Mr 'Arafat entrusted us with a message concerning the postwar period because Lebanon will have to regain its territorial integrity without any foreign interference. And Mr 'Arafat told me: The only government and the only country which has really sought a political solution to this conflict is France. If there is a country which can really play a role in finding a political solution it is France; it enjoys considerable authority among the Palestinian forces and the Lebanese progressives.

[Question] Did your interlocutors discuss a French military presence with you again?

[Answer] Yes. They prefer an exclusively French military presence to the dispatch of an international force which would inevitably be controlled by the Americans. And you know they cannot have confidence in the United States.

[Question] The French PS stressed that the PLO had not gone far enough toward recognizing the state of Israel. What is your party's stance on that point?

[Answer] The complete Israeli and U.S. intransigence means that is no longer the question. [U.S. special envoy] Mr Habib is no longer demanding such recognition from them. That clearly proves that is not the problem.

[Question] What impression did your meeting with Mr le Garrec make on you?

[Answer] The impression that the government has already played a very important role and that it can do more to bring closer the end of this tragedy. I would like to add that French diplomacy, the only one present in west Beirut, and the only one active in Lebanon, is playing a major role in Lebanese opinion. In any case we share the French Government's concern. Allow me to add, and to assert categorically, that an immediate political solution is possible in Lebanon and that the only obstacle to that is the Israeli desire to dominate Lebanon.

HUNTZINGER ON SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL, LEBANON

[Jose Rebelo dispatch]

[Text] Lisbon -- "Ever since the first days of the Israeli troops' entry into Lebanese territory it has been evident that the objective pursued by the Israeli Government was anything but a mere operation to remove the Palestinian forces stationed in southern Lebanon," Jacques Huntzinger, assistant member [as published] of the PS National Secretariat, says in a statement released following the 6 August meeting in Lisbon of the Socialist International's [SI] ad hoc committee on the Near East.

Having stressed that the PS has since 9 June "resolutely condemned the Israeli aggression," Mr Huntzinger continued: "The course of events has shown that the advance of the Israeli troops and the encirclement of the progressive Palestinian forces was carried out without the Lebanese Government or any other Arab government presenting any serious form of reaction." According to the PS deputy secretary for foreign relations, the alternatives are either to witness the "elimination of the Palestinian armed forces in Lebanon" or to make efforts with a view to a political solution, "linking an end to the fighting to the disengagement of the Palestinian, Israeli and Syrian forces and to the opening of a political safety door to the PLO leaders, who are apparently determined to make negotiation prevail over military action and terrorism."

The PS, Mr Huntzinger said, has chosen the latter path. It also backs the French-Egyptian plan presented to the UN Security Council and therefore rejects "the radical solution undertaken by the Begin, Sharon and Shamir government."

Confirming his 2 August remarks in Tel Aviv, Mr Huntzinger described the McCloskey document as "too ambiguous." "A declaration of unambiguous PLO recognition of Israel," he said, "would force the Americans to begin a dialogue with the PLO, would greatly influence public opinion in Israel and would help the Israeli left in its efforts to counter Begin's policy." "There is a Palestinian people and there are Palestinian territories, namely the West Bank and Gaza," Mr Huntzinger specified, declaring his support for "everything that will enable the PLO to be the Palestinian people's spokesman in the future."

The issue of the Israeli Labor Party's continued membership of the SI was debated at length. The position of the PS -- which, while recognizing the existence of "serious divergences" with the Israeli Labor Party, opposes its exclusion from the SI, which is demanded particularly by the Spaniards and Austrians -- apparently received the support of representatives of other political groups belonging to the committee: the Portuguese Socialist Party and the Danish and Finnish Social Democratic Parties.

The next meeting of the SI's ad hoc committee, preparations for which have been entrusted to the PS, is scheduled for 19 August -- "if possible in Beirut," it was specified. Its aim will apparently be to supplement the information gathered by [Portuguese Socialist Party Secretary General] Soares and SI Secretary General Bernt Carlsson, who on their recent mission to the Near East were unable to visit the Lebanese capital. Formed in Copenhagen 13 July, this committee, the idea of which stems from Willy Brandt, has very limited powers. As the Portuguese Socialist leader said, "We can report on what we have seen; we can alert public opinion; but we cannot do what the major powers themselves are incapable of doing."

LIFTING OF ARMS EMBARGO ON ARGENTINA ANNOUNCED

LD100924 Paris Domestic Service in French 0900 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] France has announced that it is lifting the embargo on arms sales to Argentina. In view of the ending of hostilities between Great Britain and the Republic of Argentina there is no longer any reason for maintaining the embargo, according to a statement just issued by the Ministry of External Relations. The suspension of arms deliveries to Argentina was decreed on 2 April this year, at the onset of the Falklands conflict.

INQUIRY INTO USE OF PRISONERS ON USSR PIPELINE

PM091211 Paris FRANCE-SOIR in French 7 Aug 82 p 4

[Text] An inquiry into the Soviet gulag detainees.... The French Government is disturbed by FRANCE-SOIR's revelations (6 August edition) on the presence of some 100,000 convicts, including numerous political prisoners, on the gas pipeline construction sites. It has asked its embassy in Moscow to open an inquiry into this affair.

The International Human Rights Association, a humanitarian organization based in West Germany, drew Western countries' attention to the presence of those prisoners on the sites. Two letters on the subject were sent to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and President Mitterrand. The president of the republic apparently did not receive his letter and it seems that he learned of the affair when reading FRANCE-SOIR. Our Moscow embassy was immediately informed.

The French inquiry, which will obviously be difficult in view of the isolation of Western diplomats in the USSR, will essentially relate to the presence of political prisoners, especially dissidents, including psychiatrist Semen Glurman and writer Zinoviy Krasinskiy, in these "labor gulags." If their presence were proved it might enable France to use French-Soviet cooperation in the construction of the gas pipeline to raise the problem of the imprisonment of dissidents. Francois Mitterrand is extremely sensitive to the human rights problem. European cooperation on the gas pipeline, which is opposed by the United States, should not, in his view, be implemented regardless of the cost. In view of the importance which the Kremlin attaches to its implementation, there is reason to think that the Soviet leaders might heed the West's remarks on this subject.

This is an opportunity to try to improve the lot of dissidents which must not be wasted.

PRESIDENT PERTINI OPPOSES EARLY ELECTIONS

AU091940 Rome ANSA in English 1910 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) — Rome, August 9 -- Head of state Sandro Pertini conferred with ex-President Giovanni Leone today to begin consultations to lead up to the naming of a premier-designate to form Italy's 42nd postwar government, It was learned that Pertini did not meet with the other former head of state, Giuseppe Saragat, who was out of Rome, but continued the consultations in talks with the speakers of the Senate and the house, Amintore Fanfani and Nilde Jotti. Later in the day, the 85-year-old president began conferring with the leaders of the nation's political parties in order of representation in Parliament, beginning with Christian Democrat Secretary Ciriaco de Mita, Communist Party Secretary Enrico Berlinguer and the Socialist secretary, Bettino Craxi.

Before opening consultations, Pertini told reporters, "I am opposed to the dissolution of Parliament and early elections on principle but if I am placed in front of an impossibility to continue...." he paused and added, "anyway, I will try to do everything possible to avert early elections". After refusing to speculate on the future of the government crisis, the president said, "one must not be pessimistic. I hope to have some clear ideas by tonight".

POLITICIANS COMMENT ON GOVERNMENT CRISIS

PM091605 [Editorial Report] Rome LA REPUBBLICA in Italian 8-9 August 1982 carries on pages 3-4 a survey of reactions by political figures to the Italian Government crisis, consisting of the following items: a Paolo Guzzanti interview with PSI Deputy Secretary Claudio Martelli, a Lucio Caracciolo interview with Italian Liberal Party Secretary Valerio Zanone, a Giorgio Battistini report on remarks by Italian Social Democratic Party Secretary Pietro Longo and a Giorgio Dell'arti interview with PCI Secretariat member Adalberto Minucci.

Martelli says he sees "no alternative" to early election "as things stand right now," but denies that his party deliberately took the earliest opportunity to bring down the government, He adds that Italy needs institutional reforms to ensure "governability." Asked about possible future cooperation with the PCI, he replies that the Communists have "not yet digested the 'break' with Moscow" or decided "whether the democratic alternative should be with or without the DC."

Zanone argues that "every possible endeavor must be made to avoid the dissolution of Parliament," since "if anything has emerged clearly over the months it is the importance of the time factor in government action." He says the Liberals will back any premier-designate who meets three conditions: "1 -- the intention to form a government that will last, not just for the duration of the summer; 2 -- stepping up the action begun with the 1983 finance bill; 3 -- the desire, in forming the government, to maintain a fair balance between Christian Democratic and other ministers — and, within the latter category, among the various families of non-DC democracy."

According to Battistini, the PSDI's Longo "is not yet resigned to the dissolution of Parliament" and "believes in the five-party alliance, which he will fight to patch together." He adds that Longo "can be expected to be a staunch ally of [PSI Secretary] Craxi in the demand for an amendment of the secret ballot which has already claimed the lives of so many governments and seems to be one of the keys to a stronger future governability."

Minucci says that the Spadolini government, like its two predecessors, was characterized by "the attempt to ignore the Communist question and to act as if the PCI were no longer needed." He adds that "this government's collapse was no unforeseeable accident but the culmination of an all-embracing political inadequacy." Minucci claims that the prerequisite for avoiding early elections is an answer to the "moral issue" that will create a "distinction between parties and institutions."

ALLEGED PLOT AGAINST ANGOLA TO BE INVESTIGATED

LD092316 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2100 GMT 9 Jul 82

[Text] The president of the republic today received the Angolan ambassador in Lisbon, Adriano Sebastiao, who conveyed to him concern over reports of a conspiracy allegedly being plotted in Lisbon to overthrow the Angolan Government. The conspiracy was exposed last Saturday by the weekly EXPRESSO. In this connection we have just received an official note from the presidency of the Council of Ministers which we shall read out in full:

1. In connection with an article published in the weekly EXPRESSO of 7 August 1982 according to which meetings took place in Lisbon allegedly plotting a coup d'etat in Angola, the government wishes to make it quite clear that it had no information on the facts alleged in the aforementioned article.

2. The government has repeatedly stated that while on the one hand respect for the freedom of speech and of the press prevents it from muzzling the public expression of views antagonistic to the government of the aforementioned country or any other country, on the other hand it can never allow or tolerate activities carried out in Portugal with a view to interfering in the internal affairs of countries with whom we maintain close relations.

3. Portugal's relations with the Portuguese-speaking African countries have been formulated by this government and the Democratic Alliance governments that preceded it within the parameters of equality, mutual respect and noninterference. It was on the basis of these principles that the development of such relations was given priority in the various government programs.

4. Within this framework it has been possible to establish the bases of a cooperation which we expect and anticipate will be fruitful for all concerned and which in our view and in the view of the governments of the countries involved should be regarded as exemplary relations between states regardless of their political philosophies.

5. In these circumstances, and despite deeming it very likely that this might be just another stage in the campaign of misinformation aimed at undermining the growing credibility of the government's policy towards the countries in question and of its independence with regard to the problems of southern Africa, the government has decided to order an urgent and complete investigation of the facts alleged in the aforementioned article.

A. The Ministry of Foreign Affairs will act through diplomatic channels to clarify the position of the Portuguese Government.

B. The Ministry of Justice, through the judiciary police, and the Ministry of Internal Administration, through the aliens department, will urgently investigate the allegations contained in the article in question.

That was the text of an official note from the presidency of the Council of Ministers.

NORWAY

STRAY CRITICIZES ISRAELI ATTITUDE ON CEASE-FIRE

PM061031 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 5 Aug 82 p 19

[Eivind G. Karlsen report: "Norway Most Concerned Over Uncooperative Israel"]

[Text] "Norway views Israel's unwillingness to respect the UN resolutions on a cease-fire in Lebanon with great concern," Norwegian Foreign Minister Svenn Stray told AFTENPOSTEN. But Stray stressed, as did Christian People's Party Chairman Kare Kristensen, that the call for an immediate cessation of hostilities also applies to the PLO. However, the foreign minister rejected a call to recall the Norwegian ambassador to Israel.

"Norway strongly encourages the parties involved to comply with the UN resolution and end hostilities immediately," Svenn Stray said. The foreign minister pointed out that the United States is now bent on putting an end to the Israeli attacks -- and that Norway supports it fully in this. "And if anyone can help to bring this about by applying pressure from outside, it must be the Americans," Stray added.

The Norwegian foreign minister also said: "The constant attacks on west Beirut make it difficult for U.S. envoy Philip Habib to find a solution which would involve the peaceful evacuation of the PLO, something which is essential in the search for a total solution to the Lebanon conflict. In the Norwegian view the underlying problems cannot be solved through the use of military methods, but only through negotiations," the foreign minister said adding, "we deeply regret the enormous losses of human life to which the conflict in Lebanon has led and must clearly dissociate ourselves from any possible future Israeli attempt to take west Beirut."

Christian People's Party chairman, Kare Kristensen, who is also chairman of the Storting Foreign Affairs Committee, commented that the United Nations must now take an initiative for evacuation of the civilians in west Beirut. He said that Israel and the PLO should also help in this. Kristensen called for the application of further pressure on the parties involved so that the civilian population can be spared further suffering.

The Christian People's Party chairman also pointed out that hostilities in Beirut must cease. "The constant attacks by both sides serve no purpose -- and, more importantly, only do harm to the civilian population," he said.

The Palestine committee has expressed the view that the Norwegian ambassador to Israel should be recalledand the Israeli ambassador to Norway "sent packing." Foreign Minister Stray made it clear that this is unlikely. "I don't think we find the idea appealing. Through our ambassador in Israel -- and the IsraeliEmbassy in Oslo -- we have had and do have the possibility of expressing Norway's view of what is happening in the Middle East and of exerting all the pressure we are able. I think it is more important that we keep these possibilities open rather than begin the sort of demonstration called for here.

"Also, I will not ignore the fact that Israel attaches some importance to what Norway says," the foreign minister added. Stray said that Israel has at least been obliging when there have been protests from Norway about situations in which Norwegian interests are directly affected, such as Norway's involvement in UNIFIL.

GUNES NEWSPAPER SHUT DOWN BY MARTIAL LAW COMMAND

NC091812 Paris AFP in English 1712 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, Aug 9 (AFP) — The daily newspaper GUNES has been closed down for an undetermined period by the Istanbul Martial Law Command, well-informed sources said here today.

GUNES, which started up last February, was closed down for violating a martial law ban by publishing a story about a security forces operation, the sources said.

The security forces, acting on an anonymous report, had closed Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport for three hours in the morning of August 5 to carry out a search at the end of which a suitcase full of hand-grenades was found in the domestic section of Turkish Airways.

GUNES said the operation involved a Syrian aircraft which landed at Yesilkoy.

BAR WARNS OF PITFALLS OF NEW CONSTITUTION

TA091620 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1555 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, 9 Aug (AA) — The Bar Association of Turkey called for preservation of the concept of the supremacy of law in the new constitution.

Expressing his association's views on the draft constitution at a press conference Monday, Bar Association Chairman Atilla Sav claimed the draft tended to bring a number of restrictions and bans on (?freedoms) and represented the socioeconomic views of certain classes.

The draft in its present form thus "fell short" of the political maturity and experience of the Turkish people, Sav said.

Turkey's constitutional system, which provides for judicial review of legislative and executive acts, should be preserved, he said. He feared that the current draft, which failed to stress the independence of the judiciary while giving the legislative and executive free rein, might lead to the establishment of a totalitarian regime in future.

Sav also pointed out economic crisis and terrorism could not be removed merely by legal measures.

DEFENSE MINISTRY SATISFIED WITH SECURITY AT BASE

LD100002 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2305 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] The Ministry of Defense said tonight that it was satisfied with security arrangements at RAF Cottesmore in Leicestershire despite criticism by a leading West German politician.

Mr Willy Wimmer the country's parliamentary defence committee expert on air force affairs, had said after a visit to the base's training centre that problems had arisen concerning the housing of West German military personnel and their integration into the base. He was passing on criticism from German pilots training at Cottesmore on Tornado multi-role combat aircraft.

According to a REUTER report, Mr Wimmer referred in a statement issued by the opposition Christian Democratic Party to "very lax handling of security measures in and around Cottesmore". He said there was no comparison with the security situation at similarly important West German bases, and that there were mounting fears that the IRA could strike at Cottesmore. But the Ministry of Defence said tonight: "We do take security seriously and are happy that it is adequate at Cottesmore. We would like to look at the points the MP has made in detail before commenting further." The pilot training school at Cottesmore -- for British, German and Italian crews -- was opened in January last year.

The MOD [Ministry of Defense] would not comment on another statement by Mr Wimmer that he had noted the Soviet Union's growing interest in the Cottesmore base. Mr Wimmer said Soviet ships had been assembled near the British coast for some time monitoring wireless traffic to spy on Cottesmore. It is understood that the MOD is aware that Soviet ships are monitoring activities, but as long as they are going about their business lawfully, there is nothing Britain can do.

THREE FRENCH NAVAL VESSELS ON WAY TO LEBANON

[Text] Nicosia, Aug 10 (AFP) -- Three French naval vessels will call at the Cypriot port of Larnaca tomorrow on their way to Lebanese waters, port authorities announced today. The vessels were listed as a corvette, armed with Exocet and anti-aircraft missiles, a heavy landing craft and a support ship.

Yesterday Defence Ministry sources in Paris said two regiments of France's 11th Paratroop Division were (?on alert) ready to go to Beirut if necessary to participate in an international disengagement force, planned to monitor the evacuation of Palestinian combatants.

The Defence Ministry, for routine security reasons, refused to say which units would be sent, commenting only that France had taken necessary steps so that a French force could be dispatched "very quickly" if parties in the Lebanese crisis asked for it. The 11th Paratroop Division has a division on permanent call for foreign action. The troops can be sent overseas on less than 24 hours notice.

ISRAELI EMBASSY ISSUES STATEMENT ON OUTRAGE

[Text] The Israeli Embassy in Paris has issued a statement on yesterday's outrage in the Rue des Rosiers. It says that the multiplicity of attacks against Jewish and Israeli targets is being encouraged by a certain climate of propaganda that is often hostile and anti-semitic.

'International' Group Blamed

NC101143 Paris AFP in English 1137 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Paris, Aug 10 (AFP) -- French Interior Minister Gaston Defferre today said the weapons used in the shooting here which left six dead and 22 wounded yesterday in a central city Jewish neighborhood were the same as those used in an attack against the Israeli ambassador in London in June and against a synagogue in Vienna last year.

A Palestinian dissident group "Abu Nidal" claimed responsibility for the synagogue attack perpetrated August 29, 1981.

In a statement to the press, Mr Defferre identified the automatic weapons used by gunmen in their shoot-out in Jo Goldenberg's restaurant as polish-made EZ-3's, the same used in the London and Vienna shootings. He blamed yesterday's attack on an "international organization committing anti-Semitic attacks throughout the world."

SUPER ETENDARDS TO BE DELIVERED TO ARGENTINA

PY102118 Paris AFP in Spanish 1111 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Paris, 10 Aug (AFP) -- Reliable sources stated here today that the supply of nine Super Etendard airplanes to Argentina within the next 8 or 9 months will constitute one of the first consequences of the lifting of the French embargo on arms sales to Argentina, an embargo decreed in April when the conflict over the Malvinas Islands broke out. They added that these airplanes, armed with air-to-surface missiles are part of an order of 14 submitted by Argentina in 1980. The lifting of the embargo on military exports will allow a fulfillment of current contracts with Argentina.

The first five Super Etendard planes were delivered in November with their armament made up mainly of Exocet AM-39 missiles. With this weapons system the Argentines sunk the British frigate Sheffield and the transport ship Atlantic Conveyor in the South Atlantic.

It is also possible, to the extent to which the French Government agrees with the manufacturers, that contacts will be resumed by the industrial group Savien-Creusot Loire, aimed at building under Argentine license some 700 military vehicles.

LE MONDE INTERVIEWS CORSICA'S EDMOND SIMEONI

PM110747 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Aug 82 p 24

[Laurent Guisamer interview with Corsican People's Union leader Edmond Simeoni]

[Text] [Question] You have just won 7 seats out of 61 in the elections for the Corsican Assembly. How do you judge their result?

[Answer] It is primarily a success for a movement, a team, following 20 years of struggle. The results are substantial, but we are not at all surpised. Though they are satisfactory within our relative context, they leave the Corsican problem intact. Thus the rightwing clique remains strong and if it was not reduced more than it was, the responsibility lies with the French leftwing government, which refused, among other things, to punish serious frauds and has thus allowed doubts to remain about its determination to tackle the system of cliques. The Corsican decolonization problem remains intact. A huge task of deliberation and analysis remains to be carried out with a view to setting it on the path to democracy.

[Question] In your opinion, what is the political background of your voters? Do you believe that young people formed a large proportion of your voters?

[Answer] In our opinion young people did not vote on a large scale. It would be dishonest to state the contrary. We believe that voters from all political sectors voted for us.

[Question] Do you intend to stand as a candidate for the chairmanship of the Corsican Assembly on 20 August?

[Answer] First we will convene our cadres on Saturday 14 August. Our position is not fixed. Me stand as a candidate for the chairmanship? It is a possibility. I can say no more for the present. But it is entirely out of the question that we could endorse the continuation of the cliques, bearing in mind that the cliques are univocal, neither rightwing nor leftwing. We will also refuse to be a hinge group open to blackmail. There will be no nighttime discussions and the debate will be public.

[Question] Ministerial Delegate for Corsican Affairs Bastin Leccia has said that the movement that you lead is part of the presidential majority.

[Answer] We have never been part of any presidential majority. The Corsican People's Union [UPC] is a movement in favor of autonomy and is not a party subordinate to any other. If we voted for and urged other people to vote for Francois Mitterrand in May 1981 it was quite simply because Giscard d'Estaing's regime had become intolerable in its denial of the Corsican identity and its introduction of parallel police forces, which have carried out some 60 attacks on our members. We are definitely not part of the presidential or liberal movements. In the coming decade the real struggle on our island will not be between the right and the left or between the left and the right. The essential struggle -- our real struggle -- will take place between the defenders and adversaries of the Corsican people.

[Question] Do you consider the UPC's role within the Corsican Assembly as that of a force of condemnation or that of a force or proposition?

[Answer] Condemnation is not our movement's chosen line. The UPC deputies will have the task of supervising the rigourous spending of public money. We will have to defend a program with other sectors on the basis of mutual commitments for 3 years.

DC OFFERS CANDIDATES; PARTIES COMMENT ON CRISIS

AU100907 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 10 -- Italian chief-of-state Sando Pertini winds up his preliminary consultations with the nation's political parties today and may be ready to name someone for the job of setting up a new government by Thursday.

Pertini started the probes Monday, meeting with former President Giovanni Leone, Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani, House Speaker Nilde Jotti and delegations from Italy's three major political parties, the Christian Democrats, Socialists and Communists.

The positions of the three parties whose delegations met with Pertini Monday may be summed up as follows: Christian Democrats -- "the electoral shortcut is not the answer," DC Secretary Ciriaco de Mita said emphatically, calling for a major effort to be made "to set up a government quickly and go on with the job of cleaning up public finances and restoring the conditions for a productive revival".

(The DC leadership disclosed its candidates for the premiership as Party Chairman Flaminio Piccoli and former premiers Arnaldo Forlani and Giulio Andreotti, saying that it had nothing against PRI leader Giovanni Spadolini staying on at the job if he succeeded in putting the five-party alliance of the out-going coalition back together.)

Communists -- early elections, according to PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer, would be "severely dangerous for the situation the country is in".

The Communists came out for a "different" government, one whose make-up is not determined by "the imposition of party leaderships and the logic of dosing out political power".

Socialists -- for PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi, the most important thing is to see "a desire for renewal and change expressed in concrete and significant terms".

SPADOLINI SUMMONED TO PRESIDENTIAL PALACE

AU102009 Rome ANSA in English 1956 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 10 -- Italian chief of state Sandro Pertini has summoned outgoing Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini to the Quirinale Presidential Palace tomorrow.

The announcement came after Pertini wound up consultations this evening with leaders of all the political parties in a bid to find a solution to Italy's forty-first postwar government crisis.

Observers generally agree that Spadolini will be trapped as prime minister-designate.

His five-party coalition resigned Saturday after the Socialist Party withdrew when one of the government's economic austerity measures was defeated in Parliament.

The measure would have limited tax privileges enjoyed by Italy's oil companies.

Among the various party delegations, only the radical and neofascist parties came out in favor of early elections.

The Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals, who along with the Christian Democrats and Socialists composed the five-party coalition, came out in favor of a return to the same government formula.

Several of the smaller parties voiced interest in a proposal made Monday by the Communist Party calling for a government in which the ministers are chosen directly by the prime minister without being conditioned by party preferences or conditions.

Spadolini To Form Government

LD102052 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] President of the Republic Pertini has summoned Senator Giovanni Spadolini to see him tomorrow at 1000 to entrust him with the task of forming a new government. The decision was announced at the Quirinale at the end of the 2d day of consultations. This announcement seems, at least for the moment to have removed the danger of early elections.

DEFENSE CHIEF DEFENDS SENDING FORCE TO LEBANON

AU091525 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 9 -- The defense minister in the outgoing Rome government, Lelio Lagorio, discussed today what he described as the "astuteness" of Italian policy in recommending a multilateral peacekeeping force for Lebanon and the decision made by the Cabinet Saturday, before the government resigned, to send a Bersaglieri Battalion to join the force.

In a radio interview broadcast today, the Socialist defense chief said, "Italy was the first, along with France, to say at the beginning of July that an international military expedition should intervene in Lebanon" where Israel mounted an offensive against Palestinian forces in the country on June 6.

Lagorio went on to affirm: "We were not wrong because the Lebanese Government and the Palestine Liberation Organization immediately responded that Italian troops would be very welcome.

"Israel stayed silent, to tell the truth, but it is known that Italy is a country which is acceptable to the Tel Aviv government", the outgoing minister said.

"We thought that the international troops should land at Beirut to stop the tragedy, to protect the population and to represent, if possible, a premise for what remains the major objective in a policy for peace in the Middle East, that is, reciprocal and simultaneous recognition of the state of Israel and the PLO. Perhaps this can be achieved at this time", Lagorio said.

The Italian cabinet decision to join the multilateral force, alongside the United States and France, was conditioned on the acceptance of the proposal by Lebanon, Israel and the PLO.

Battalion Ready To Depart

AU090847 Rome ANSA in English 0825 GMT 9 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 9 -- Italy's Second Bersaglieri Battalion is ready to depart for Lebanon as soon as the request comes for the creation of the multilateral peacekeeping force to guarantee the evacuation of the Palestinians from west Beirut, a Rome Defense Ministry communique reported Sunday.

On Saturday, France officially announced its intention to take part in the peacekeeping force alongside the United States and Italy.

The crack Italian Bersaglieri Battalion preparing to leave for Lebanon will be made up of 529 volunteers armed with personal and battalion weapons, including rifles, machine guns and anti-tank rocket launchers. The unit will also be equipped with 200 tread and wheeled vehicles. The battalion will be transferred by air and sea and orders to embark for Lebanon are expected as early as Wednesday or sometime within the next eleven days.

GIBRALTAR'S JOSHUA HASSAN ON TIES WITH SPAIN

PM091523 Madrid YA in Spanish 1 Aug 82 pp 24-26

[Jose V. Colchero interview with Chief Minister of Gibraltar Sir Joshua Hassan: "We Will Oppose Discriminatory Opening of Frontier With Gibraltar"]

[Excerpts] Gibraltar -- [Question] Let us talk about the present situation in Gibraltar....

[Answer] What has happened is that here, and particularly in La Linea [border town], preparations for the opening of the border have been made three times. It was said that it would be opened in June 1980, then 20 April this year and then 25 June. From what I have heard, the mayor of La Linea must be much harder pressed than us. At least we are able to pay everyone every month, but he cannot even do that. Gibraltar's economy is sound, thank God, unlike 3-4 years ago, but the same does not apply to Britain, or to the world in general. Here the economy is functioning, and tourism is a little better this year.

The attitude of the Spanish media over the question of the Falkland Islands, (the Malvinas Islands) created unrest in Gibraltar toward the Spanish Government and establishment, because people saw how they sided completely with Argentina.

A Spanish television correspondent in London angered people because Spain's attitude over the Falklands conflict has created very great animosity here. For many reasons we wanted the British to win. We also had a personal interest, because the majority of the fleet that went to the South Atlantic was in Gibraltar a few days previously. Furthermore, we knew that, in the Falklands, Britain had honored a commitment that I always believed it would not honor in Gibraltar. Many people doubted that it would honor it here if the time came, though fortunately...

[Question] Do you believe that that time could come here... with Spain? Do you not believe that the situation is totally different?

[Answer] I was going to say that fortunately we have never feared the occurrence of a similar violent situation here. But there was a certain connection with regard to Britain's attitude toward its commitment to territories without independence. Britain was prepared to defend the Falklanders' rights, which encouraged people here. At the same time in Gibraltar we were very displeased that Spain postponed the opening of the border because of events in the Falklands. We were already preparing the public for the 25 June opening, which should have been a symbol of friendship and concord. The Saturday before 25 June I gave an interview to a local paper to counter those who were saying that we should keep the border closed. I was paving the way for an opening characterized by friendship. Then came the 21 June decision, when Perez-Llorca said in Strasbourg that the conditons were not right -- and this, apart from the harm done to people here and in La Linea, put us back at square one. At the time, in remarks I made tp the House of Commons Foreign Affairs Committee when it came here, I paid tribute to Marcelino Oreja, because I believed he had shown foresight in signing the Lisbon agreement.

[Question] But did the Lisbon agreement not prompt some mistrust here?

[Answer] Yes, there was some mistrust at first, because it was the first time Britain had committed itself to negotiating "everything," which meant that the question of sovereignty could be raised. And some people here, such as extreme leftwinger Bossano, opposed it, and still oppose it. But, from my position of leadership, I explained to the Gibraltarians that though Spain was asserting its claim, Britain was reasserting its commitment and that therefore the agreement had to be accepted, and we did accept it.

I had my bags packed for 15 June to travel to Cintra, because we representatives of Gibraltar were going to take part in the negotiations. But it was decided to postpone them, perhaps because it was not the best possible date, I admit, by a mutual agreement initially suggested by Spain.

[Question] Spain said in Lisbon that it would suspend restrictions as soon as negotiations began.

[Answer] But that is what it has never done, because it started setting preconditions. First, that Spaniards should have the same rights in Gibraltar as the Gilbraltarians; second, the same rights as Europeans; and third -- and this was the 21 June sticking point -- that it could not sit down at the negotiating table without prior knowledge that the final outcome would be the transfer of sovereignty. But how can you start to negotiate and require to know what the end will be before you start? That is not negotiating! What I believe is happening now is that since Spain is in NATO and wants to join the EEC, it is having to give way somewhat on the humanitarian angle, on which it is rather tough...whereas previously someone had to be dying for a relative to be given permission to cross the border, now people are allowed to cross if a relative has a limp, or something of that kind. Also they are granting permission to elderly people.

[Question] Do you believe it is a step forward to allow passage to people who request it? Do you have any information from the Spanish side regarding how far these permits will extend?

[Answer] No, but I do know that the impression that exists in certain sectors on the other side is that we will reach a complete opening, the free movement of pedestrians. We will oppose the possibility of a discriminatory opening which might, for instance permit people to pass from Gibraltar to La Linea but not from La Linea here, or Spaniards but not other foreigners to come here. If it is open, it is opened; if it is not opened, it is not opened. This is how we see it. With the present situation regarding permits, some are allowed to pass, others not.

[Question] Have any permits been denied up to now? I would like to know.

[Answer] It is difficult to know, because applications are made directly to the assistant governor of Algeciras. I believe that such an elaborate procedure has been created in La Linea for opening the frontier because so many staff have nothing to do that these regulations governing the opening of the frontier are just to justify their positions.

[Question] The whole combination of problems concerning Gibraltar must be negotiated to resolve the decolonization dispute, and the only way to exert some kind of pressure is obviously for a large number of tourists to come here to Gibraltar from Spain to make purchases in Gibraltar to avoid paying Spanish taxes. What measure might you suggest to benefit the population on both sides and to resolve the Gibraltar dispute?

[Answer] If what Spanish Foreign Minister Perez-Llorca wants in this matter is that a 275 year-old problem be resolved in four or five meetings, he is wasting his time: His feet are not on the ground and his head is in the clouds. As the Lisbon accords state, the opening of negotiations was to formalize and improve relations for the good of the inhabitants of the area. It talks about conditions of mutual benefit -- it uses many very pretty expressions -- which show that what was desired was to create an environment that would make it possible to live in friendship with Spain again.

[Question] But the Lisbon agreement states that the final objective is to fulfill the UN decolonization requirements.

[Answer] No, No. The Lisbon agreement has been entirely changed and some journalists have contributed to this. The official text of the Lisbon agreement is in English, recognized by Spain, which distorts its provisions. If, after 275 years of discussion of the interpretation of the Utrecht treaty, two foreign ministers cannot draw up a brief communique, accord or statement in 6 hours without forcing the sense, then what is the point of diplomacy? The Lisbon document talks about resolving the problems in accordance with the UN resolutions but that is all. The version drawn up by the Spaniards is different. The English text is the official one.

[Question] So how, in your opinion, can an understanding be reached between Spain and Britain that will satisfy the Gibraltarians?

[Answer] There is no practical viable solution that will satisfy all three sides (though there are said to be two, there are three sides). I am sure that if the people of Gibraltar wanted to be Spanish and I conveyed this to the British Government, it would, as Parliament has already stated, contact the Spanish Government with a view to a transfer. But Britain is committed to defending the population's will, as shown in the Falklands.

[Question] The Gibraltarians' desire to be dependent on Britain seems to me similar to that of the Puerto Ricans to be Americans. Technically and by virtue of their mentality they are very different, but there is an economic situation that benefits them greatly.

[Answer] But people's prosperity also forms part of how their desires are expressed. It has been seen here that Spain has not only forgotten about Gibraltar (which it had no reason to remember) but that it has also forgotten La Linea over the years, leaving it to live off Gibraltar or to die of starvation, as it still does. In 1957 Franco made La Linea an adoptive daughter amid great ostentation. I do not know what purpose it served him!

[Question] Under what conditions would you, as a representative of Gibraltar, be willing to embark on a process of adaptation to Spanish nationality?

[Answer] We cannot proceed from preconceptions. I exercise the right invested in me by the British Government to determine my future -- not in general but with regard to whether I want my future to be with Britain or with Spain, nothing more than that. I have a choice and within the right conferred on me by Britain I exercise my choice, but the concept of "self-determination" is a living one, so I cannot determine the destiny of any future generations who may want to be Spanish. That is up to them! All I say is that under present circumstances, considering the record of events and the way in which it has been attempted to subjugate Gibraltar with restrictions and in view of the contrast between the kind of life that we have managed to create with our own means and our own constitution and British assistance and what can be seen on the other side of the border, this generation will never want to be Spanish.

[Question] So do you believe that the Spanish side is misleading itself with its hopes of negotiations?

[Answer] Absolutely, absolutely. They are aware of the facts there but they prefer to ignore them. It was the same with the World Cup, which they believed they would win: They even had a celebration song already prepared. That is what is known as self-deception.

PRESS ON MARITIME SURVEILLANCE, SUB INCIDENTS

LD102120 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1620 GMT 10 Aug 82

[From the press review]

[Text] In both Finland and Sweden the border guards have had to intensify the surveillance of the territorial waters, for foreign submarines have recently been observed increasingly often both in the Baltic and the Gulf of Bothnia. These unidentified submarines, SAVON SANOMAT says today, have also violated Finland's territorial waters on several occasions during the summer.

According to Finnish views the movement of these foreign submarines is connected mainly with intelligence activities against Sweden, and not so much with Finland, says the Center Party paper SAVON SANOMAT in Kuopio. However, it is the right and duty of every independent state to ensure that its borders, including its maritime borders, are not violated, and thus the intensified surveillance is fully justified.

In Finland no one has made such dramatic statements in connection with these incidents as have the Swedish Navy chiefs, who have claimed that the increased violations of territorial waters by submarines show that a foreign state is making war preparations against Sweden. In Finland the violations of territorial waters have been surrounded with great silence, even kept secret whenever possible. There is no reason in Finland to speak about war preparations against us. According to SAVON SANOMAT, it would not be at all realistic, but we have no reason either to keep secret the violations of our territorial waters. They must be appropriately investigated, as every state strives to do, and prevented as far as possible. And this is the purpose of the intensified surveillance, SAVON SANOMAT says today.

If anyone has taken seriously the slogan about the Baltic being a sea of peace, he has recently been returned to the world of harsh realities,writes the National Coalition Party paper AAMULEHTI, in its third editorial on the same topic. Last autumn's submarine drama off Karlskrona has already shown that ominous things are taking place under the calm surface of the Baltic.

The silence of the authorities makes it difficult to appraise whether the activities of foreign submarines in the northern territorial waters and the narrow channels have really increased alarmingly, or whether this is a more or less normal situation, which has only now gained more coverage by the public media. It is likely that military and strategic interest in the Baltic has recently increased. Both superpower groups are engaged in energetic intelligence activity in this area in order to make more accurate their plans in the event of a possible conflict. Special concern is caused by the appearance of nuclear weapons in the Baltic in places other than the warheads of missiles.

Small states like Finland and Sweden can do nothing about the strategic plans of the military alliances, but they can intensify the surveillance of their borders. It is their duty to do so. If they want to preserve the credibility of their policy of neutrality, they cannot connive at the violations of territorial waters, AAMULEHTI says today.

MEA TO CONDUCT AIR OPERATIONS FROM LARNACA

[Text] Absolutely reliable reports by ALITHIA state that within a few days the Lebanese airline company Middle East Airlines (MEA) is expected to transfer its entire fleet of airplanes to Larnaca International Airport. Following a special agreement, MEA will fly from Larnaca to points in Europe that are not being served by Cyprus Airlines, for example, Nice, Geneva, Denmark and so forth. MEA will also fly to various points in West Africa.

According to the same reports, a relevant agreement between the Lebanese company and Cyprus Airlines was signed yesterday.

On the basis of this agreement, MEA will carry the increased traffic between the Middle East and Europe and West Africa and will offer a percentage of its profits to Cyprus Airlines. Furthermore, Cypriots traveling to Europe will be able to fly directly to various countries that will be served by the Lebanese planes.

Some planes of the Lebanese airline company are already at Larnaca Airport. The remaining planes are expected to arrive in the next few days.

Meanwhile, the increased traffic which was observed recently from the Middle East to Europe through Larnaca has produced a large profit for Cyprus Airlines because it has dealt successfully with the entire situation.

DAILY: SUPERPOWERS PREFER KIPRIANOU PRESIDENCY

NC071059 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 7 Aug 82 p 1

[Editorial: "The Beloved of the Two Superpowers"]

[Excerpts] Both Moscow and Washington want Kiprianou as the president of Cyprus, but of course for different reasons and certainly for their own goals.

Russia and the United States view Cyprus and its problem from the Turkish perspective. Ankara rather than Nicosia weighs more on their balance of respect and love.

Moscow does not want a solution to the Cyprus problem. In fact, through its stance it has contributed to the creation of the problem as it now stands. Moscow knew that a coup would take place in Cyprus on 15 July 1974 and it did not try to stop it. Moscow knew very well that the Turkish invasion would take place on 20 July and it did not work to avert it. It secretly let things develop the way they did hoping that developments would lead to a war between two NATO members -- Greece and Turkey.

Russia has this secret hope and constantly nurtures it. It views the Cyprus problem as a cancerous growth on the body of NATO and it wants it to continue to be so. So long as the Cyprus problem is not solved there will always be the possibility of a Greek-Turkish clash. So long as the problem remains outstanding, there will always exist a possibility for an intra-NATO war.

Moscow has reasons to believe that Kiprianou will never be eagerly prepared to sign a solution for the Cyprus problem. Moscow believes that Kiprianou prefers the Cyprus problem to be eternally in suspense. Moscow must know something to believe that Kiprianou will never be ready to accept even the best settlement of our national issue under the current circumstances. Moscow's aims absolutely coincide with Kiprianou's mood. Moscow's hope for a war between Greece and Turkey is strengthened by Kiprianou's innate and permanent indecisiveness to sign any solution.

It is precisely for this reason that Moscow favors Kiprianou. It is for this reason that Moscow ordered AKEL to support Kiprianou's candidacy and forget that he is "unworthy" and "ineffective." A man who, even unwittingly, serves its plans is not "unworthy" for Moscow. A president who, even incidentally, agrees with its aims is not "ineffective."

However, the United States also "supports" Kiprianou, of course on the basis of different criteria and for different reasons. Washington considers both Turkey and Cyprus as its proprietary vineyards. It wants an immediate solution to the Cyprus problem without, however, disappointing Turkey. Above all, it wants Greece and Turkey to avoid a clash over the Cyprus problem. Washington wants a solution that first of all will satisfy Ankara, second Athens and third Nicosia. Such a solution cannot be the result of negotiations; rather, it must be the result of an imposition, but the imposition of such a solution presupposes the smoothing out of the road and the creation of appropriate conditions.

With Kiprianou as president for 5 more years and with AKEL essentially the leader of Cyprus, the United States believes that such dislocation and chaos will prevail in Cyprus that at a given moment it will find the opportunity to impose a solution of the Cyprus problem exactly to its liking.

Washington has reason to believe that following the consortium's [AKEL-Democratic Party] victory [in the elections for president] nothing will remain standing in this country. Everything will collapse; everything will be leveled. When Cyprus is in its death throes as a result of the blows by the consortium's members, when the people are weak as a result of the consortium's sickness, then the imposition of a solution to the Cyprus problem will be easy and possible. Kiprianou will do everything to weaken and exhaust the country. He will do precisely what the United States wants and for this reason Washington tacitly favors and approves of him.

SPOKESMAN ON PEACE FORCE, DIPLOMATIC AID TO PLO

NC101540 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 10 Aug 82 p 10

[Text] Because of certain reports, the government spokesman stated yesterday that "no proposal has been made to the Greek Government from anywhere on sending troops or ships to Lebanon." Beirut Radio had reported that the first group of Palestinian fighters would depart Beirut on French and Greek freighters under "international protection", with the U.S. 6th Fleet aircraft carrier Independence also participating.

The Greek spokesman also made it known that Greece's support for the PLO only concerns diplomatic aid. The spokesman also clarified that Faruq Qaddumi, head of the PLO Political Department, "did not ask for anything more specific" in his meeting with Prime Minister Papandreou.

Greek Participation Vetoed

NC101711 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 10 Aug 82 p 1

[Text] Prospects for Greek participation in a UN peace force to preserve a cease-fire in Lebanon are collapsing after the rather unexpected veto by the Israeli Government. Already late last night authoritative circles considered the issue closed as far as the Greek side was concerned.

It is worth pointing out, however, that until a few days ago the Israeli stand was positive once some initial contradictions were dealt with. The Israeli veto was presented exactly 5 minutes before 1200 -- a fact not devoid of wider political ulterior motives....

Thus it appears that the PASOK government has once again fallen victim to...its ideological exaltation in the sensitive Middle East area. A first class opportunity to internationally strengthen Greek prestige has been lost.

On the other hand, it is characteristic that at this moment a guilty silence prevails in official circles over the possibility of a "visit of indefinite length" to Greece by the Palestinian leader Yasir 'Arafat.

GOVERNMENT OFFERS TO PURSUE IRAN, IRAQ CONTACTS

TA101508 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1450 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, 10 Aug (AA) -- Turkey might continue her "high-level contacts" with both parties to the Iran-Iraq war if she believes this would be "useful" and if conditions are "suitable."

He would not term Turkey's intiatives in this connection as an offer of "mediation," Foreign Ministry Spokesman Hasmi Akiman said Friday [as received], adding Turkey had felt compelled to express her concern and to take the views of both governments involved, because she had friendly and close relations with both countries.

ULUSU'S IRAN-IRAQ MEDIATION EFFORTS LAUDED

NC110906 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 8 Aug 82 p 11

[Bulent Erandac report]

[Text] Ankara, (HURRIYET) -- Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has become the best known leader in the Middle East, which has become the powder keg of the world, and one of the most popular leaders among the countries of the Middle East. Prime Minister Ulusu has returned from Iran with news that is likely to lead to extremely interesting developments and with a peace package.

Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu's visit to Iran began in silence and ended in silence. The reason for this silence is that this was the first time a Turkish prime minister visited Iran and carried out contacts there since spiritual leader Khomeyni assumed power. Prime Minister Ulusu held talks with the Iranian leaders within the framework of Islamic good will and in view of Turkish-Iraqi contacts. After these contacts, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu's visits to and contacts in Iran will be carried out more openly.

According to news that has leaked, Iran's peace package is in Ulusu's hand. This package will be handed to the Iraqi authorities. Ulusu will visit Iraq when Iraq's reply is given. As the background will have been prepared after his visit to Iraq, Ankara will become one of the most important international centers in the termination of the Iranian-Iraqi conflict.

With the agreement, which in the days ahead may go down in history as "the Ankara agreement", the conflict of the past 2 years will come to an end and the problems will be radically resolved.

The prestige won in the Middle East by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu of the NATO-member state Turkey has compelled the NATO leaders to follow the situation with interest. NATO is carefully watching developments. Formal and informal contacts which Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has had, and will continue to have, with the NATO leaders are of great importance. The informal flow of news has continued and will continue.

The Islamic Conference, convened in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, decided to set up a good will committee to terminate the Iraqi-Iranian conflict. Sekou Toure of Guinea was elected chairman of this delegation. The head of state of Pakistan, Ziaul Haq, and Prime Minister Ulusu have become members at their respective levels.

The action which Prime Minister Ulusu took, independent of the delegation after the Jiddah conference, has compelled the good will committee to wait for the developments. This enhanced Ulusu's prestige.

It is believed that following his contacts in Iran and Iraq, Prime Minister Ulusu may find an opportunity to meet the king of Saudi Arabia. Iraq's reply to Iran's peace packet will provide this opportunity.

[Text] Ankara, 10 Aug (AA) -- The Turkish Government has asked various foreign governments to provide better protection for Turkish diplomatic missions abroad, Foreign Ministry spokesman Nazmi Akiman said.

ASSEMBLY CONTINUES TO DEBATE DRAFT CONSTITUTION

TA101625 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1600 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, 10 Aug (AA) -- Consultative Assembly member Mrs. Tulay Onsy said the draft constitution was not intended for the current period of emergency.

Addressing the plenary session during general debate on the draft constitution, Onsy believed the document considered the state and individual as "opponents" of one another.

Mehmet Pamak called for popular election of the head of state, in which case he could appropriately be given extensive powers.

Feridun Sakir Ogunc claimed the draft reflected the views of management, describing the section on labor relations as a funeral for trade unions.

Mustafa Alpdundar claimed the draft would take the labor movement "20 years back".

FOREIGN MINISTER DETAILS ARMS EXPORT REQUESTS

AU101155 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 10 Aug 82 p 4

[Text] Vienna -- The Foreign Ministry has processed 873 applications for arms exports since 1978, and in 25 cases the applications were turned down. This was stated by Foreign Minister Pahr in response to a written parliamentary inquiry by (People's Party) Deputy Steinbauer.

Pahr also explained that his ministry only has to examine whether export applications correspond to the requirements of international law and to foreign policy interests -- taking into consideration the country's permanent neutrality. The Federal Chancellery, however, examines the applications on humanitarian and human rights grounds. There were 166 applications altogether in 1978, 210 last year, and 101 in the first half of 1982.

CHINA BLOCKS RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENTS

PM101339 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 4 Aug 82 p 3

[ANP report]

[Text] The Hague, 4 Aug -- In protest at the Netherlands supply of two submarines to Taiwan, China is refusing to ratify its cultural agreement and its agreement for economic and technological cooperation with the Netherlands. This information is contained in a memorandum which Prime Minister van Agt in his capacity as foreign minister has sent to the First Chamber in preparation for the debate on the Foreign Ministry's 1982 budget.

Last year China downgraded diplomatic ties to the lowest possible level -- that of charges d'affaires -- after the Netherlands had refused to reverse its decision to grant the Rijn-Schelde-Verolme company an export license for two modern submarines.

The PRC made it clear that it viewed the supply of modern arms to Taiwan as interference in its internal affairs. When the Netherlands and China decided in 1972 to upgrade their diplomatic relations from the charge d'affaires level to full embassy level they confirmed the principles of mutual respect for each other's sovereignty and territorial inviolability, and the Netherlands declared that it would respect the Chinese view that Taiwan is a province of the People's Republic.

FIRM TO DELIVER GAS TURBINES TO SOVIET UNION

LD111800 Hamburg DPA in German 1442 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Essen, 11 Aug (DPA) -- AEG-Kanis (Essen), not affected by the receivership of AEG-Telefunken, will "definitely" deliver this year 6 of the 10 gas turbines ordered by the Soviet Union. This assurance was given by the chairman of the factory council, Hans Fehr, at a meeting of the work force. According to Fehr, the necessary parts for the first delivery of turbines have been "found" in spite of the U.S. embargo on several components.

After corresponding assurances by the Federal Government, the banks have agreed to provide the DM200 million required this year to conclude the deal, Fehr said.

GROUP URGES PROBE OF PIPELINE WORKING CONDITIONS

[Text] [No dateline received] The International Society for Human Rights suggested to European governments today that they call on the Soviet Union to authorize an international commission of trade unions to inspect the gas pipeline stretch in order to investigate working conditions. The society stressed in a press statement that their information on the use of prisoners in the construction of the gas pipeline stems from several sources. Their information indicates that a chain of work camps have been set up along the gas pipeline in Siberia in which 100,000 people, including political prisoners, work under conditions of forced labor to complete the preparatory work for the gas pipeline.

BONN REAFFIRMS ARMS EMBARGO AGAINST ARGENTINA

LD111530 Hamburg DPA in German 1416 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn, 11 Aug (DPA) -- Following Paris' decision to resume arms supplies to Argentina, Bonn is sticking to the arms embargo imposed on Buenos Aires by the European Community at the start of the Falklands war. Speaking to the press today, Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl referred to his statement of last week that the conflict is "not yet clearly and definitely ended in the political sense."

The French Foreign Ministry stated on Tuesday that Paris sees no reason to maintain the embargo after the hostilities over the islands were over. Ruehl once again made it clear that all types of weapons and also prior contracts for deliveries are affected by the Bonn embargo. This means that the warships presently being built for Argentina in German shipyards cannot be delivered until after the lifting of the embargo.

GOVERNMENT APPEALS FOR END TO BEIRUT SUFFERING

LD111500 Hamburg DPA in German 1356 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn, 11 Aug (DPA) -- Following the fresh prospect of an agreement on PLO withdrawal from Beirut, the Federal Government today made an urgent appeal to the Israeli forces and the "PLO combatants" to spare the embattled city and population and to cease firing. After cabinet discussions Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl said that while details of an agreement are being negotiated the suffering and sacrifice in the Lebanese capital should be ended without delay.

Ruehl said that during the meeting the Federal Government backed the EC states' protest against their diplomatic missions in Beirut being impeded by the military actions. Bonn expects that the opportunity will soon be created for German humanitarian aid, given directly or indirectly via international organizations, to be continued more intensively and "that all civilized nations will contribute their share to ease the population's suffering."

POLISH COAL DELIVERIES NEARLY BACK TO NORMAL

DW100935 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 10 Aug 82 p 7

[Dispatch signed BE.]

[Excerpt] Duesseldorf -- According to information supplied by the federation of coal importers, with which big supplier companies of the electric power generating branch are also now affiliated, the import of hard coal to the Federal Republic from third countries last year increased by 10 percent to 7.4 million tons. Heading the list of suppliers is the United States with well over 3 million tons, followed by South Africa with 1.8 million tons. The imports from Poland dropped by nearly 900,000 tons to well over 1 million tons compared with 1980 due to the strikers in Upper Silesia; yet since the establishment of the military rule in Warsaw they have nearly reached their old level again and have been proceeding flawlessly for months now. About 600,000 tons came from Australia where the Ruhrkohle Company has contracted participation. Added to these imports must be the deliveries from other countries of the European Community. These amounted to 3.7 million tons, including just about 2.1 million tons from Great Britain alone.

Menahem Begin is only feeding violence and hatred by addressing certain French citizens, Mr le Guen added.

10 AUG EXPLOSION LINKED WITH TERRORIST GROUP

LD110912 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Another attack in Paris: Yesterday evening a fairly powerful bomb went off in front of a building housing the offices of a firm which imports fruit from Israel. A woman who was walking her dog was seriously injured in the head and legs but her life is not in danger. In the porchway of a neighboring building an inscription in red ink demanded, and I am quoting, the withdrawal of the Israeli fascists from Beirut, and threatened to kill the financiers and the propagandists of Zionism. The slogan was signed A.D. — Action Directe — according to the police.

Eight activists of that terrorist group were questioned yesterday in the framework of the investigation into the anti-Semitic attack in the Rue des Rosiers but they have been released.

COLOMBO REFLECTS ON TALKS WITH ARGENTINES

AU111603 Rome ANSA in English 1546 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 11 -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, on the eve of his return to Rome from Buenos Aires at the end of official visits to Peru, Brazil and Argentina, declared his optimism on the future of European-Latin American relations in the wake of the war between Great Britain and Argentina over the Falkland Islands in the South Atlantic.

He reported that he began his South American swing with the "impression that the war had left many after-effects, much resentment, not only in Argentina and Great Britain, but between Europe and all of Latin America.

"Now", he told the Milan daily, CORREIRE DELLA SERA, for publication today, "as I am concluding these visits, I must say that the dialogue (between these areas) was immediately taken up".

Addressing himself to Italo-Argentina ties in his interview Colombo said, "the Argentines appreciated the political value of the Italian position and quickly showed their gratitude", in reference to the Rome government decision to not renew the European Economic Community sanctions against Argentina on May 17.

The diplomatic chief noted that "Argentina wants to reopen negotiations in the United Nations" on the controversy over the Falkland Islands "and has asked Italy to be understanding and show solidarity" in these circumstances.

According to the foreign minister, in debate in the United Nations on the Falklands, Argentina would "reaffirm the principle of sovereignty, refer to all the concepts of decolonization and make specific reference to the motions of the non-aligned countries."

Speaking about his visit to Argentina in a more general context, Colombo said that it was extremely useful to inform the Buenos Aires authorities "on the responsibilities and the limitations in Europe" and for Italy to gain an understanding of "the political and psychological positions which predominate in Argentine public opinion".

In the area of the problems of underdevelopment rampant in the South American countries, the minister said, "the industrialized countries must face the question of either considering this problem as a chronic illness or helping the governments of the continent to reorganize their economies by lending major emphasis to development policy."

Back on the situation within Argentina, the foreign minister said that President Reynaldo Bignone confirmed for him "the desire to substitute the military junta with institutions which are truly democratic, elected by the grass roots."

"One thing is certain", he concluded, "political forces in Buenos Aires are already in movement, even if the economic situation will give them a problem which will not make them popular. They can overcome these problems only if they seek solidarity".

ROUNDUP OF PARTIES' REACTION TO CRISIS

AU110900 Rome ANSA in English 0840 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 11 -- Italian chief-of-state Sandro Pertini is expected to put outgoing Premier Giovanni Spadolini back in office today with the job of setting up a new Rome government.

All that was sure as of last night was that Pertini had summoned Spadolini to his office this morning when he wound up his preliminary consultations with the nation's political parties, which is routine procedure in the government crises.

The Christian Democrat Party (DC) newspaper IL POPOLO carried an editorial today imploring the Socialists not to push for new elections.

"We have asked and we continue to ask the Socialists to reflect seriously on this point -- what good are early elections if after they are over we are right back where we started, with the task of settling our own scores and of dealing with the country's problems, which will have worsened in the meantime?".

Social Democrat Party (PSDI) Secretary Pietro Longo measured his words carefully when asked in an interview for today's IL GIORNALE NUOVO daily whether or not the country was headed for early elections.

"I think that a new assignment given to Spadolini follows the logic of political continuity in which we shall try to operate concretely for the sake of tackling the economic, social and, in some sense, institutional crises plaguing the country".

But PSI sharpshooter Rino Formica had a different opinion about the prospect of Spadolini returning to office. "It seems like leftover soup", he quipped, renewing a call for early elections to settle the deadlock.

PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi issued a statement last night about the developments of the crisis, saying he "had heard a lot of preaching, but it did not amount to much".

According to Craxi, there was a lot of talk about reviving "washed-out" governing formulas and some "extravagant" ideas that "overlooked the tangles that have backed up on the comb of Italian politics".

Observers took his remark about "some extravangant ideas" as a reference to a proposal the Communist Party made to Pertini on Monday for the creation of a government whose ministers were chosen on merit, and not on the basis of political affiliations.

The creation of such a government, the PCI newspaper (?said, could) have favorable repercussions in all fields.

The Liberal Party (PLI) leadership came out yesterday against holding early elections. PLI Secretary Valerio Zanone said his party was in agreement with the Christian Democrats about wanting to assure "the normal continuation of the legislature" after meeting with DC Secretary Ciriaco de Mita in Rome.

SPADOLINI TO BEGIN TALKS WITH PARTY LEADERS

AU111530 Rome ANSA in English 1521 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 11 -- Head of state Sandro Pertini tapped outgoing Premier Giovanni Spadolini today to form Italy's 42nd postwar government.

Spadolini, whose five-party coalition sworn in June 28 last year collapsed on Saturday, told reporters at the end of his consultation with Pertini that he had been given an ample mandate but that the situation "presents aspects of extreme difficulty".

The premier-designate said he would go to work today by beginning a round of talks with the leaders of all the political parties.

One newsman referred to a barb dropped last night by the outgoing Socialist finance minister, Rino Formica, who compared another mandate for Spadolini to "personal reasons" of his own corpulence to say that he would seek recourse in "very frugal meals".

He refused to get involved in speculation on a timetable for his bid to form a new government but said that he did not intend to take a break for the Ferragosto holiday, August 15, a time when virtually all of Italy grinds to a halt.

Immediately after the outgoing premier was picked for the job, political observers noted that he mentioned his intention to stick closely to Article 92 of the Constitution which states: "The president of the republic nominates the premier and, on the proposal of the premier, the cabinet ministers".

Spadolini, these commentators said, chose to emphasize the autonomy of the premier-designate as regards the say in matters claimed by the party secretaries.

In this connection, the Communist Party two days ago launched a proposal for a "constitutional" rather than an "institutional" government, one in which the cabinet ministers would be chosen for their qualifications, and not as representatives of the parties or party factions, and would function without the heavy-handed conditioning of the party secretaries.

Meets With DC, PCI Officials

AU120844 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Excerpts] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 12 -- Premier-Designate Giovanni Spadolini held consultations Wednesday with delegations of Italy's two largest parties, the Christian Democrats and Communists, and will meet today with the Socialists and all the other parties in a bid to form Italy's forty-second postwar government.

The Socialists are the only party in the outgoing coalition calling for early elections, but made formal statements in support of Spadolini and called for a "great reform" of the Italian institutional political system.

The Christian Democrat delegation outlined its position in favor of averting early elections and in the five-party coalition formula, while the Communists called for a cabinet of ministers chosen on merit and not on the basis of political affiliations, which PCI Secretary Enrico Berlinguer said would "introduce a new element in the situation" and that it is up to the other parties to assume their responsibilities.

COLOMBO, PEREZ-LLORCA MEET IN MADRID 11 AUG

AU111946 Rome ANSA in English 1933 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) Madrid, August 11 — Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and his Spanish counterpart Pedro Perez-Llorca agreed here today that Europe, and particularly their own countries, should pay greater heed to the problems of Latin America.

Both men flew into Madrid today from visits to South American countries. Colombo was on his way home from a tour of Peru, Brazil and Argentina and Perez-Llorca returned from a trip to Ecuador, Colombia, Peru and Venezuela.

They met for two hours at the airport, swapping impressions about their respective missions and talks with the leaders of almost half of the South American continent's nations.

Colombo and Perez-Llorca urged that efforts be made to smooth over the flaws in European-Latin American relations that remained from the Anglo-Argentine war over the Falkland Islands.

The case for reviving communication lines between Europe and Latin America received a new boost recently when Colombia announced a desire to join the Non-aligned Nations Movement.

The announcement was interpreted as much as an anti-European as anti-American reaction to the international line-up that emerged during the Falklands conflict.

The Italian and Spanish foreign ministers also agreed today that negotiations for the settlement of the Anglo-Argentine dispute should be held under the auspices of the United Nations, as Buenos Aires has been advocating.

Peace negotiations between Britain and Argentina may be able to start as early as next month at the United Nations.

But both Colombo and Perez-Llorca stressed the need of being particularly cautious in submitting any resolutions to the General Assembly for approval. Motions on the dispute, they warned, will need widespread and "qualified" approval if they are to have the moral authority needed to effectively settle the dispute.

In the two foreign ministers' view, the settlement should qualify for Latin American as well as European approval.

On other issues, Colombo and Perez-Llorca voiced the hope that no snags come up to hamper the progress of negotiations for Spain's entry into the European Economic Community, scheduled to resume in the fall.

CALVO-SOTELO COMMENTS ON LATIN AMERICAN VISIT

LD112032 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo returned to his office at the Moncloa Palace today after his official week-long visit to various Latin American countries. According to government sources, Calvo-Sotelo is devoting today to preparing the topics for discussion at tomorrow's Council of Ministers session.

On arrival in Madrid, the Spanish prime minister said the reason for this trip was to attend the inauguration of the new president of Colombia, Belisario Bentancur, and to have talks in Bogota with the heads of state of the Andes Pact and other figures in Latin American political life. Calvo-Sotelo said that during his talks with President Hurtado of Ecuador, President Belaunde of Peru and President Herrera Campins of Venezuela they discussed bilateral questions, the stepping-up of trade relations and the situation of the Caribbean zone and the Latin American continent after the Malvinas [Falkland] war. The prime minister said that during his tour he did not discuss matters concerning internal policy and that he is responsible to the king for proposing a date for early elections if he considers this appropriate. He also said the government party would not enter into preelectoral coalitions.

With regard to the political significance of the presence of four Spanish political leaders in Bogota, Calvo-Sotelo said it was a coincidence and that whenever this happens there is an opportunity for discussion. But, he said, the problems facing Spain will of course not be resolved in Santa Fe de Bogota.

During his technical stop-over in Caracas on the way back from the Peruvian capital to Madrid, Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo had talks with Venezuelan President Herrera Campins.

Calvo-Sotelo told Herrera Campins that Spain's future is well stabilized, with a democratic and parliamentary regime which has deep roots in the Spanish people and which does not see any great problems on the horizon. We also stressed that the instituting of regional autonomy is now being completed and this will satisfy the demands felt by several Spanish regions for many years. As regards the economic situation, the Spanish prime minister said the Spanish balance of payments had shown an improvement. The problem which most concerns the government is unemployment. During their meeting the two politicians agreed to find a solution to the problem of the Spanish Enasa-Pegaso company which has clouded the good relations between the two countries. Signs are that a solution will include the payment of compensation.

GOVERNMENT GRANTS HUMANITARIAN AID TO LEBANON

LD111726 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1430 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] The Finnish Government today granted 6 million Finnish markka in aid to the civilian population suffering from the war in Lebanon. The aid sum will be channeled through the Finnish Red Cross and three international organizations. Finland condemns Israel's attack on Lebanon, but the war has not changed Finland's official relations with the parties to the crisis. This was stated by Foreign Minister Par Stenback at a news conference this afternoon. Here is a report by Yrjo Lautela:

[Lautela] The sum granted by the government today is relatively large, for the total available for humanitarian aid for developing countries this year is Fm20 million. After today's decision a total of Fm7.3 million of this has been granted for Lebanon. The Finnish Red Cross has used Fm3 million to date for aid for Lebanon. But, as was noted at the news conference, Finland's contribution is fairly modest in comparison with the aid of the other Nordic countries. The 2-month war in Lebanon has been the object of great attention and fierce debates in the Finnish information media. The descriptions from Beirut about the suffering of the civilian population have given their own desperate hue to this debate. Foreign Minister Par Stenback said the government is convinced that public opinion in Finland, like the government, sees that Israel has embarked upon a path which means losing many friends in the world.

[Begin Stenback recording] We do not approve of Israel's extensive military operations in any sense. In the view of the Finnish Government these actions cannot be regarded as acceptable even from the viewpoint of defense. [Words indistinct] when the military operations were aimed at refugee camps and extended to the Lebanese capital. [end recording]

The war in Lebanon, like the whole Middle East, is however [word indistinct] a difficult tangle of problems, in which the interests of the big powers clash. Thus Finland, in accordance with its policy of neutrality, will not begin inflicting any pinpricks outside the sector outlined by the resolutions of the UN Security Council. These resolutions cannot be adopted if any one of the permanent members of the council opposes them. This was the reply given by Foreign Minister Stenback to a question on the effect of the Lebanon crisis on Finland's official relations with Israel:

[Begin Stenback recording] As regards diplomatic relations, the fact that we maintain diplomatic relations with Israel, as some other countries do, does not reflect any stance on Israel's policy. It does not mean approval. We do not intend to touch upon these diplomatic relations. And as regards economic sanctions, it has been Finland's consistent stance that we can participate only in sanctions approved by the UN Security Council. [end recording] Stenback said the government is unanimous on this.

There have been no changes, either, in relations between Finland and the PLO. The latest talks on the establishment of a PLO office in Helsinki took place just before the Lebanon war; during the war nothing can have taken place, of course. Diplomatic recognition of the PLO is not possible because Finland recognizes only states.

CONSULTATIVE ASSEMBLY DEBATES CONSTITUTION

TA111803 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Text] The Consultative Assembly's general debate on the draft constitution [as opposed to a debate on the specific articles] is expected to be completed tomorrow. Constitutional Committee Chairman Orhan Aldikacti will reply to the criticisms before a vote is held on whether to pass on to a debate on the articles of the constitution.

Our correspondent has learned that the committee will ask for a certain period of time to prepare the answers to the criticisms. After the committee replies to the criticisms an open vote will be held on whether to debate the articles. If the members vote against such a debate the draft constitution will be returned to the committee. If the members vote positively, in accordance with a decision adopted earlier, the Assembly will discuss at least eight articles in 1 day. If the debate on eight articles is not completed within the Assembly's working hours, the assembly will work at night as well.

The general debates on the draft constitution continued today. The members who expressed their views today said that the most important duty of the Consultative Assembly is to build the foundations of a balanced, stable and rational system. They stressed that a choice must be made between the presidential system and the parliamentary system, adding that if the president was to have the powers cited in the draft constitution then he must be elected by the people.

Some of the members pointed out that the parliamentary system was deformed in Turkey due to the systems of relative representation and primary elections. They added that measures eliminating the deficiencies of these systems must be included in the constitution.

Some members complained that the draft constitution did not include measures to prevent unemployment and inflation, adding that although the draft granted new and useful powers to the state in connection with the supervision of the market and the protection of the consumer, it excluded provisions for the rational exploitation of resources and for the realization of a minimum growth rate.

The members called for the clarification of the setting-up of and powers of the proposed state consultative council and for trust in the people in passing on to democracy and in the exercise of sovereignty.

INTERNATIONAL ACTION ON TERRORISM URGED

LD111120 Ankara International Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 10 Aug 82

[Station commentary prepared by the Turkish Radio and Television Corporation]

[Text] We have today buried the latest of our martyrs to fall victim to Armenian murder gangs. The memories we shall keep alive of these innocent fellow citizens who lost their lives in a massacre perpetrated by an international organization of savagery will constitute the most potent and legitimate foundation for the duties and obligations that shall henceforth fall to us with regard to the Armenian murder gangs.

This series of inhuman crimes, which no one any longer doubts are backed by external circles, reached a climax in the recent Esenboga massacre. With this escalation the Turkish state has also been undoubtedly pushed to the very limit of patience and forbearance. Turkey and the Turkish nation have done their best until now to avoid crossing this line. They have upheld a dignified and noble stance, carefully avoiding in their struggle against Armenian crimes stooping to a level beneath that which is proper for a state. To avoid descending to the level of this savagery and criminality that has been placed out in the open for all mankind to see will undoubtedly continue to be the essential component of the dignified and calm behavior of the Turkish nation.

Everybody -- whether they support Armenian crimes, or condemn them -- should be aware, however, that the Turkish Republic is not so powerless that it cannot tackle a handful of criminals and (?ruffians). Such criminals and (?ruffians), even if there were a whole army of them, would be unable to harm in the slightest our existence as a state and as a nation -- as history has amply shown -- and their pathetic attempts shall shatter into a thousand shards on the immutable rock of the Turkish state.

History registers no victories for any enterprise that was doomed to failure and futility from the start, nor will it do so now. The Armenian criminals will henceforth find themselves facing a Turkish Republic in a very different stance. As our head of state has said, the reckoning for the extinguished lives and for the quantities of blood shed shall not be left to history. It is sad to observe in the situation we face today that there are certain states, with various forms of support and varying degrees of responsibility, behind the savage crimes our people have been subjected to. If savagery and crime find their way into international relations as a method of implementing policy, then the ensuing chain of developments is likely to destroy first those who practice this method. Just as laws are preceded by certain moral and communal principles in the lives of human societies, so the international community also has moral principles that have grown and become established over the centuries. Those who do not know what happens to the destroyers of such principles should take a look at recent history to see the results of criminal methods clearly. The Turkish state is determined to maintain the behavior that it has hitherto manifested as a dignified and respectable state. It is therefore hoped that Turkey will [not] be forced to certain changes in methods.

We also want to voice an appeal to all friendly countries and nations. International Armenian terrorism is an extensive attempt at subversion hiding behind the mask of a national cause. The target is not the existence and integrity of Turkey and the Turkish nation alone. The target is all democratic countries, democratic and free countries based on human rights and freedoms. Consequently, the target is much broader than is supposed. As the target is broader, so will the attempts against it inevitably expand.

The attempts at murder and savagery that are today directed at Turkey will gradually encompass other countries as well. This is dictated by the nature of the international terrorism that we are facing today. Turkey is determined, with the full force of its own means, to prevent crimes directed against itself and is ready to prove this determination at all times. But everybody, every nation, and every state that respects human life, that considers the right of each individual human to live in security as the most hallowed of all rights, and that opposes savagery and crime being used as a means of struggle, has an obligation to unite their efforts in organized cooperation. An international organization and cooperation against an international movement has become more of a necessity than ever before. We worry that waiting for tomorrow to take action may prove to be too late.

ASALA, PLO, SYRIAN JOINT OPERATIONS DISCLOSED

NC111107 Istanbul GUNES in Turkish 9 Aug 82 pp 1, 10

[Text] It has been ascertained that the Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia (ASALA), which has so far murdered 14 of our diplomats, has tried to infiltrate Turkey in 3-member suicide squads. It has been stated that after the raid on Esenboga, the second target could be a member of the Turkish Government. It has also become apparent that in the latest attack, ASALA was engaged in joint operations with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO). Some Palestinian leaders, who were surrounded in a pincer tactic by Israeli units in west Beirut, held a meeting at the bombed ASALA headquarters with the ASALA administrators 3 days ago. At this meeting it was decided that, starting with Turkey, they would hijack planes and commit crimes and acts of sabotage in Europe. This was intended to prove that the PLO had not been knocked out and that ASALA could continue its militant activities. Realizing that terrorism was the only weapon left, the PLO has chosen two cities of Turkey, namely Ankara and Istanbul, to carry out joint operations with ASALA, whose members it trained in Palestinian camps.

A cargo plane belonging to the Syrian Airlines which arrived in Istanbul from Damascus, capital of Syria, last week was cordoned off by the security forces as soon as it had landed. On this plane there was a special courier parcel to be delivered to an official of the Syrian Consulate General in Istanbul. Opening the parcel, the security officer seized two revolvers fitted with silencers, three high explosive shells, and five hand grenades of Russian make. To whom would this Syrian official hand these weapons and bombs? The matter was easily solved. The police have captured three Palestinians at a hotel in Sehremini, who had arrived in Turkey about 20 days ago. The names of these three Palestinian militants, who held Jordanian passports, are: (Shukru Mohammad), (Abdul-Fattah) and (Yalid Alden.) They belonged to the Habbash Group, one of the bloodiest Palestinian groups of the PLO. These militants were going to stage an action against the Israeli Consulate General in Istanbul on 5 August. They had also chosen El-Al, the Israeli airlines, as another target. Searching the room in which PLO militants were staying, the security officers discovered a map of Istanbul with the Israeli Consulate General and the El-Al buildings marked in red pencil. Among other things found was a 25-meter long electric cable (apparently meant for laying explosives) and plans showing the escape route.

The plan was open and clear. But, unfortunately, while our security forces managed to foil successfully the bloody militant act which the PLO had planned to carry out against Israeli targets in Istanbul, they were unable to prevent the raid which ASALA undertook to carry out in Ankara 2 days later. The three Palestinian terrorists were also found to possess the home address and car registration number of an Israeli offical employed at the Israeli Consulate General.

Security experts are examining the way in which ASALA managed to launch a raid in Ankara while a similar raid by the Palestinian terrorists was successfully foiled in Istanbul. They are considering the possibility that someone collaborated with the Armenian terrorists to obtain weapons and bombs carried in a courier bag from an Arab state.

It is now established that Syria, the PLO and ASALA have formed a triangle of bloody terror against Turkey. It is now clear that Syria, the PLO and ASALA are collaborating.

VOTCP BLAMES U.S., ISRAEL FOR ANKARA INCIDENT

TA111200 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 11 Aug 82

[Station commentary: "The Truth Behind the Esenboga Terror Incident"]

[Excerpts] Commenting on the terror incident which occurred last Saturday at Ankara's Esenboga Airport and which cost the lives of so many persons, a security official said: Unbelievable developments are taking place in Ankara nowadays. This statement is significant since it reveals the chaos and the great discord reigning in the police organization following the terror incident. In the wake of the incident, some circles are exerting efforts to rid themselves of responsibility and to cover up the realities behind the incident, resorting to baseless and concocted (?evidence).

In a bid to conceal the involvement of two U.S. security officials in the terror incident at Ankara's Esenboga Airport, the military junta has censored all reports of the incident.

Meanwhile, acting as the spokesman of imperialism and in order to hide the Israeli and U.S. involvement in the terror incident, the British press has tried to put the blame for the incident on the Soviet Union and the PLO. Distorting the facts, the British newspaper THE DAILY TELEGRAPH tried to blame the Soviet Union and the PLO for the incident.

Basing itself on these distorted reports, which were also broadcast by the BBC, the Istanbul reactionary daily TERCUMAN gave banner headlines to the same accusations, rejoicing at the fact that the U.S. Government had been the first to denounce the Ankara incident. TERCUMAN writers like Rauf Tamer — known for their pro-American stand -- became Israel's spokesman and encouraged by the chauvinistic and aggressive statements by Evren and the other generals of the National Security Council, called for a raid on the PLO offices. This campaign, dear listeners, has been undertaken [words indistinct] and in a bid to conceal the plans and aspirations on our country of people like Reagan and cover up for Israel's barbaric acts in Lebanon and [words indistinct] the murders of people like Begin and Sharon that have evoked hatred and disgust in our public.

The terror incident at Ankara's Esenboga Airport is a provocative incident undertaken for this (?purpose) by the United States and Israel through the most reactionary and fascist elements in Turkey. However this provocative incident will not be able to screen the Israeli murder committed in Lebanon, and will not be able to weaken the hatred and disgust felt by our people.

All this makes clear the purpose for which the U.S. and Israeli intelligence services have cooperated with the reactionary and fascist elements as well as the Turkish National Intelligence Organization [MIT] to undertake the terror incident at Ankara's Esenboga Airport. The fact that in its broadcasts of 8 August the BBC has claimed that the Turkish security forces were informed of the possibility of such an incident and the fact that the policemen at the Esenboga Airport fired at random rather than firing at their target — thus in a way increasing the number of casualties in the incident -- sheds some light on another aspect of the realities behind this provocative act and the purpose lying behind it. As will be recalled, dear listeners, evidence was discovered at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran about the cooperation existing between MIT and Mossad. Despite all these facts and documents, the imperialist mass media organs -- including the British press and the BBC -- and their extensions in our country, have attempted to involve the PLO with the Ankara incident. The reactionary British press organs claim that the PLO has resorted to such an incident in a bid to prove that it is still alive.

The military junta and the reactionary forces that support it will not be able to supress the bloodstained aims of imperialism and Isarel behind the Esenboga incident. The Turkish people, including the progressive and democratic forces which defend the just cause of the Palestinian people, will never allow our beautiful country to be dragged into adventures in the Middle East to defend the interests of the U.S. imperialists and the Israeli Zionists.

It is said in Warsaw however that Noel may be shown some lenience by the Polish authorities, who are reported to be aware that his actions were devoid of a political motive.

Noel's brother and fiancee, who are now in Warsaw, were able to see him for 30 minutes yesterday. They also established contacts with the Polish authorities, contacts which were very satisfactory, they said.

DAVIGNON, HAFERKAMP COMMENT ON U.S. STEEL TALKS

PM121253 Brussels LE SOIR in French 11 Aug 82 p 8

[Maroun Labaki report]

[Text] "Nothing is lost, we are continuing preparations for implementing the agreement negotiated last week." That is the substance of the statements made at noon on Monday in Brussels by European Commission Vice Presidents Davignon and Haferkamp who reached the "arrangement" relating to the limitation of European steel exports to the United States. It will be remembered that back on Friday evening U.S. iron and steel industry giant U.S. Steel rejected the compromise reached the previous day, to which it is nonetheless imperative that it give its agreement.

"The U.S. administration informed us during the weekend of its intention to respect its pledge: It will get the arrangement approved by steel producers on the other side of the Atlantic," Mr Davignon specified. Like Mr Haferkamp, who is responsible for external relations, the vice president for industrial affairs tried, in a press conference held in Berlaymont, to make the U.S. leaders face their political responsibilities and to undermine the solidarity between the Reagan administration and its steel lobby.

The two men indulged in an outright operation to divide enemy ranks. They did not ignore the proverb [as published] and strove to stress the differences of view which have emerged among the Americans. And in passing they praised the attitude of their official interlocutors in Washington.

The latter, according to Mr Davignon and Mr Haferkamp, showed much more anxiety to restore a good political climate between the Ten and the United States during the talks at the end of last week. According to Mr Haferkamp they were "more coherent." That new trend was demonstrated by the fact that all differences of opinion between the two sides of the Atlantic were examined and even linked within the same set of problems.

Vice President Haferkamp expressed the view that the agreement itself was the expression of the U.S. officials' new desire to defuse the commercial or political bombs threatening the Atlantic alliance. In addition he thought that the formation of a special committee with the task of handling all disputes with the Europeans, under the chairmanship of Treasury Secretary Regan, was likely to favor the settlement of outstanding thorny issues, "in the same spirit of cooperation and mutual understanding," he added. With regard to the gas pipeline it should be noted that Mr Haferkamp nonetheless said that a "rapid solution" is not to be expected.

Sharing the Sacrifice

By ostentatiously emphasizing the U.S. leaders' new state of mind -- we will soon know whether it was merely a farce or the product of a European ruse -- the two commissioners challenged President Reagan's men. "The future will show whether the U.S. administration overestimated its persuasive capacity," Mr Davignon concluded in this connection.

The Belgian commissioner specified that the scheduled procedure is going to be followed as from this week to secure the Ten's go-ahead for implementation of the arrangement. On Tuesday the European iron and steel industries will give their verdict and on Wednesday it will be the governments' turn to do so through their permanent representatives in Brussels.

Mr Davignon showed some optimism about the chances of rapidly arriving at a division of the sacrifice among the Europeans. He predicted, in veiled words, that the FRG will be less reluctant to make concessions since it will be a question of its iron and steel industry being penalized on entry into the U.S. market, like those of the other Community states. In this connection he recalled that it is precisely this Tuesday that Washington is to give its verdict on the grounds for the antidumping complaints submitted by U.S. steel producers against the Old World competitors and which relate in particular to German steel.

Conclusion Before 15 September

When the Ten have divivded up the bitter pill the commission will prepare the technical implementation of the agreement and the export licenses. Then, if the U.S. iron and steel industry ultimately "ratifies" the arrangement, the European ministers will give their final go-ahead to the agreement. The "O.K." from each of the two sides should be obtained by 15 September at the latest, Mr Davignon recalled.

This agreement is "fair and balanced," he continued. It is the fruit of a kind of awareness aroused in Washington following visits by Mr Schmidt, Mr Thorn, Mr Colombo, Mr Pym, Mr Lambsdorff and so forth. "To renegotiate it would be to unbalance it. It is a physical notion," Mr Davignon added, later welcoming, perhaps prematurely, the political credibility which the commission has gained with the Reagan administration.

The commissioner for industrial affairs finally confirmed that negotiations will soon begin between the Ten and the United States on the subject of the European steel tubes sold on the U.S. market. But they will have "neither the same objective, nor the same legal basis, nor the same nature" as those which led to Friday's agreement because no complaint has been submitted with regard to tube products, he stated. Mr Davignon gave these details in an attempt to play down the tube issue and to avoid allowing the Americans to think that the Europeans are prepared to make the same concessions as those made on the 11 iron and steel products affected by Friday's agreement.

Through the media Mr Davignon and Mr Haferkamp were in fact addressing the U.S. representatives with whom they had talks last week. The ball is still in their court. It is now an all-American story....

YOUNG COMMUNISTS QUESTION U.S. TANK ORDER

AU101227 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 10 Aug 82 p 6

[Excerpts] Linz -- In a letter to the Federal Government the Upper Austrian Communist Youth Organization requests information on a new tank project in which the Voes-Alpine Corporation and the Steyr Works are allegedly involved. Should these misgivings be justified, the Kreisky government is requested to immediately stop this arms project.

The Upper Austrian Communist Youth Organization recalls that the U.S. Defense Department has placed an order for the development of a light 15-ton tank with the state-owned Voest-Alpine Corporation and the Steyr-Daimler-Puch Works. The tank to be developed is intended for the 200,000 strong "Rapid Deployment Force" of the United States, which is being formed for the assertion of U.S. "interests," particularly in the Middle East.

In a letter to the Federal Government, the provincial leadership of the Upper Austrian Communist Youth Organization has requested that plans for developing such a light tank be made public. According to statements of the Pentagon desk officer for Austria and Switzerland, the tank "project and deal" are big even by American standards.

FIGURES ON EAST EUROPEAN REFUGEES RELEASED

AU121142 Vienna ARBEITZER-ZEITUNG in German 12 Aug 82 p 2

[Text] Vienna (AZ) -- On 1 August 1982 there was a total of 15,253 registered refugees in Austria; 2,053 accommodated in refugee camps and 13,200 in inns and hostels. Of the 15,253 refugees 11,361 are from Poland and 1,761 from the CSSR.

In 1980 9,259 persons applied for asylum in Austria. In 1981 it was 34,551 and by 28 July 1982, 3,554.

A total of 172 million schillings from federal funds was spent on the care of refugees in 1980, 514 million schillings in 1981 and 1,072 million schillings have been earmarked for this purpose in 1982.

Since the beginning of 1982 some 23,000 of the 38,000 refugees staying in Austria at that time have continued their journeys to the countries of destination. Through the personal contacts of Interior Minister Lanc in Australia, Canada and the United States it was possible to enable 12,500 applicants for asylum from Eastern Europe to emigrate to these countries this year. Additional preparations for refugees coming from Austria, the first country to grant them an asylum, are being made in the aforementioned countries.

ARREST IN SALZBURG BOMBING CASE REPORTED

AU111130 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 11 Aug 82 p 10

[Excerpt] Vienna -- State police have apprehended at least one of the people behind the Salzburg bombing attack against a branch of the "Schoeps" firm. As reported in one of our editions yesterday, 23-year-old Attila Istvan Bajtsy was arrested in Salzburg on Sunday. The Salzburg-born rightwing extremist has now confessed to having been the initiator and author of the leaflets found at the site of the crime.

Bajtsy, in whose apartment neo-Nazi material was found, had been noticed for some time as an activist at events organized by the National Democratic Party, the Action New Right, and the Nationalist Association.

BELGIAN MINISTER DISCUSSES 'TOUGH' BUDGET

PM121521 Brussels LE SOIR in French 5 Aug 82 p 2

[Interview with Finance Minister Willy de Clerq by C.L. Binnemans -- date and place not given]

[Excerpt] "It is a tough budget," Mr Willy de Clarq told us. "It is a budget which will not please people but of which we should not be ashamed. And there is certainly no reason for us to apologize for proposing sacrifices to our population. The country's financial situation is desperate. It is also the result of the financial situation which we see in the cities and communes -- if you knew what the state is owed in the way of levied taxes, I could abandon the idea of increasing VAT... In our semipublic institutions -- Sabena, Belgian national railroads, tramways, social security -- we would not have to continue for long to reach the point of bankruptcy."

"You must realize that we have reduced the spending proposed by the various ministries by 148 billion [Belgian francs] and that we will still have to borrow 145 billion net next year. If this is not a catastrophe what is?"

[Question] Just one question first, Mr de Clerq, what will you propose to use next year?

[Answer] A prolonged and sustained effort since we are planning for 4 years. Everything may go better next year but we will not be able to relax. In any case, the evolution of the international economic situation is crucial. Other neighboring or more distant countries are feeling it as much as we are and are trying to react accordingly.

We are applying and will apply remedies. We will do so this year, and next year and after that. If we succeed in reducing the foreign debt by 1.5 or 2 percent each year in relation to GNP by 1985, we will have dropped from 10.5 percent this time -- we were at 12.7 percent of GNP -- to 6.9 percent, which is an honorable average in the EEC.

And if we fail to do that we will have to continue reducing some spending, in other words cut further into social transfers -- for that is where the bulk of our spending is to be found -- and thus ask for more supplementary contributions and further efforts and sacrifices from the population. And ultimately that would lead to a deflationary policy which would be politically and economically indefensible.

[Question] Are there other remedies?

[Answer] Obviously the important thing is to reduce the burden of the public debt. For the coming year I am making provision for an increase of 40 billion in credits instead of 70 billion. There is no sleight of hand. The calculations were carried out last April and account was taken of the development of interest rates on the international market, and they were rising. For some weeks they have been clearly falling. Therefore I am counting on a reduction in the rates, and a 1 percent reduction means 15 billion. I am settling for 1.25 percent, in other words 18 billion, and the rest are technical measures.

[Question] What if the rates increase again?

[Answer] That is perfectly possible. If the rates increase at the end of the year, I have built and provided myself with a safety mechanism which will give me at least the same saving in interest if not more. I have negotiated a "correction mechanism" with the financial institutions -- I have an agreement. But do not push the point, I do not want to say any more about it; it is secret. I am guaranteeing to the government that there will be no supplementary credits despite the my castling, as they say in chess, on the basis of the reduction in interest rates... There will be an arrangement with the banks, saving banks and so forth. But I do not think interest rates will increase. The population has no reason to worry, still less savers. Only the finance minister and his interlocutors are involved.

REPORT OUTLINES GROWING IMPORTS FROM THE USSR

DW121427 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 12 Aug 82 p 9

[Dispatch signed For.]

[Text] Bonn -- Also in the second quarter of the year imports from the USSR continued to develop strongly. While exports to the Soviet Union increased only slightly in the first 6 months, Russian deliveries to the Federal Republic increased by 60 percent. In contrast to the first half of 1981 the value of imports from the USSR was DM2.2 billion higher and thereby increased to a total of DM6 billion. Exports to the Soviet Union reached a level of barely DM4.6 billion. This resulted in an extraordinary trade deficit of DM1.4 billion in German trade with the USSR.

The high increase in imports resulted from intensified imports and distinct price hikes in the field of fuels, crude oil, natural gas and gold for industrial purposes. These four categories accounted for 80 percent of the import volume. In exports the decrease was coped with in the first quarter through a 14 percent increase. Growth rates were achieved, above all, in the field of iron and steel but also in the delivery of machinery and rolling-mill installations.

According to a report by the Federal Ministry of Economics the significance of credit financing for German exports to the USSR has decreased even further because of the high trade deficit and the current overall restraint of German banks in the financing of trade with the East.

In the first quarter the USSR's level of debts vis-a-vis German credit institutes decreased to a new low of DM3.591 billion. In 1976 the debts still amounted to DM5.3 billion. According to the Federal Economics Ministry's assessment the further development of trade with the Soviet Union will depend to a decisive degree on Moscow's priorities in the structure of import commodities as well as on German competitiveness. Connected with this was also the question of whether FRG firms will succeed once again in taking the leading place among the USSR's Western trade partners. In the first quarter of the year the Federal Republic had to cede this position to the United States and Japan.

ATTEMPTS MADE TO RESTORE FLIGHTS TO ARGENTINA

LD121656 Hamburg DPA in German 1603 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 12 Aug (DPA) -- The Federal Government is making intensive efforts for Lufthansa to have its rights to operate in Argentina restored. The Foreign Ministry stated on Thursday that Bonn is in continuous contact with the Argentine Government on this question through the embassy in Buenos Aires.

Argentina imposed a landing ban for Lufthansa aircraft on 30 June because the EEC states imposed boycott measures against Argentina as a result of the occupation of the Falklands. The Italian airline Alitalia was the only EEC airline not banned.

It was stated in Bonn that the efforts to restore air traffic have little hope of success as long as the Europeans maintain their weapons embargo against Argentina. A Lufthansa spokesman in Cologne on Thursday pointed out that negotiations could also be impeded by the political power struggles in Argentina.

USSR CRITICISM OF U.S. TROOP MOVEMENT REJECTED

LD131155 Hamburg DPA in German 1120 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn, 13 Aug (DPA) -- Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl rejected as absurd and divorced from reality Moscow's criticism of Washington's plans to move U.S. forces from the west of the Federal Republic closer to the East German border. The Soviet Government newspaper IZVESTIYA had attacked these plans as being, among other things, warmongering. Ruehl told the press that such an interpretation did not serve the clarification of issues for the troop reduction talks in Vienna.

The government spokesman drew attention in Bonn to the fact that the United States had 5 and 1/2 divisions stationed in the Federal Republic with about 200,000 men, 3 brigades of which -- the strength of 1 division -- were to be moved to the main U.S. garrison area. By contrast, there were 20 Soviet divisions on GDR territory which had been considerably strengthened during past years with regard to arms, firepower and mobility. The Soviet divisions thus had far more fighting strength than the standard divisions of NATO.

The Federal Government has repeatedly stated that under the NATO troop agreement it was not obliged to make a financial contribution to Washington's planned troop move.

POLITICIANS OBSERVE BERLIN WALL ANNIVERSARY

LD131026 Hamburg DPA in German 0940 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn/Berlin 13 Aug (DPA) -- Politicians in Bonn and Berlin remembered today the building of the Berlin Wall on 13 August 1961. CDU lower house Deputy Ottfried Henning, for example, described the wall as a sign of the East Berlin regime's continuing weakness and a symbol of the "GDR's fundamentally helpless policy of isolation." No one should accept this structure so hostile to people, said Henning to the press service of the CDU/CSU group. As long as the wall exists, normalization is not possible.

The Berlin Senate and the "Association of Former Political Prisoners" laid wreaths at the memorial to the victims of Stalinism in Charlottenburg borough. The CDU group chairman in the Berlin Chamber of Deputies, Eberhard Diepgen, said on this occasion that the wall was a "symbol of the withheld self-determination of the German people and called for more contacts and meetings between people. One of the most important political needs is to have the compulsory minimum exchange levy reversed", he said.

Deputy chairman of the Berlin SPD group, Norbert Meisner, called for the policy of detente to be continued consistently. Critics of the policy of detente were reminded that sanctions and retaliatory measures led to even greater entrenchment. FDP Group Chairman Horst Vetter stated that the policy of detente had proved itself "on the whole." The will for detente and the will for reunification should not, however, be mutually exclusive.

PRESS VIEWS STAGNATION OF INTER-GERMAN RELATIONS

DW121022 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0505 GMT 12 Aug 82

[From the press review]

[Text] NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG deals with the inter-German relationship and writes: The sober balance sheets that will be presented on the 21st anniversary of the Wall speak for themselves. They include death and misery, madness and arbitrariness. What is particularly disquieting in the development of German-German relations is the heavily increased number of the GDR's refusal to accept FRG citizens and West Berliners, for this is not attributable to mere coincidence or high-handed action by subordinate authorities. Rather it is a gross violation of assurances given to the Federal Government for the extension of the Swing -- the interest-free overdrawing credit.

The Muenster WESTFAELISCHE NACHRICHTEN observes: What in 1961 has led to West Berlin's total sealing off remains the principal commandment also today irrespective of the contractual arrangements achieved in the meantime: the absolute will for delimitation. This has been altered least of all by the much-praised spirit of Lake Werbellin in which the Federal Government had placed its hopes a few months ago and in which they were then disappointed rather profoundly. The piece of candy that Honecker gave the federal chancellor when he was seeing him off after the visit to Maerkische Heide was nothing but a mockery: To this day Honecker has not honored the check with the hoped-for lowering of the mandatory exchange rates, which Schmidt believed he had in his pocket.

RHEINPFALZ raises the following question: Will he or won't he come -- GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker -- for the visit to the Federal Republic to which Federal Chancellor Schmidt invited him last December at Lake Werbellin? It almost appears as though German-German relations at present are reduced to this question. The answer may be expected after Honecker has wound up his short leave in the Soviet Union which he started yesterday and in the course of which he will be received by Brezhnev in the Crimea. By refusing Rhineland-Palatinate Minister-President Vogel and Schleswig-Holstein CDU faction chairman Hoffmann entry, the GDR itself has rendered absurd what it has repeatedly referred to as the good-neighborly relationship between the two German states.

DIE WELT: ATLANTIC DISUNITY HARBORS DANGERS

[Thomas Kielinger commentary]

[Text] Nothing but lessons were taught in Washington Tuesday, with different effects. President Reagan's voting defeat in the House Foreign Relations Committee, the rejection of the pipeline sanctions of the White House, in that respect appears to be the least harmful. It is improbable that the rebellious bill will really be made a law. And besides, there is still the presidential veto.

What entails more serious consequences is the "lesson" taught by the U.S. Department of Commerce, its decision -- now taken for the second time -- on unfair practices of the European steelmakers. This decision has temporary legal force and, hence, forces the importers to deposit punitive tariffs in the amount of the "unfair price margin" established by the U.S. authorities. The surveys of the department will be adjusted for good in October, in keeping with available facts.

The case is serious. Unless the alliance musters its willpower here and attains a compromise, there will be but a small step left to open trade war.

But the vote in the House of Representatives, too, harbors a lesson and a warning. As a result of it President Reagan is more isolated than ever before: This means that he not only has the alliance partners against him but also that he cannot show any majority in his own country which would back the pipeline sanctions.

The magic word is consensus. Whoever lacks it or fails to achieve it ventures into pathless territory. It would have been good for Reagan had he been able to establish consensus in his own camp prior to the eruption of confrontations. At the moment everybody is just practicing rebellion and resistance. This is a dangerous drift.

LE MONDE CITES AMBASSADOR ON LEBANON FORCE

PM130919 Paris LE MATIN in French 9 Aug 82 p 9

[Text] The Lebanese Government should this morning present an official request to the French, U.S., and Italian Governments to send contingents to Lebanon to form an international force. That was stated in a press conference yesterday by French Ambassador Paul Henry following a meeting between U.S. and French military officials and diplomats.

In that connection Paris has denied that French officers have already arrived in Beirut, but according to a good source a senior officer was recently seconded to the ambassador to supervise the military discussions.

"The French forces will not have the job of ensuring the evacuation (of the Palestinians -- LE MATIN note) but of guaranteeing a degree of physical and psychological protection for the evacuation operation proper which will be conducted by the PLO itself...with the Lebanese Government's support and agreement," French Ambassador to Beirut Paul Marc Henry said yesterday.

According to the ambassador the total strength of the multinational force would be between 2,500 and 3,000 men, including 800 French soldiers (350 initially). Questioned on the time needed to actually deploy the contingent, Mr Henry, who limited his reply to the French soldiers, put forward 15 August as a possible date for their arrival on Lebanese territory, although he stressed that no date had yet been fixed and that several scenarios could be envisaged.

In addition the ambassador stated that one of the conditions posed by the PLO leadership for the evacuation of west Beirut was precisely that "the French element should be physically present in Beirut when the evacuation begins." According to Henry, in the separate notes which will be sent to each of the countries approached, the Lebanese Government will specify "the status of the different forces, their operational room to manuever, the task they will have to fulfill and their coordination with the Lebanese Army."

Stressing that Israel "is not in any way a party to the agreement" reached between the Lebanese Government and the other three governments concerned, Henry nonetheless expressed the view "that it is difficult to see how those contingents could very well be brought in without some practical agreement from the Israelis." "The evacuation has been agreed and it may or may not be implemented according to the conditions set, and there is no doubt about the intention (of the Palestinians -- LE MATIN note) to leave," the diplomat concluded.

The Italian force will be provided by a battalion of light infantry, the army's crack troops, comprising 529 volunteers including 33 officers and equipped with 200 vehicles, some then armored. The arrival of those troops in Lebanon by air and sea will be carried out from 4 to 11 days after the departure order.

PSI'S CRAXI MEETS SPADOLINI, WITHHOLDS SUPPORT

AU121548 Rome ANSA in English 1525 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 12 -- Premier-Designate Giovanni Spadolini held consultations here today with delegations from the Socialist Party the Social Democrat Party, and the new-fascist MSI, and learned again from the Socialist Secretary, Bettino Craxi, that the Socialists "do not intend to support the attempt" of Spadolini to form a new government.

At the end of his meeting with the premier-designate, Craxi declared that the Socialists "appreciate the commitment" shown by Spadolini. "We saw, however, that the bid is substantially a new proposal for the continuation of the experience which has been ended. The Socialist Party is not oriented towards support for the attempt", he added.

The leader of the party which garnered ten percent of the vote in the 1979 general elections also referred to "fanciful and transformational maneuvers" aimed at overcoming the government crisis to launch another critical barb at the Communist Party proposal for averting the dissolution of Parliament and early general elections.

The big opposition party would like to see the formation of a government whose ministers are tapped on the basis of qualifications, and not party affiliations and party factions, and who would be free from the pressures of their party secretaries.

In his consultations, begun Wednesday, Spadolini met with the delegations of the nation's two largest parties, the Christian Democrats and Communist Party.

COLOMBO BACK FROM PERU, BRAZIL, ARGENTINA TALKS

LD122258 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2200 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] The political talks held by Foreign Minister Colombo in Peru, Brazil and Argentina have confirmed that Latin America does not wish to have any antagonism in its relations with Europe, Colombo stated this in an interview released on his return to Italy. The objective of the visit was to contribute to overcoming the tensions between South America and the European Community that resulted from the conflict between Great Britain and Argentina. Our foreign minister believes he accomplished this mission, and it is to be noted that he had a long talk with the British ambassador in Rome.

The problem is still the dispute over the Falklands-Malvinas Islands. Colombo said that Argentina, in fact, maintains a favorable attitude toward the Mexican initiative to return this issue to the United Nations in order to obtain some movement which would lead to negotiations.

PRIME MINISTER REPORTS DROP IN INFLATION RATE

LD130534 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0000 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] The prime minister said on Thursday night that the consumer prices in the past 3 months pointed to an improvement in the rate of inflation. In a television interview, Pinto Balsemao said that the rate of inflation which had risen by 0.1 percent in May had dropped by the same percentage in July.

The prime minister said that this was the first drop in the consumer prices index to be recorded since 25 April 1974. It should be mentioned that although the current rate of inflation has reached 23 percent, Pinto Balsemao's government has forecast a 17 percent rate for this year.

On the forthcoming local government elections, Pinto Balsemao expressed optimism over the outcome of those elections, adding that his forecast was based on certain data obtained in his party's victories in the by-elections for local authorities held this year in various parts of the country.

CALVO-SOTELO SAID 'MISQUOTED' ON MEDIATION OFFER

PM121023 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 10 Aug 82 p 11

[Carlos Mendo dispatch: "Spain Confirms Its Desire To Act as a 'Bridge' Between Europe and Latin America"]

[Excerpts] Lima -- Spain has confirmed its desire to act as a bridge between Europe and Latin America and has confirmed its intention to contribute to the "strengthening of all kinds of ties with the Latin American countries" in a solemn declaration of principles signed in Bogota by several heads of state and government who met in the Colombian capital on the occasion of the inauguaration of the new Colombian president, Belisario Betancur.

Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo signed the Bogota declaration together with the Bolivian, Ecuadorian, Venezuelan and Colombian presidents and the chiefs of state of Nicaragua, Jamaica, Belize and St Christopher-Nevis-Anguilla, moments before leaving for Lima, which he leaves tomorrow for Madrid, via Caracas, where he will have a brief meeting with Venezuelan Leader Herrera Campins.

Calvo-Sotelo's visit to the Peruvian capital was at one point placed under a cloud by remarks attributed to the Spanish prime minister in Quito -- an attribution which later proved inaccurate. In these remarks, Calvo-Sotelo was supposed to have offered Spanish mediation in the border dispute between Peru and Ecuador. Though the offer was never made, when reported in the Lima press it prompted a major commotion in Peruvian political and press circles. The daily EXPRESSO, owned by Peruvian Prime Minister Manuel Ulloa, published a report under the headline "Calvo-Sotelo Offers To Mediate in Nonexistent Conflict," arguing Peru's theory that Ecaudor's border claims are nonexistent as far as Peru is concerned. This could be compared, in Spain's case, to Morocco's claims over Ceuta and Melilla.

In fact what happened in Quito was that, asked by an Equadorian journalist whether Spain would be willing to mediate in the conflict, Calvo-Sotelo merely replied -- and there are tape recordings to prove it -- that Spain was always willing to cooperate in resolving problems affecting friendly countries "as long as they request it" and expressed the opinion that the best way to resolve differences lies in dialogue between the sides concerned. Pressed by journalists in Lima yesterday, the Spanish prime minister categorically denied having made any mediation offer and merely repeated the position stated in the Ecuadorian capital. Political and diplomatic circles expressed their belief that the misunderstandings will be duly clarified following today's (Madrid time) talk with the Peruvian head of state.

BEIRUT EVENTS COST U.S. 'ETHICAL PRESTIGE'

PM121329 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 9 Aug 82 p 5

[Editorial: "Lebanon's Tragedy"]

[Excerpts] The long and distressing seige of west Beirut is proving to be a bitter fruit of what initially seemed like one of those rapid and crushing operations of which Israeli strategists are masters. This applies to the military, political and moral aspects.

For the United States in particular the prolongation of the bombardments and fighting and of the Beirut population's sufferings constitutes an embarrassing political obstacle, in part, precisely because of the detachment which the USSR is maintaining, the caution of the Arab countries and the distancing of Europe.

Reagan and his administration can only argue that with their attitude of tactical support for the Israeli operation they are nipping any dangerous international repercussions in the bud. TASS took advantage of this undeniable fact when it stated recently that "the U.S. administration could halt the aggression but quite obviously refuses to do so." In this connection, some have stressed the weakness of Washington's warnings to Israel, which in this case have not even been accompanied by the limited sanctions applied in the case of the aerial bombardment of the Tamuz nuclear power plant in Iraq some months ago.

The fact is that Washington is directly involved in the Israeli operation because only the United States could halt it, as TASS says, but also because it is being carried out with U.S. weapons and in the final analysis with Washington's economic backing. In fact, the Reagan administration would now like to extract the maximum political benefit from this now difficult-to-remedy commitment to the Israeli aggression by achieving the practical dismantling of the PLO, at least as far as its active terrorism is concerned. But to achieve that, a rapid end would have to be put to the shameful spectacle of the seige of Beirut. It would be best if this were by means of an agreement and, in the last resort, by the logical conclsion of the military operation.

The United States -- let alone Israel -- is losing dividends in Beirut in terms of ethical prestige for the sake of positive results in terms of a realistic policy. This is beyond question. But neither must it be forgotten that the origin of the Lebanese tragedy lies in the setting-up camp there of the Palestinian guerrillas effectively rejected by the Arab world, specifically at the time of the massacre in the Kingdom of Jordan in September 1970. Nor that the Palestinian guerrillas dismantled the Lebanese state and converted it into a foothold for the terrorist struggle on an international scale against Israel. Nor, lastly, that since 1976 some 30,000 Syrian troops, that is, troops of a country at war with Israel, have been on Lebanese territory and have on several occasions acted mercilessly against both the Christian militias and against the Palestinians themselves and the Lebanese progressive militias supporting them. The fact that these contingents of Syrian troops are in Lebanon with the Beirut authorities' consent does not alter the fact that they have acted as an outright army of occupation which, moreover, though it has repeatedly created violent situations, has in no way helped the Lebanese to prevent Israel's invasion.

SUAREZ ON COOPERATION WITH PSOE GOVERNMENT

PM121451 Madrid ABC in Spanish 6 Aug 82 p 21

[Text] Madrid -- Adolfo Suarez, chairman of the recently formed Democratic and Social Center (CDS), told foreign newsmen that his party would support the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] rather than a center-right group. Suarez said that the CDS has no plans to contest the elections in a coalition with any other party. The former prime minister, at present on a visit to Bogota to attend the inauguration of Colombia's President-elect Belisario Betancur at the latter's invitation, reasserted to journalists the need for the predominance of civilian power and for the consolidation of democracy, which "is still threatened." "The people's disenchantment," he said, "could be reflected in threats to democracy itself. I am unwilling," he stressed, "to live in a country that has to limit my own personal freedom because of alleged threats."

Having admitted "I am not liked by the armed forces," Suarez said he has "great respect for the military, but none for any member of any institution that acts against democracy." Suarez is convinced that the armed forces would accept a hypothetical Socialist victory, "because that would be their duty and the expression of the people's will." "If the PSOE wins the elections," he continued, "it will receive from us the same cooperation that it has granted to the nation's government during the past year."

In answer to a reporter's question, the former prime minister said that he would not accept a post in a Socialist government: "My support for the PSOE," he explained, "will be determined by a number of points of basic agreement, but it would not be altruistic because there is a name for this in politics: 'fellow travellers.'"

Nevertheless, Adolfo Suarez made it clear that his party would support all groups agreeing with the CDS' prime objectives, though such support could not be given to a center-right coalition, which would radicalize the country and lead to a bipolarization.

Suarez stated his belief that the general election will be held in mid-November or possibly in December. "It all depends," he said, "on the information available to the prime minister. I believe the Cortes will be dissolved 15 or 16 September."

UCD'S CAVERO COMMENTS ON PARTY DEFECTIONS

PM121531 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 10 Aug 82 p 9

[Text] "Those of us who have remained within the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] form the vast majority," Inigo Cavero, secretary general of the ruling party, said yesterday at a press conference held to play down the importance of the recent defections from the UCD to Oscar Alzaga's Popular Democratic Party [PDP] and Adolfo Suarez' Social and Democratic Center [CDS]. Other Center circles, however, privately expressed their fears regarding the daily "drain" to other groups. Interior Minister Juan Jose Roson said yesterday that "it would be a bad thing for the UCD if the moral backing were for Suarez and the official backing for the UCD."

Inigo Cavero announced that [UCD Chairman] Landelino Lavilla will convene the Political Council in September, but probably not to revoke the decision forbidding the party to contest the elections in a coalition with other parties. Though he did deny outright the possibility that the council could ultimately authorize a preelection coalition, despite the same body's decision at the beginning of July, he stressed that the actual composition of the Political Council makes this rather unlikely. He played down the contradictory remarks made by Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo on his visit to Latin America, from which he initially seemed to be inclining toward a broad center coalition, and preferred to concentrate on the subsequent remarks, in which the head of the government confirmed his loyalty to his party bodies' decisions.

Cavero expressed the opinion that it would be advisable for parliament to reopen in September to debate the pending statutes of autonomy. In his opinion, this would be possible as long as the deputies that have "fled" to the PDP and CDS remain loyal to the Center parliamentary group. Without explicitly saying so, he nevertheless made it clear that the elections will take place in 1982, which will mean the dissolution of parliament in September.

According to Cavero, the impact of the departure of certain deputies for the PDP has been very small, since the majority of them had little chance of being included in the UCD's lists again. As for the "escapes" to the CDS, he said that "as far as the UCD proper is concerned, the establishment of Adolfo Suarez' party has not caused much of a distortion."

Cavero did not miss the opportunity to attack Suarez, whose ideological difference with respect to the UCD is imperceptible, he said. The UCD secretary general joked about the former prime minister's alleged ignorance of the term "community personalism" contained in the CDS manifesto -- a term which, being inspired by a Christian Democrat (Mounier), Cavero said he liked. With regard to Fernandez Ordonez' Democratic Action Party, he merely expressed the opinion that "it is non-existent." He said of Antonio Garrigues that it would be best that he join the UCD and not add a further party to the existing ones.

DENMARK

PARTY AIDE CRITICIZES U.S. 'CONFRONTATION' POLICY

PM121407 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 11 Aug 82 p 2

[Social Democratic Defense and Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Lasse Budtz article]

[Text] Should you punish an opposite number you do not agree with by refusing to talk to him? Or should you rather sit down with your opposite number and discuss the differences in your views in the hope of getting at least some of the problems out of the way?

We cannot deny that the first method can undoubtedly be the correct one in some situations. But when we are dealing with power politics and something as important as world peace the latter method must be seen as the most desirable.

This at least is the general view in West European nations, while President Reagan is clearly a believer in the former method. The first is the big stick method, the second the carrot.

We could also say that Reagan is still using the confrontation method because he believes that it instills respect. The Europeans are seeking to avoid direct confrontation because they take the view that it is an obstacle to concrete results.

When Reagan visited Europe earlier in the summer he more than aired the idea of a summit with President Leonid Brezhnev. After his return to the United States he first ignored the idea and since then has obviously buried it.

This underlines the fact that Reagan is obviously going through a phase in which he has no intention of bowing to European views. This could also have something to do with the approaching U.S. elections.

Reagan's view is that Brezhnev does not "deserve" a summit because the Soviet Union is still present in Afghanistan and because there has not been any progress in Poland. The Europeans often feel that some results could be achieved in both cases if there were more talks -- including high-level ones.

But Washington is afraid that a summit would give rise to excessive expectations or lead directly to a crisis.

Brezhnev has been prepared to take part in a summit the whole time, although he was unwilling to take part in a summit held, as it were, in the corridors in connection with the UN session on disarmament, as Reagan had proposed.

But Brezhnev was ready to hold a summit in Finland or in Switzerland. However, this was something which Reagan did not want.

There would be quite enough to discuss. At present there are two sets of nuclear arms negotiations going on with the exclusive participation of the two superpowers. These are taking place in Geneva, and at the one European medium-range missiles are being discussed, while the other concerns long-range strategic arms.

Recently the Soviet Union has at least made attempts to have the two sets of talks linked to one another, as was to be expected. The Soviet Union has declared its willingness to cut down the number of its long-range strategic arms if the United States refrains from deploying medium-range missiles in Europe, which would be the response to the Soviet Union's SS-20 missiles. The Soviet Union would also limit the number of its long-range bombers.

The United States has rejected the Soviet proposal, partly because it includes bombers, which the United States would prefer to exclude for the present, partly because the Soviet Union mixes long-range and "medium-range" missiles together, and finally because the United States has put foward its own proposal for limitations on the arsenals of long-range weapons.

The United States has proposed larger reductions in the Soviet Union than in the United States because the Soviet Union has more of these arms. But despite this lack of balance the U.S. proposal is still better than nothing if it could be implemented in purely theoretical terms.

It looks as if it cannot be, and it is very likely that there will be no agreement unless Reagan sits down at the same table as Brezhnev and talks about things. Perhaps Reagan will realize this if at a later date it finally becomes apparent that no further progress is possible along the present paths.

But there are other topics which could and should be discussed at a summit -- the Middle East, for example.

A U.S. diplomat and former ambassador in Moscow and Israel, Malcolm Toon, wrote in an article in the Los Angeles TIMES recently that perhaps the time has come to involve the Soviet Union in the Middle East peace process. This would give the United States someone with whom to share the burden.

It is fairly certain that Reagan does not share Mr Toon's views, because Reagan believes that the United States would lose its influence if the Soviet Union were brought it.

It is by no means certain that things would take such a course. Soviet participation in the peace efforts could perhaps help to produce developments in which the so-called extremist Arab nations would more or less be forced to participate in an arrangement, one of the conditions for which would be recognition of Israel's right to exist.

U.S. unwillingness to talk with the Soviet Union at top level is not the most important factor affecting East-West relations. U.S.-European disagreements within the system of Western cooperation are already so great that it is not necessary to look for any more.

But in the long run it goes without saying that the U.S. attitude is harmful. An important question is whether Washington can expect the Europeans to accept the policy of confrontation at some point in time. In peace time. And the main objective is, after all, the preservation of peace.

NORWAY

GOVERNMENT BACKS INDUSTRIAL CONTRACTS WITH USSR

PM131007 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 12 Aug 82 p 26

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report]

[Excerpt] Oslo -- The government has given Norway's shipbuilding and engineering industries the go-ahead to enter into contracts with the Soviet Union for the supply of expertise and equipment to be used in oil and gas prospecting and production in the Barents Sea, Trade Minister Arne Skauge told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA.

Norwegian Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Eivinn Berg also said that the United States has been informed that the contracts between the Norwegian industry and the Soviet Union will be in complete agreement with undertakings Norway has made with regard to the supply of advanced technological equipment to the Soviet Union.

Berg said that Norway is not expecting any strong U.S. reaction. Last month the government discussed the issue's political and commercial aspects and reached the decision that it had no objections.

Both Skauge and Berg stressed that these Norwegian deliveries are not a parallel to the gas pipeline agreements between the Soviet Union and several West European countries which President Reagan reacted to with comprehensive U.S. sanctions.

Reagan takes the view that the gas pipeline agreements make West Europe dependent on Soviet energy supplies and that this increases the danger of Soviet political pressure. This view is rejected by the governments in West Europe.

Under Secretary Berg pointed out that Norway has its own oil and gas resources. In addition Norwegian supplies of equipment would be in complete accord with the undertakings Norway has made with regard to the supply of advanced technological equipment. The deliveries would also be on the usual credit and interest terms without any special treatment for the Soviet Union.

This means that there is no parallel with the gas pipeline agreement, he said.

When asked if the contracts could have any effect on the problem of the demarcation line in the Barents Sea, Berg replied that Norway was naturally assuming that the equipment supplied would be used exclusively in undisputed Soviet sectors.

"We have made it clear to the Soviet authorities on several occasions that Norway takes the view that neither of the two parties involved in the demarcation line negotiations should do anything in the disputed sector which could complicate the work toward reaching a final agreed solution to the demarcation line problem," Under Secretary Berg said.

"We therefore exclude the possibility that the equipment supplied will be used in the 155,000 square kilometer area between Norway's median line proposal and the Soviet sector line demands," he said.

POLITICAL SUPPORT FOR PALESTINIAN STATE GROWING

PM111435 Olso AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 6 Aug 82 p 3

[Terje Svabo report]

[Text] A militarily crushed PLO is resulting in increased support among Norwegian politicans for the demand for self-government for the Palestinians.

However, views are divided on what form this self-government should take, and there is an absolute demand that the PLO recognize Israel's right to exist within internationally recognized borders. The Palestinians' right to self-government now has the support of Christian People's Party Chairman Kare Kristiansen, who yesterday added his voice to the calls for a "self-governing Palestinian entity."

It is the most recent events following the Israeli invasion of Lebanon which have led to the present situation in which Norwegian politicans are giving greater support than in the past for the Palestinians' right to self-government. There is still disagreement on the role of the PLO and its representatives, but a few weeks ago very few people would have thought that leading representatives of the Christian People's Party would give their backing to Palestinian self-government.

Last week Christian People's Party Storting Deputy Asbjorn Haugstvedt, who is also chairman of the Friends of Israel, voiced his support for the idea of a state for the Palestinians. Yesterday Party Chairman Kare Kristiansen followed this up in an interview with VART LAND in which he left open the possibility of a self-governing Palestinian entity. Both the pro-Israeli politicians made it a condition that the PLO recognize Israel.

Conservative Party Chairman Jo Benkow told AFTENPOSTEN that a militarily crushed PLO could lay the foundation for some form or other of Palestinian self-government. He added, however, that it is not clear where a Palestinian state should be and said that it is unrealistic to imagine a Palestinian state on the West Bank or in the Golan Heights. The Conservative Party chairman pointed out that for decades the PLO has been firing on Israel from these areas and used them as bases for raids into Israel.

"The most striking feature of the present situation is the Arab nations' negative attitude toward a Palestinian state under the leadership of the PLO. This should give those who are toughest in their criticism of Israel at present reason to think again," Benkow said.

He stressed the Palestinians' right to a life of human dignity, but questioned whether this would be possible through the formation of a state under the PLO. Benkow also stressed that Palestinian self-government depends on whether Israel is given guarantees that the country will be able to live securely within international recognized borders.

One of the Labor Party's members of the Storting Foreign Affairs Committee, Liv Aasen, told AFTENPOSTEN that the Labor Party is concerned -- and was also concerned when it was in government -- with finding a solution to the problems in the Middle East which would embrace the rights of the Palestinians.

"The Palestinians themselves must be drawn into the negotiations aimed at solving the Palestinian problem. No one today is more representative of the Palestinian people than the PLO. The Palestinians must be given the right to have their own homeland, and this should take the form of the formation of their own state if this is their wish," Aasen said.

She pointed out that such a solution can only be possible if Israel's right to exist is recognized. She added that at the same time as the PLO recognizes Israel, Israel in its turn must recognize the PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people.

Liv Aasen said that at present the most important issue is not a discussion of where a Palestinian state is to be located, but an agreement on the principles which could bring lasting peace to the Middle East.

CYPRUS ASKED TO ASSIST PLO PULLOUT FROM LEBANON

[Text] "No question has arisen about Cyprus accepting Palestinian fighters but Cyprus will continue to grant all possible facilities to the Palestinians and the Lebanese people and those who wish to help the war victims", Foreign Minister Mr. Rolandhis told the "CYPRUS MAIL" yesterday.

He was asked to comment on report that France and personally the French Foreign Minister Mr Cheysson, had been in touch with him for permission to use Cyprus ports for French naval vessels connected with the proposed PLO pull-out from Lebanon and for the movement of a multinational force to police the operation.

The minister confirmed that the Cyprus Government had accepted the French request in line with its policy of helping the Palestinian and Lebanese people in their present plight.

"If there would be any other requests by other nations intending to participate in the multinational force such as the USA and Italy or any other country these would be favourably entertained by the Cyprus Government," Mr. Rolandhis said.

Because of its location Cyprus has become a transit point for help to Lebanon as evidenced by the International Red Cross operation.

Foreign diplomats, mediators and others use Larnaca Airport for trips to and from Lebanon. Lebanese and foreign evacuees have used Cyprus ports and airport before going on to their final destinations.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS RESUME AFTER SUMMER RECESS

NC121741 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] After a suspension of more than 1 and 1/2 months, the intercommunal talks were resumed this afternoon at the Ledra Palace Hotel. In a statement before the meeting, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Gobbi, said that the discussion of points of evaluation, which had not finished, would continue at today's meeting. We shall continue the work, he added, as we have done thus far; that is, slowly but always advancing.

In reply to a pertinent question, Gobbi said that because of recriminations, it can be said that the atmosphere is not the best that could exist. He went on to say: This tension, of course, has a negative influence on the talks, but we shall overcome it.

In reply to a question on whether he would discuss the prevailing negative atmosphere, Gobbi said that this would depend on the two sides.

The Greek Cypriot side's representative at the talks, Mavrommatis, stated that at today's meeting the discussion would continue on some points connected with the executive authority and then a discussion would begin on the legislative authority. In reply to a question on whether the Turkish Cypriot administration's decision to give deeds of ownership for Greek properties in the occupied territoreis would affect the talks, Mavrommatis said that the government has taken the necessary measures. What will happen at the intercommunal talks, he added, is of a confidential nature.

The Turkish Cypriot side's representative, Onan, answering a question on whether other issues would be discussed at today's meeting in addition to the executive and legislative authorities, said that certain statements could possibly be made on current issues. Asked to clarify his reply, Onan said that the atmosphere of the talks is good, friendly and useful. However, he added, the atmosphere outside the talks has rather warmed up. Onan said that for the time being, the outside atmosphere has no repercussions on the talks, and expressed the hope that it will not affect them in the future.

In reply to a question connected with the deeds to be given for Greek properties, Onan alleged that this is not something new and that it does not concern deeds of ownership but certificates of occupation. This, he added, has taken place on the Greek side too and has been in force on the Turkish side since 1977.

Outlook Pessimistic

NC130935 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 13 Aug 82 p 2

[From "Our Positions" column: "With Ill Omen"]

[Text] Yesterday's resumption of the intercommunal talks could not have begun under worse omens. The talks have resumed in a heavy atmosphere, the reasons for which are:

-- The Turkish threats to break off the talks and declare a separate state in the event recourse to the United Nations is taken.

-- Bringing back to the limelight the alleged economic embargo and the threat to withdraw from the talks if the embargo continues.

-- Denktas' threat of the interim settlement of Varosha as long as the embargo continues.

The international talks were not productive when conditions were better. The new climate of tension being cultivated by the Turks does not allow for optimism that the talks will bear fruit during the remainder of its lifespan.

The intransigent Turkish stand has even become harder at a time when the territorial issue -- one of the most thorny aspects of the problem -- is to be discussed.

The decision of the Denktas regime to proceed in providing title deeds of Greek property [to Turkish settlers], irrespective of how invalid this action may be, prejudges also the stance that the Turkish side will keep on this issue.

Denktas Views

TA121341 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] President Denktas received this morning the United Nations special representative in Cyprus, Mr Hugo Gobbi. In a statement at the end of the meeting, President Denktas said that they had made an assessment of the present situation. He recalled that there was progress at the Cyprus intercommunal talks and that this had also been confirmed in the United Nations' secretary general's report. He repeated that the only way for a solution of the Cyprus problem was through the intercommunal talks.

President Denktas stressed that a solution of the Cyprus problem could only be found in Cyprus and any other solution to be found elsewhere could not be imposed on the Turkish Cypriot community which was a sovereign partner of the independence of Cyprus.

Because of this, said President Denktas, the Greek Cypriot decision to take the Cyprus problem to the United Nations could only be the decision of those who want to obstruct the paths of the Cyprus intercommunal talks. He stated that this Turkish Cypriot view had been communicated to Mr Hugo Gobbi. President Denktas said that, in fact, the United Nations secretary general had informed the two sides in Geneva that taking the Cyprus problem to the United Nations was not compatible with the intercommunal talks. He stated that because of these facts the Turkish Cypriot community would be sitting at the negotiating table during this afternoon's session of the intercommunal talks in a positive attitude. He added that the Turkish Cypriot side was awaiting the Greek Cypriot leadership to give up their decision of taking the Cyprus problem to the United Nations.

President Denktas said that there were press reports on the Greek Cypriot decision of a recourse to the United Nations, but that the Turkish Cypriot response would depend on future actions and not on press reports. He stressed that until such time, the Turkish Cypriot side would continue to sit at the negotiating table in a positive attitude. He stated that if the Greek Cypriots take the Cyprus problem to the United Nations, then the intercommunal talks would be suspended. He stated that the resumption and the conditions under which the talks might be resumed would be [words indistinct] at the appropriate time.

President Denktas said that he had also informed Mr Gobbi that the Turkish Cypriot side could not stay inactive in the face of intensified Greek Cypriot economic embargo which was contrary to the principles of human rights and the United Nations Charter. He stated that the continuation of the embargo was also adversely affecting the atmosphere and was contrary to the spirit of the talks. He stressed that the Turkish Cypriot community would not accept such a situation.

[Text] The government spokesman has confirmed reports that Foreign Minister Rolandhis has prepared a draft plan for Cyprus' recourse to the UN General Assembly which has been handed to President Kiprianou.

The draft plan was prepared with the cooperation of the Greek Embassy in Nicosia and it will be the subject of consultations with the Greek Government. It will then be submitted to the Nonaligned Coordination Bureau which, after having prepared a relative resolution, will submit it to the UN General Assembly for approval.

I SIMERINI DISAPPOINTED IN PAPANDREOU POLICY

NC120802 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 12 Aug 82 p 1

[Editorial: "Following the Crisis..."]

[Text] The well-known demand "Sink the Hora" [Turkish oil prospecting vessel in the Aegean] came from Papandreou when he was in the opposition. The statement "Intercept the Turkish aircraft" -- but do not shoot them down -- belongs to Prime Minister Papandreou. What is the reason for this difference in determination and demand? This is so because it appears that in Greece the connection between government and the opposition is black and white. But the theme today is not on this; it is the real and genuine interest of the Greek prime minister in Cyprus and its problem.

When he was in the opposition, he strongly fought the amateurish -- as he called it -- and indifferent New Democracy policy on the Cyprus problem. He particularly, and repeatedly, branded as nationally unacceptable the policy "Cyprus makes the decisions"... When he became prime minister the Greek Cypriots rejoiced. At last a new era was opening. When he took over power he made statements almost everyday on Cyprus and its salvation being priorities. When he came here he was crowned with laurels for what he had said and for what was expected to result from his promises.

Then the crisis is the Athens-Nicosia relations suddenly came about. The minimum program was denounced by Maoudhas as a dangerous choice and development. PASOK's paper EXORMISI published warnings and threats of punishment to the surprise makers. The minimum program was described by official quarters in Athens as undermining the Greek prime minister's drive for a nationally honorable and mainly effective policy on the Cyprus problem -- a policy which was already described to the people as "the light at the end of the tunnel."

However, there was no light, instead there was the darkness of crisis in Athens-Nicosia relations. Since then, Athens and Nicosia has been having rare meetings and its has been announced that they discussed, agreed on and jointly planned fresh actions regarding the Cyprus problem. Since then there have been two determinative tangible facts:

Fact one: There has been a change in the Greek prime minister's interest in the Cyprus problem. For months now he has not spoken about Cyprus and its problem.

Fact two: The Athens-Nicosia relations are not brotherly, genuine, friendly, or hostile... they are wavering or they are in a state of suspense....

The Greek Cypriots are wondering: Is Papandreou now going to follow in the footsteps of Karamanlis' indifference because the Cyprus problem is a burning problem? The people do not want to believe this.... Papandreou's absolute silence over the crisis, which has been created by the minimum program and by Maroudhas, and his obvious avoidance to make any statement on Cyprus indicate that there has been a change in the new prime minister's zeal and that the recent crisis has left its indelible and somewhat paralytic marks on the prime minister's genuine enthusiasm.

Now, of course, the Greek prime minister is facing serious internal problems in Greece. These problems concern the implementation of his numerous promises to the Greek people in a period of serious recession in the Greek economy. These problems also refer to the forthcoming political campaign within the framework of the municipal elections to be held in Greece next October. A PASOK victory during these elections would be of particular significance. This has compelled Papandreou to cooperate to some extent with Florakis....

But how can such a cooperation allow him to point out to Kiprianou the dissolution of the popular front and the rejection of the minimum program? It seems that Mr Papandreou's internal problems will not allow him to proceed within the foreseeable future with any strong or even timid action for assistance to Cyprus on its external or internal problem. This is another pessimistic aspect for the future of Cyprus at a historical hour when there should have been unlimited and well-founded optimism that at last Greece has resolutely undertaken its responsibilities!

PAPANDREOU STATEMENT ON U.S. BASES NEGOTIATIONS

NC130840 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0700 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Excerpt] The negotiations that will be held on the issue of the U.S. bases in Greece will start anew and will not simply concern the determining of the boundaries of the status quo. Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou made this statement during the discussion on the bases held at the Council of Ministers session yesterday. The prime minister added that the Government Council on Foreign Policy and National Defense [KISEA] needs to hold more meetings on the final Greek positions, which will then be conveyed to the members of the Council of Ministers.

LEBANESE DELEGATION URGES EEC EMBARGO ON ISRAEL

NC121522 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 12 Aug 82 pp 1, 14

[Reportage by Katerina Koletsi]

[Excerpts] "The Lebanese National Movement, which represents and rallies all the democratic-progressive forces, will never accept the presence of Americans in Lebanon, not even within the UN peace force."

This statement was made by a three-member delegation of the Lebanese National Movement upon their arrival yesterday at Ellinikon Airport. With its statement, the National Movement makes it clear that:

-- It considers the United States responsible for the tragedy that is developing in Lebanon and it is not prepared to accept American-inspired solutions.

The Lebanese National Movement delegation consists of Karim Muruwah, Marwan Faris and Ghazi al-'Aridi. In Athens, they will have contacts with government officials and the political parties. This morning they will meet with Deputy Foreign Minister K. Papoulias and with a PASOK delegation.

They have said that their visit to Athens, which takes place immediately after a similar visit to Paris, aims at two goals. Karim Muruwah stressed:

"The most basic thing we seek from the Greek Government, as well as from the French Government, is that these two friendly countries, which have been in such strong solidarity with our struggle, try once again to raise within the other EEC member states the question of a political and economic embargo on Israel.

"At the same time, we want to thank the Greek Government and people who have so generously offered us whatever they could."

The Lebanese National Movement delegation is touring Europe in an attempt to win the diplomatic "war" and help the fighting Lebanese and Palestinians.

The members of the delegation have insisted that: "The organized aggression was not launched nor is it taking place in Beirut for the reasons put forward by the Israelis. The aim of their savagery is the occupation of Lebanon. However, this will not happen. The battle is still at the beginning. The terms set by Sharon and Habib (editor's note: The first is the Israeli foreign minister [title as published] and the latter is the U.S. envoy) cannot be accepted.

"The Lebanese Government may accept the Habib agreements and want to impose them. But we will not accept all this just like that. We will resist with all means and we would accept a UN peace force only after the withdrawal of the Palestinian fighters."

Delegation Meets Papoulias

[Text] Deputy Foreign Minister Karolos Papoulias today received a delegation of the Lebanese National Movement. The delegation briefed Papoulias on the latest developments in Lebanon and expressed thanks on behalf of the National Movement and the Lebansese people for Greece's moral and material support for the Lebanese and Palestinian people.

The deputy foreign minister reassured the Lebanese representatives that Greece will continue to support the Arab nation's struggle for a just and overall solution of the Middle East problem.

ISRAELI SECURITY MEN REPORTED ON GREEK SHIPS

NC092128 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 9 Aug 82 pp 1, 14

[By Fivos Oikonomidhis]

[Excerpt] Greek officers of the port police have arrested three members of the Israeli security forces on the Greek ship Veryina for having automatic guns, revolvers and hand-grenades in their possession. We are in a position to disclose this scandalous event today. At the beginning of the summer, Greek officers of the port police secret service, who were accompanying the ship Veryina during its Piraievs-Iraklion-Limassol-Haifa run, found the movements of three young Israeli passengers suspicious. A search of their cabins led to the discovery of automatic guns, revolvers and handgrenades hidden in a sack. The ship was then on its way from Haifa to Piraievs. The port policemen took the three Israelis off the ship upon their arrival at Piraievs. The presence of armed Israelis on a Greek ship, which is part of Greek territory, required that they be brought before the public prosecutor. On being interrogated, the Israelis maintained that they were accompanying a group of Israeli tourists going to Greece and that they were protecting them from a possible "terrorist attack."

For a long time the Israeli secret service, particularly Mossad, has been using the argument of a Palestinian commando attack in order to move undisturbed between Greece, Crete and Cyprus.

In the spring of 1979, ELEVTHEROTIPIA disclosed the existence of Israeli agents policing the Piraievs-Limassol-Haifa route from Greek territory. A question was also raised on this matter in the Chamber of Deputies, and for some time the Greek authorities -- who then cooperated with the Israeli services and held joint meetings between officers of both countries at the Piraievs port office -- had then adopted certain measures to limit the Israeli activities, but later they reduced them. After 18 October 1981, when PASOK assumed power, the port body and its security forces decided to adopt more drastic measures.

The Greek ships, which constitute part of the Greek state, should have exclusively Greek officers of the port police on board during the Piraievs-Limassol-Haifa run. This, however, was not accepted by the Israelis. The Israelis consider it a necessity for men from their secret service to move semiofficially on the Piraievs-Crete-Cyprus route.

A general of the Israeli Armed Forces, who had been discharged from service, lives permanently in Athens and is attached to the Israeli Consulate in Athens under the name of "David." He has contacts with the men of the Israeli security forces who come to Piraievs. Greeks of Israeli origin (who are members of the Israeli community here) also have contacts with the tourist groups and the "guides" from Israel.

According to absolutely reliable information, the men of the Israeli secret service continue to accompany the tourist groups from Haifa to Cyprus and Greece as passengers, under the strange tolerance of a few.

TWO SOLDIERS KILLED BY SOVIET FIRE 10 AUG

[Text] Two Turkish soldiers were martyred by shots fired by Soviet border guards the day before yesterday [10 August] at the Turkish-Soviet border in the Cildir district of Kars. A statement by the Foreign Ministry spokesman's office says that the incident was immediately protested to the Soviet Union by the Turkish Government. The statement says that it is regrettable that such an uncacceptable action was taken when a mechanism exists permitting the solution of border disputes between our country and the Soviet Union. The two Turkish soldiers martyred by the Soviet border guards are Ertugrul Kayali from Ankara and Ali Akarsu from Gazianter.

DEPUTIES EXPRESS CONCERN OVER NEW CONSTITUTION

TA121915 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 12 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, 12 Aug (AA) -- The Consultative Assembly debate on the draft constitution continued Thursday, with a number of deputies voicing concern over the extensive powers given to the president.

Yavuz Altop said the drafting [constitutional] committee had apparently wanted to strengthen the constitution, but had neglected to put in effective checks that would restrain it from anti-democratic and illegal tendencies. The committee had also failed to provide adequately for the strengthening of modern institutions of pluralist democracy such as the press, the judiciary and professional organizations. The presidential election process in the draft could well enable the political party enjoying an absolute majority in the National Assembly to elect its partisan head of state, with grave consequences for the nation's political life.

Mrs Ture Tuncbay also feared social and political quarrels could diminish the prestige of the presidential post.

Ismail Sengun found the draft constitution lacking in an economic philosophy and called for formal recognition of the public sector and a mixed economy.

The following excerpts are from the Consultative Assembly debate on the draft constitution:

Abdulkadar Erener: The parliamentary system deteriorated the rule of law, and the military was forced to come in and save the situation.

Mustafa Yucel: Human thought cannot be mortgaged by any force (on basic freedoms). The draft wants to take away by the ladle what is given by the spoon.

Abdullah Abim Igneciler: The press started an intensive campaign against the draft constitution as soon as it was announced.

Muhsin Zekai Bayer: The draft constitution intends to protect the less-than-a thousand big landowners. The provision for nationalization of any land at current value instead of tax-declaration value meant there could be no real land reform.

Nuri Ozgoker: Individual members of the drafting committee have placed so many reservations on articles of the draft that they should either resign or re-draft the constitution.

MILLIYET URGES ARABS TO CONFRONT ISRAEL

NC091000 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 4 Aug 82 p 2

[Article by Burhan Felek: "Islam, the Arabs and the Jews..."]

[Excerpts] A disgrace for mankind and as great a sin as ever recorded in history is taking place today before the eyes of the entire world. A handful of ambitious and anti-Muslim Jews are devastating Beirut with every modern means of destruction. They are killing Muslim men, women and children but no one, particularly our friend the great United States, attempts to stop this massacre. The United States is merely keeping a representative named Philip Habib in the Middle East pretending to be searching for peace.

We would not have expected this of Honorable President Reagan of the United States, of the Socialist president of France, Honorable Mitterrand, or of Federal German Chancellor Schmidt, of whose human feelings we are certain.

But this is not what we actually want to write about. The number of Muslims suffering oppression at the hands of only 3.5 million Israelis is 1 billion. Every fourth man in the world is a Muslim. These Muslims possess everything from atomic [energy] to petrol.

Today, the aspiration of the Israelis is to exterminate the Muslim Arabs, using the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) as a subterfuge. We deduce this from the fact that they are collaborating with the Christian Arabs of Lebanon.

Are the 80 million Arabs, headed by Saudi Arabia, totally devoid of a feeling of vengeance? Every night I listen to the Arab radios late into the night. They keep praying for the Arab and Islamic world. They visit one another and exchange congratulations on holy occasions, but somehow, they dare not take up arms obtained from the United States, France and even Russia and fight against the genocide now being carried out by the Israeli Government which has become a real pest. Everyone knows that the Arabs possess the most modern weapons, particularly planes. [as published] When will our Arab brother. use them?

O Lord! What is this cloud of indolent indifference and corruption that has befallen the Arab world? Wake them up and show them the right path from which they seem to have strayed.

Let us sum it up: We believe that this is a cause between the Muslim Arabs and the Jews. Eighty million Arabs should stop fighting each other and unite on a front against the Jews who are ruthlessly trying to exterminate them. Preaching eulogies for the Arab and Muslim causes over the radios by most authoritative persons is not enough. They have to work hard. They have to gain fresh vigor and fight. Otherwise, there is no doubt that what has befallen the Muslims of Lebanon today is bound to befall other Arab states as well.

KREISKY COMMENTS ON UN IN POLAND, MIDDLE EAST

AU131348 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 13 Aug 82 p 5

[Excerpts] Vienna (AZ) -- Great injustice is done to the UN organization in public opinion, Chancellor Kreisky stated at a dinner given on the occasion of the visit to Vienna by UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar (shortly before his departure).

A Plan for Poland's Economy

We know from our own experience how difficult the problem of Poland is. But there, too, there exists only one possibility in my opinion. We must try, together with Poland, to get its economy moving again. This will not be possible in one day and we shall need a plan worked out by economic experts, and the states in both the West and the East must cooperate in working it out. This is why I have proposed that the ECE, the UN Economic Commission for Europe, which is the only organization uniting Western and Eastern states, be charged with working out such a plan.

Such a plan will extend over a period of 5 years and must comprise all economic sectors, as well as the problem of redemption of debts.

Once such a joint plan is available it could be formally adopted in a politically binding manner by the heads of state and government of the Helsinki states.

The military activities in Afghanistan continue to most deeply engage our attention -- even though they are taking place far away from us -- because they constitute a heavy burden on world politics, beyond the specific events.

The most dangerous conflicts, however, are those that are now taking place in Lebanon, and what is taking place there is incomprehensible. People who owe their home to a UN resolution, now that they are militarily strong, believe they can ignore the moral weight of the UN organization. At this moment we can only regret all this most deeply because such arrogance vis-a-vis the world organization has existed before in history and my contemporaries and I know very well what such things look like.

It is pathetic that people who come from a religious community which has experienced terrible things over the centuries, and most recently in this century, display such a lack of understanding for what it means to disavow such a big organization in such a reckless manner.

GENSCHER APPEALS TO GDR TO IMPROVE RELATIONS

LD131302 Hamburg DPA in German 1033 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 13 Aug (DPA) -- FDP chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher today appealed to the GDR leadership "with special insistance" to dismantle obstacles between the two German states and thus fulfill the commitments of the basic treaty and the Helsinki Final Act. The Wall built on 13 August 1961 is an intolerable burden on the people in Germany and East-West relations, wrote Genscher in an article for the Bremerhaven NORDSEE-ZEITING (Saturday edition), published by the FDP in Bonn. Every step that makes the Wall more penetrable helps people and is a contribution toward improving East-West relations.

The GDR must be aware that its responsiblity for the state of East-West relations is no less than that of the Federal Republic, stressed Genscher. By diminishing the consequences of division, East Berlin can do more toward improving these relations than other Warsaw Pact States. The important factor for the policy of the two German states is that what has been achieved between them during the past decade must not be placed at risk. East Berlin and Bonn must strike for a gradual improvement in cooperation and, now in particular, prove themselves as reliable treaty partners.

LIBYAN MISSION ISSUES STATEMENT ON COOPERATION

LD131547 Hamburg DPA in German 1400 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn, 13 Aug (DPA) -- Libya has expressed its basic interest in cooperation with the environmentalist movements of other countries "in order that undesirable developments connected with industrialization can be avoided on Libyan soil." In a statement published in Bonn today, the Libyan Mission in the Federal Republic at the same time expresses the hope that despite the "misunderstandings" regarding the visit by a group of German "Greens" to head of state Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, a "new road" of cooperation between Europe, the Arab and Third World might be found.

The National Executive of the German Greens expressly dissociated itself from the meeting with Al-Qadhdhafi. The Libyan Mission is now defending itself in this respect against the allegation that Al-Qadhdhafi was pursuing an imperialist policy and against doubts as to whether the Libyan people's congresses live up to the basic democratic requirements of the Greens. Libya is pushing ahead with the rule of the people, says the statement, and is pursuing a "policy of aid" toward countries "which suffer under the consequences of imperialism and colonialism."

FOREIGN MINISTERS COLOMBO, GENSCHER HOLD TALKS

[Excerpts] Bonn/Como, 14 Aug (DPA) -- Bonn and Rome would like to make a joint effort to expand relations between the European Community and Latin America to overcome the situation resulting from the Falkland/Malvinas Islands conflict. This was agreed upon today by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo during an informal discussion at Lake Como in northern Italy. Both ministers regard close cooperation between European states and Latin America as necessary.

Genscher and Colombo also affirmed the European position in the dispute with Washington over the American embargo on the European-Soviet gas pipeline deal. At the same time they stressed that relations between Europe and the United States are vitally important for joint security. Every effort therefore must be made to intensify consultations between Europe and the United States. The informal NATO foreign minsters' meeting planned for early October in Canada is an important step in this direction.

SPADOLINI PROPOSES BROADER POWER FOR PREMIERSHIP

AU141440 Rome ANSA in English 0806 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 14 -- There was a glimmer of hope in Italian political circles Friday evening on the prospects of Premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini's bid to form Italy's forty-second postwar government after Spadolini presented a draft of ten urgent institutional reforms.

Spadolini, whose five-party coalition of his own Republicans, the Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats and right-of-center Liberals stepped down Saturday after a government economic austerity measure was defeated in Parliament, was tapped by chief of state Sandro Pertini to try to form a new government.

The measure would have curtailed tax privileges enjoyed by Italy's oil companies.

The Socialists accused Christian Democrat Party backbenchers of voting in Parliament against a measure already approved by the cabinet in collusion with oil interests.

Spadolini's efforts seemed doomed after the Socialists came out in favor of early elections, which are opposed by all the other former coalition members and by the majority of opposition parties.

Spadolini's draft document calls for reform of the premiership, giving the post broader powers -- measures limiting secret ballots in Parliament to avert situations such as the one which brought down the government last week -- and greater autonomy for the prime minister from party pressure in selection of his cabinet ministers.

Immediate reaction to Spadolini's proposals from the secretaries of the former coalition partners was positive, but concrete decisions will be taken next week after the various party caucuses meet.

Holds Talks With Pertini

AU141538 Rome ANSA in English 1533 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Excerpts] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 14 -- Italian Premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini reported back to head-of-state Sandro Pertini on his attempts to form a new government this morning. "The talk went very well," he told reporters later without specifiying what had been discussed.

But he said his next round of talks with his candidates for a new five-party coalition -- the Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Liberals and his own Republicans -- would be held on Tuesday.

According to Spadolini, he is now awaiting the decisions of the executives of the various parties, starting with the Socialists on Tuesday morning.

The outgoing premier added that he had already drawn up a platform for constitutional and institutional matters and is working on one covering economic policy.

Further on Spadolini Efforts

AU141941 Rome ANSA in English 1934 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Excerpts] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 14 -- Premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini will take a break for the Ferragosto holiday in his efforts to put together Italy's forty-second postwar government.

On Friday, he presented his draft document on institutional reform which seems to have broken the impasse which made early elections all but inevitable.

This morning, Spadolini reported to Pertini on the progress he has made. He announced later that on Tuesday he will begin holding meetings with delegations of the five former coalition parties and will begin drafting an economic and political platform which picks up and completes the last government's program.

The Socialist Party today voiced satisfaction that "the problem of the system's defects" is finally being dealt with.

This feeling was echoed by Christian Democrat Party Secretary Ciriaco de Mita who said that he believes "the conditions exist" to form a government now that the basic issues are out in the open.

Communist Party official Aldo Tortorella said that "if a political agreement is reached and a government is formed along the lines of the constitution... this will be considered an interesting new sign."

PRESS COMMENT ON EFFORTS TO FORM GOVERNMENT

13 Aug Review

AU131546 Rome ANSA in English 1542 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 13 -- The see-saw of hope and pessimism which marked Italian Premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini's government-formation consultations yesterday were one keynote in Italian editorial comment this morning.

According to the Rome daily, PAESE SERA, reflecting a view voiced in all the dailies, the statements released by Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi seemed to reflect a no to a new Spadolini government all down the line, his objective being the dissolution of Parliament and early general elections.

"Then the experts in allusions, winks and hermetic expressions read the Socialist leader's phrases more closely and said there is a glimmer of hope", PAESE SERA added.

The paper added that the Christian Democrats and the Social Democrats showed "cautious optimism", apparently believing Spadolini's former five-party government can be set on its feet again provided the Socialists receive assurances on the "government's stability with respect to Parliament".

The Turin daily LA STAMPA said it seems possible to avoid early elections at least until spring next year, pointing to Craxi's remark that the Socialists are not "withdrawing from the fray" and that those who agree with his call for major constutitional reforms should "step forward with concrete proposals."

As LA STAMPA noted, this call was welcomed on the spot by Spadolini and the Christian Democrats, but Craxi's was a "subtle opening" which leaves everything to be checked out in negotiations that promise to be "increasingly long and difficult".

The newspaper also pointed to talk of a possible five-party government, but open to support from "all the democratic groups which intend to launch the reform of some important articles of the constitution".

The Rome daily, LA REPUBBLICA, wondered why the Socialists were now apparently involved in a "cautious retreat" after bringing down the government.

According to LA REPUBBLICA, the answer lies in their "total and increasingly grave isolation".

Pointing to "increasing polemics and nervousness" against the Socialists among the other non-catholic parties in the outgoing government, LA REPUBBLICA also pointed to increasing interest for the Communists, who, it said, are showing "readiness to cooperate in some way in the very difficult moment the country is passing through".

14 Aug Review

AU141534 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 14 -- What one newspaper described as the "positive evolution" of the government crisis was the keynote of Italian press comment this morning on Premier-designate Giovanni Spadolini's attempts to form a new cabinet.

The crisis broke on August 7 with a strong feeling that early general elections were just round the corner, but there was general agreement today that, after Spadolini's second round of talks since he received the mandate from President Sandro Pertini on August 11. This eventuality now seems more distant.

According to most newspapers, the five parties Spadolini plans to bring into the new government -- the Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Liberals and his own Republicans, as in the outgoing cabinet -- have given a favorable welcome to the premier-designate's ideas about institutional reform.

According to the Milanese daily, CORRIERE DELLA SERA, however, even if there are the "margins" for the formation of a government, "the negotiations may still be complex".

"There is a spirit of cooperation among the parties, certainly based on the acceptance of convenient guarantees for all of them," the daily added.

"Spadolini has managed to win back a dialogue with the Socialists in the field of institutional reform, a theme people have been talking about for years, though this time the commitment seems to be binding for the new government's survival", the paper added.

But the Rome daily, PAESE SERA, argued that the Socialists' softer stand which emerged yesterday was probably not so much due to the "consolation prize" offered by Spadolini as the Socialists' "complete isolation" with respect to the other non-Christian Democrat parties in the government, the Communists, and Pertini.

PAESE SERA also noted that, "last but not least, there is a public opinion which has followed with amazement and suspicion the dramatic clash that seems to have been opened around the question of dissolving Parliament".

Another Rome daily, IL TEMPO, theorized that Spadolini could go back to Pertini as soon as Wednesday to announce his acceptance of the government-formation mandate.

The paper added that the final stages of Spadolini's consultations should be "less insidious" than usual because of his continual reference to Article 92 of the Constitution which lays down that naming the ministers is the prime minister's prerogative, "in practise removing the debate on the government's structure from the party secretariats".

The Rome daily, IL MESSAGGERO, said that the turning-point for the crisis was when all the parties in the outgoing cabinet realized the need to "overcome the institutional paralysis which prevented a correct relationship between government and Parliament and nourished a climate of fisticuffs and suspicion in the majority".

The Turin daily, LA STAMPA, argued that early elections had been postponed at least until October. LA STAMPA also said that first conjectures are already being made on non-party figures Spadolini may call to serve in his cabinet.

According to the daily, the secretaries of the parties will have to give a "first example" of their readiness for institutional reform "by accepting the premier's decisions and thus automatically reducing their official representation in the new government".

The Rome daily, LA REPUBBLICA, ran the headline, "Spadolini at Full Steam" and stressed that no one is now talking about early elections.

According to LA REPUBBLICA, Socialist Party Secretary Bettino Craxi is now ready to accept an agreement with his old allies. "Even if caution is needed... the worst seems to be over," the paper commented.

The Communist Party daily, L'UNITA, pointed to Spadolini's ideas on institutional matters as the factor that gave a second wind to his talks. Its title was, "Now Craxi Thinks Again".

PRESIDENCY ISSUES NOTE ON CLOSING OF ANOP

LD150348 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2000 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] The Presidency of the Republic has issued the following official note through Presidential Spokesman Joaquim Letria:

[Begin Letria recording] During their customary weekly meeting, held yesterday, the president of the republic told his excellency the prime minister that he was to call a halt to any moves in progress aimed at winding up the news agency ANOP before the promulgation of legislation that would legitimize such an action.

The president of the republic's decision is grounded on his absolute refusal to accept any fait accompli which would constitute a form of political illegality hitherto unheard of in Portugal, whereby a public enterprise created by legislation and promulgated by the president of the republic would for all practical purposes be liquidated before the approval of the Council of Ministers or the Assembly of the Republic and before the promulgation by the president of the republic of the piece of legislation determining the aforesaid liquidation.

There are norms in the laws of a democratic state the transgression of which cannot be admissible whatever the circumstances. A decision that only becomes valid after the promulgation of the respective law or decree cannot be translated into actions or official undertakings before being enacted as law.

Some of the news media have referred to the government's alleged intention to close ANOP for all practical purposes before the president of the republic's pronouncement on the respective piece of legislation; and it emerges that such an interpretation is without foundation in that his excellency the prime minister has, among other things, given the president of the republic the following assurances:

1. The government has not decided on closing ANOP.

2. No decisions will be made or actions carried out concerning the winding-up of ANOP before the respective piece of legislation is submitted by the government to the president of the republic for promulgation.

3. The government has entered into no undertakings concerning a new news agency.

4. Neither the government nor any members thereof have signed any protocol with persons or organizations interested in the creation of a new news agency.

Nevertheless, a resolution of the Council of Ministers has already been published in the official gazette giving the secretary of state assistant to the prime minister for mass media affairs and the secretary of state of the budget sufficient powers to undertake demarches with a view to contracting for news reporting services from persons or organizations which, giving guarantees of accuracy, pluralism and rationality of costs, might contribute to the providing of a news service to Portugal, the Portuguese communities abroad and the Portuguese-speaking countries.

Reply to Presidency

LD160920 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Following yesterday's communique from the Presidency of the Republic of the case of the ANOP news agency, it was the government's turn today to rely through a spokesman of the prime minister's office.

[Begin unidentified spokesman recording] With reference to the communique released yesterday by the Presidency of the Republic, the following is hereby made clear:

1. Concerning the future of the public enterprise ANOP, the government has conducted itself as it invariably does, that is, with total respect for democratic legality and the national interest. In this context the submission to the president of the republic for promulgation of a decree-law determining the winding-up of ANOP can take place only after the necessary legal procedures have taken their course within ANOP in the wake of the resolutions adopted by the Council of Ministers.

2. The management of the general state budget, once duly approved by the Assembly of the Republic, belongs to the government and to the government alone, that is, the allocations to be made to the state-owned enterprises as subsidied. Likewide, it is for the government and the government alone, whenever it may deem fit and in accordance with the laws of the land, to contract for whatever services it may deem useful for the prosecution of the goals laid down in its program, which program was approved by the Assembly of the Republic in accordance with the constitution, specifically to contract for the provision of a regional news service and the expansion of news dissemination to areas of fundamental importance to Portuguese foreign policy such as the Portuguese communities abroad and Portuguese-speaking countries.

3. The reaffirmation of these principles has appeared necessary because the communique from the presidency of the republic on the matter of ANOP states that there are norms in the democratic state of law whose transgression can on no account be admissible. Because this is precisely the view of the government it will not be out of place to point out that prominent among the said norms there is one which requires that all the organs of sovereignty must respect the powers and areas of jurisdiction of the others even, and especially, when legitimate decisions made by one of them may not be to the political liking of one or more of the others. [end recording]

Asked to comment on the government's communique, Presidential Spokesman Joaquim Letria said that there is nothing to add to yesterday's communique, and recalled the pledges made by the prime minister to the president of the republic.

2. [Begin Letria recording] The Presidency of the Republic has no comment on the communique issued by the prime minister's office. The Presidency of the Republic merely stands by everything it stated in yesterday's communique. [end recording]

KIPRIANOU CONDEMNS ISRAELI 'CRIMES' IN LEBANON

NC131221 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] President Kiprianou strongly condemned the genocide of the Palestinian and the Lebanese peoples by the Israeli invasion troops, and reiterated Cyprus' support for the heroic struggle of the martyred Palestinian people and its backing to the Lebanese people.

In a statement today, President Kiprianou states that the siege of west Beirut by the Israeli occupation troops -- which has lasted many weeks now -- and the unabated merciless bombardment which resulted the destruction and desertion of a city once throbbing with life, causes general indignation and abhorrence. President Kiprianou adds: The Cyprus Government expresses strong protest and strongly condemns this atrocious crime of genocide which is a stigma on our civilization. It is the foremost duty of all, he stresses, to demand the immediate lifting of the inhuman siege and the incarceration of hundreds of thousands in west Beirut under conditions that deprive them of everything as well as demand an end to the savage bombardment of the martyred city from land, sea and air.

President Kiprianou then states that further tolerating of the slaughter of Beirut citizens -- especially at a time when negotiations to achieve an agreement are underway -- will mean mankind's complicity in the hideous crime that is being perpetrated.

President Kiprianou's statement concludes: The Cyprus Government reiterates once again its firm support to the heroic struggle of the tormented Palestinian people and its backing for the Lebanese people.

PAPANDREOU SENDS MESSAGE ON ARMED FORCES DAY

NC141026 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0400 GMT 14 Aug 82

["Message" from Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou of Greece to the Greek Armed Forces commemorating Armed Forces Day on 15 August -- read by announcer]

[Text] Men and women of the armed forces: With pride we honor and celebrate today Armed Forces Day. This day is devoted to you, the vanguards of our national defense and our country's integrity. The establishment of Armed Forces Day is a way in which the state pays tribute to you. We celebrate it on the same day we celebrate the assumption on the Virgin Mary, which our national tradition has established as the protector of the armed forces.

In recognition of your great efforts and sacrifices for the homeland, all the Greek people today think of you with honor and affection. You are the ones who are worthy of continuing the traditions of your forefathers who heriocally struggled every time their homeland called on them to defend the supreme virtue of freedom and national independence by fighting victoriously against a superior enemy, thus giving an example of self-sacrifice and indomitable faith in final victory to the people of the world. The Greek Armed Forces' decisive contribution which, along with the contribution of all the struggling people, led to upsetting the occupation plans and ultimately destroying those who tried to undermine the European people is recognized throughout the world.

Today the times are again difficult and the international horizon is cloudy, particularly in our area, while part of Hellenism is suffering under foreign occupation. Our country has made it known to everyone that it wants peace, cooperation and the friendly settlement of any problem. But at the same time, our country is determined to support, with all its power, its national independence and territorial integrity. This is why continuous vigilance and raising the potential of the armed forces is imperative as never before.

During the time that I have been the head of your political leadership, I was given many opporutnities to closely follow your activities and to appreciate your virtues, discipline and excellent training that meet the glorious, fighting traditions of the armed forces. I am proud of you for these achievements, and I congratulate you in the name of the Greek people. I assure you that we shall continue to strengthen your potential by exerting every possible effort and that we will satisfy your special problems. I call on you to continue and to intensify your efforts by responding to the expectations, love and sacrifices of our people. You, together with all the people, constitute the shield of the nation, the guarantee of our national independence, territorial integrity, democracy and normal conditions as well as the strongest factor for consolidating peace.

Honor and glory to the worthy men of the armed forces. Honor and glory to the free Greek people. Honor and glory to our immortal dead. Long live the armed forces. Long live the Greek people.

PAPANDREOU ADDRESSES OFFICERS AT THESSALONIKI

NC151955 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Shortly after noon, the prime minister returned to Thessaloniki, where he attended a luncheon given by the Greek Army at the officers club. After an address by Commander of the Army Lt Gen Kourkafas, Prime Minister Papandreou said the following:

We are in a period which is exceptionally difficult not only for Greece but for the whole world. The entire world, East and West and the Third World, is passing through an enormous economic crisis which is acquiring dimensions much more significant than the crisis of 1929. The crisis will last a long time, but together with this crisis detente is receding, and for the first time I think there is a dangerous confrontation between the two blocs. I hope not, but I cannot say that I am optimistic.

However, beyond these things, beyond humanity's fate in general, we, Greece, our fatherland, is facing an existing and permanent danger to security. One would be very narrowminded not to realize that our country should, for decades to come, be ready to defend its territory, defend its territorial integrity and national independence. For reasons which you know, I would not like to proceed further, to name, to speak quite openly. You know that we are passing through an exceptionally delicate period in our relations with Turkey, a period of moratorium, a period during which violations and statements have ceased, a period of preparation for some dialogue for the formation -- if possible -- of a framework for a dialogue.

However, on such a sacred day it would be difficult for me not to tell you that I believe the country's defense problem will be the most serious issue for many years to come. This means that the Greek people should contribute, contribute freely without restrictions, to the development of a national defense so strong that it will be a deterrent to any local war, because our basic goal is to avert a clash, and averting a clash, in fact, may depend only on the nation's forces. People speak of guarantees: I personally have never spoken of guarantees. Journalists have written that I have asked for guarantees. Guarantees are either things that are forgotten, as we see around us -- if we look at the Middle East -- or are transformed into arbitration. However, if we truly want guarantees, these guarantees will be the ability of the country's armed forces to avert a war because they are strong and in a position to rout any invader. It is difficult for a country like us to influence the course of humanity and the world. Nobody expects this of us and, consequently, what will happen on an international scale is something that exceeds our possibilities. We have positions and hopes, and we promote certain measures in the international community wherever we may be, NATO, the EEC, the United Nations or the OECD, but we are small.

However, what we should do for our people, the Greek people, is to guarantee peace to them through a strong military presence, and I know that especially for a socialist, progressive government, schools and hospitals are of much greater significance in the long run. But we are in a time when neither schools nor hospitals will mean much if we cannot defend our territorial integrity and avert a local war. For precisely these reasons I want to assure the armed forces that the Greek People will proceed with all those sacrifices which are indispensable for Greece's survival, for the nation's survival.

SPOKESMAN DENIES PRESS REPORT ON BASES POLICY

NC131933 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] With regard to an I KATHIMERINI report that the question of the evacuation of the [U.S.] bases will not be raised for the next 12 years, the government spokesman has made the following statement:

This report is absolutely false. No responsible government official has said the question of the evacuation of the bases will not be raised for the next 12 years.

At the same time, referring to the charge in the report that the talks will drag on for a long time or that they will be postponed or fail, the government spokesman stated: The talks on the bases will not be postponed. The Greek Government will give reasonable time for the talks to be concluded. If the negotiations fail, this would mean the end of the bases.

Concerning the question of nuclear weapons in Greece, the government spokesman stated that this question is not related to the bases and has no connection with the negotiations to be conducted. It is not a question of dialogue but of a political decision by the government.

Soviet Protest Rejected

NC151328 Paris AFP in English 1313 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, Aug 15 (AFP) -- The Turkish Foreign Ministry has rejected a Soviet protest note over the violation of the Soviet border by two Turkish soldiers, officials said here today.

The soldiers, understood to have strayed 300 metres (yards) into Soviet territory last Tuesday near the town of Cildir, were killed by Soviet frontier troops, triggering a strong protest from Turkey.

Admitting that the soldiers had crossed into the Soviet Union while on patrol, Ankara nevertheless protested that their shooting broke an agreement stipulating the peaceful settlement of such incidents.

Turkish officials have also alleged that the soldiers were shot in the back and apparently bled to death with medical care denied them.

In its counter-protest the Soviet Union claimed that the Turkish soldiers had opened fire at Soviet guards on Soviet territory, expressing at the same time its regrets over their deaths.

EVREN DEFENDS INTERVENTION IN UNIVERSITIES

TA131545 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1535 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, 13 Aug (AA) -- Head of State Gen Kenan Evren said state intervention in university administration did not imply an intention to set up an authoritarian regime.

He made the statement to the rectors of 27 universities he appointed recently led by Prof Ihsan Dogramaci, chairman of the Higher Educational Board which nominated the candidates for rector.

General Evren added that the state, which financed the universities, had the right to intervene in their administration in other countries of the world which were democracies.

He believed elected officers did not always make the best choice for an institution, although election to office was being preferred in a majority of cases. Evren regretted the frequent lack of confidence in persons holding high office, for it led to further confusion.

ECEVIT TOLD TO BEGIN SERVING PRISON SENTENCE

NC141422 Paris AFP in English 1414 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, Aug 14 (AFP) -- Former Turkish Premier Bulent Ecevit was told Friday to report to prison to serve a two month and 27 day jail sentence he received last July, judiciary sources reported today.

Mr Ecevit, a social democrat, was sentenced by the Ankara Martial Law Court for violating Decree No. 52 which banned political discussions. He was charged in connection with an interview to the Dutch Television N.C.V.P. Channel last February and an article he had published in March in the West German weekly DER SPIEGEL.

Mr Ecevit, however, applied to the chief prosecutor for the postponement of the execution of the sentence for four months, a customarily allowed period in case of necessity.

Mr Ecevit said his request stemmed from the fact he had been imprisoned for 54 days in the meantime for an offence for which he was acquitted. Finalization of the acquittal depends however on official testimony to be taken by a Danish court from a Danish journalist to the effect that he never interviewed Mr Ecevit.

Mr Ecevit now demands that the 54 days he served should be subtracted from his present sentence. He however wants this sentence postponed while awaiting the testimony of the Danish journalist to reach the military court through official routes.

Another request by Mr Ecevit for the cancellation of his sentence in view of the abolishment of Decree No. 52 had been denied him last week.

LD142130 Brussels in French to Africa 1500 GMT 14 Aug 82

[Text] The paper LE SOIR announced today that a coordination bureau of the Solidarity Trade Union abroad will soon open in Brussels. This new bureau will be headed by Jerzy Milewski, leader of the trade union, a physicist and specialist in lasers, who was in the United States when martial law was declared in Poland. He was also a member of the first strike committee of the Gdansk Shipyard, which, you recall, was chaired by Lech Walesa.

Mr Milewski will try to stimulate the interest of international public opinion in the situation in Poland and help Polish people who are determined to recreate an independent trade union movement.

This bureau will also serve as a general headquarters for all the Solidarity bureaus in the world. Mr Milewski explained that Brussels was chosen because of the presence in our capital of the main world trade union federations, which are the natural partners of solidarity.

PAPERS DETAIL PAHR 13 AUG PRESS CONFERENCE

AU161616 [Editorial Report] Vienna DIE PRESSE in German on 14/15 August on page 2 carries a 600-word "A.U." report on a press conference given by Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr in Vienna on 13 August. The report begins by quoting Pahr as saying that "we thank the United States for the strong pressure exerted on Israel, which has led to a termination of the bombing," and as terming relations between the United States and Austria as "untroubled." Pahr said he sees no strain in the prolonged absence of a new U.S. ambassador from Vienna, but at the same time added: "Despite the high qualifications of Minister Polansky, I miss having an American ambassador."

Pahr said he will meet the other neutral and nonaligned foreign ministers in late August in Stockholm before the next round of the security conference, which is to begin in Madrid this fall. "Despite all the optimism, I am skeptical whether the situation there will be different from that in the spring," Pahr said. He added that in Madrid, Austria will not submit Chancellor Kreisky's proposal for holding a summit conference on Poland or for involving the UN Economic Commission for Europe in the Polish issue, but will continue to endorse the draft final document worked out by the neutral group last year.

Minister Pahr also stated that he will display restraint with respect to the problems of the Vereinigte Edelstahlwerke (VEW) Austrian steel concern involving steel exports. "We will wait for the negotiations between the United States and the EEC," he noted.

Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German of 14 August, on page 2 carries a 400-word report on the same press conference. According to this report, Minister Pahr explained Austria's vote on the resolution on Lebanon at the recent UN conference on aging, held in Vienna, as follows: "One must back up one's own principles, and this is why Austria voted for the resolution and did not abstain." He added that it is regrettable that such issues had been brought up at a conference related to another issue. He went on to say that Austria has protested against the destruction of the Austrian Embassy in Beirut and will claim damages. These claims must be made against Israel. First, however, the extent of the damage must be ascertained. The embassy building received two hits.

Referring to Southeast Asia, Pahr described the positions of the various sides there as unchanged. No rapprochements are now noticeable. In conclusion, Foreign Minister Pahr stressed the need for Austria to build a UN conference center in Vienna.

FOREIGN MINISTER RECEIVES OUTGOING ALGERIAN ENVOY

[Summary] "Mohamed Belaid Lakhdar, the present Algerian ambassador to Austria, was officially seen off by Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr at a reception yesterday. Ambassador Belaid will leave Austria after a tour of almost 3 years."

In his speech Pahr praised the efforts of the ambassador in developing relations between Austria and Algeria and particularly stressed that the development of the Algerian railway system has led to close cooperation with Austrian companies. "On this occasion, Pahr announced that he will pay an official visit to Algeria in January 1983."

Ambassador Belaid underscored Austria's role in the efforts for the preservation of peace, particularly in connection with the Middle East crisis.

CHANCELLOR VOICES CONCERN OVER LEBANON

DW161206 Bonn DIE WELT in German 14-15 Aug 82 p 1

[Interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt by Herbert Schuette in Hamburg on 13 August]

[Text] "It is incompatible with respect for the dignity of man to settle controversial motives and interests by means of bombs and rockets." This is the statement with which Chancellor Helmut Schmidt reacted yesterday to the heavy raids on western Beirut Thursday [12 August]. In an interview with DIE WELT at his Brahmsee vacation refuge, the chancellor stressed that he understands the interests and motives of the Israelis, and also those of the Palestinians.

WELT: FDP Foreign Policy Spokesman Juergen Moellemann has accused Israeli Prime Minister Begin of having changed from Nobel Peace Prize winner to war criminal. The reason for his statement was the renewed, heavy bombardment of western Beirut. You are one of Begin's critics: Your personal relationship with him has long been considered tense. How do you assess Mr Moellemann's statements?

Schmidt: I have never said anything about Prime Minister Begin, nor will I do so in the future. What Mr Moellemann says about foreign politicians is his business and not mine. But I do have to admit to you that I have been profoundly distressed by two concerns this summer.

One is the whole world's economic course, which is still pointing downward. The world economy, under the leadership of the United States, has not so far shown any smashing indications of recuperation and all of Europe is drawn into its spell.

The other concern is for the people who live in Lebanon, in Beirut, and who are most severely affected by war on their territory, in their country, a war which they themselves have neither triggered nor waged.

People are killed indiscriminately here; women and men who have nothing to do with the war and bear no responsibility whatsoever for this war. And I am most profoundly distressed to see that so far all efforts, all motions by the 10 states of the European Community, by the individual governments -- be they in London, Paris, Rome or Bonn -- and even by the U.S. President have to date been to no avail.

I can understand the motives and interests of the Israelis, and I have always understood them. But I can also understand the motives and interests of the Palestinians and the motives and interests of the Lebanese, the Jordanians, the Syrians, the Saudis and the Egyptians. These motives and interests are opposite. And what applies to them is exactly what applies to us in Europe -- it is incompatible with respect for man's dignity to settle controversial motives and interests by means of bombs and rockets.

SCHMIDT INTERVIEWED ON BUDGET, INTEREST RATES

DW161019 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Fides Krause-Brewer interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt; date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Suppose, Mr Chancellor, that the 1983 budget cannot be financed as decided by the cabinet -- which indeed seems possible -- and hence, contracting credits are higher. Will this not keep interest rates high? Is there anything we can do to keep the interest rates at least on the present level if we cannot reduce them?

[Answer] It may be that the budget must be a bit higher and the credits to be obtained somewhat greater. This will not have an essential effect. It will not make any essential impression on German interest rates. Part of the deficit of the federal budget for 1983 is actually even smaller than it was in the seventies. We have done a great deal to dissociate German interest rates from the madly-high U.S. rates. But we cannot completely dissociate ourselves. We have kept the deficit small through the budget cuts, the sacrifices to be made by recipients of monetary benefits from the Federal Government. But meanwhile, there are other states, alas, which finance their deficits in Frankfurt/Main on the German capital market through German credits.

As long as the U.S. Congress does not adopt any budget decisions and as long as the deficits over there keep climbing month after month, money will be dear in the United States and, consequently, the interest rates will remain high. We are making great efforts to exert influence on U.S. policy in this area. I am quite gratified to see President Reagan pulling on the same end of the same rope. To him, too, the U.S. deficits appear to be much too high. We must do two things: We must influence our partners along the lines of a budget policy which will keep deficits small, just as we are doing here in Germany, so that reductions in interest rate ensue; and we must also keep our own budget under control, just as we are doing.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, if cuts become necessary as well, how do you propose to hold your own against the trade unions? After all, they have already lodged protests against the earlier decisions. Does the trade union wing of your party still back you?

[Answer] I don't think we should talk of a trade union wing. But I have always relied very much on the economic and social reasoning of the German trade unions. I will do so in the future as well. I believe we must not overrate individual, exaggerated utterances which come, say, from my own home union, the Trade Union for Public Services, Transport and Traffic, in which a struggle is in progress right now for the succession of Heinz Kluncker. The trade unions are right in demanding that the sacrifices be more justly spread. I, too, deem this demand appropriate. But it is wrong for somebody from the trade union camp to insist that he regain for his people all that was sacrificed in 1982, come hell or high water. That can no longer be reclaimed. Unless the economy as a whole grows the public service must realize that it too, must help bear the risks, especially since the public service bears little unemployment hazard.

SCHMIDT ASSESSES GREEN/ALTERNATIVE LIST

DW161420 Bonn DIE WELT in German 16 Aug 82 pp 1-3

[Helmut Schuette interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Hamburg -- date not given]

[Text] Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt considers the Greens-Alternatives "for the time being neither predictable nor reliable;" nor does he believe that an agreement will be achieved in Hamburg between the SPD and the Green-Alternative list on which explorative talks will be held by the end of the week. In an interview with DIE WELT, the chancellor pointed to law infringements by representatives of the Greens-Alternatives in Hamburg.

"How is agreement supposed to be achieved with somebody who violates the law himself and even boasts in public that he will do it again?" Schmidt stressed: It certainly will take 4 to 8 years to find out if the Greens-Alternatives are a predictable factor. The federal chancellor stated that he was ready to run for election in 1984 in his Hamburg constituency if the party were to nominate him again.

Answering a question as to whether he would be ready to run for chancellor again in case of an SPD election success, Schmidt said that it was "the basic right of the party to determine who it wants to nominate as candidate for the chancellor's office." Helmut Schuette talked with the federal chancellor.

WELT: Mr Federal Chancellor, how do you see the Hamburg Senate's becoming capable of acting again with a parliamentary backing?

Schmidt: Up to now I have not had the impression the Hamburg Senate would not be capable of acting. In my view this idea seems exaggerated, if not wrong. It is obvious that the Senate's capability to act exists. The big question is whether the Hamburg Land Diet is capable of acting, for it is obvious that the land diet is not in a position to form a majority and it is possible that individual senate bills must be put to land diet vote with alternating majorities. I am in Hamburg only over the weekends so I do not hear everything that is happening there. But I am very anxious to know how the CDU and the Greens will actually differ in their votes in the individual construction plans and similar decisions. Maybe they do not differ at all, perhaps both are simply always against something.

WELT: Are the Greens-Alternatives predictable partners in your view?

Schmidt: You might as well replace the term predictability with human reliability or, in this particular case, political reliability. And in the sense of reliability, the Greens-Alternatives first of all are not predictable, not reliable for me. I actually cannot judge by the accidental impressions gained in the past 8 or 12 weeks in Hamburg. I must also include the impressions I have gained in Berlin and in Bremen as well as in Baden-Wuerttemberg.

I have recently been reproached for having no idea what is going on in the minds of the mostly young people who vote for the Greens. This is wrong, because I understand it quite well. I understand the fears regarding the safeguarding of peace as well as the fears regarding the overgrowing of our life with highly organized technology, which in part is technology endangering human culture. All this I understand quite well. And these are also concerns and fears which I even share. But irrespective of understanding for such concerns, I do not deem it correct to simply yield to them and join in the chorus of refusal in principle. I do not consider it responsible or justifiable at all to disarm unilaterally, for instance, out of fear for peace and to leave the field to the Soviet Union and its allies. I do not consider it tolerable at all to renounce technology out of fear of modern technology, but I believe that in all these fields it is necessary to strive hard with all one's intellectual power so as to arrive at correct solutions which are moderate and appropriate. What is needed here is a word concerning the degree, the proportional degree and the suitability. This means that one must not exaggerate.

These concerns must not result in exaggerating, for instance, the defense efforts vis-a-vis threats we may face. There are people in the West who want to exaggerate this. These are people I am fighting against. One must not exaggerate in modern technology, in the field of energy technology, nor, for instance, in the field of genetic biology or psychotherapy. In all these fields there exist technologies which can no longer be assessed exactly at first glance; whether they are already violating the sphere of what is described by the term human dignity or whether human dignity is still kept somewhat intact. If I think, for instance, of the field of psychotherapy, the same applies to various other technologies in offices and factories where one has to consider exactly whether human hignity is kept intact.

Summing it up: If an individual is not in a position to overcome fears, if he cannot try to overcome them through emotional strong-arm acts, an entire people or constituency is allowed even less to do so, and even more efforts in common sense are required. And in this respect, I must actually say that the traditional big three political parties -- or if I take the CSU as a party of its own and this certainly must be done -- that the traditional big four political parties are much more experienced than the Greens and Alternatives have been up to now to cope with the problem. Up to now. But they have the chance to develop themselves.

As a matter of fact, it is a process of fermentation. One does not know yet if it will lead to maturity. At present there can be no talk at all of political maturity and unequivocal attitude. It is more a movement of protests for all kinds of reasons than a party. It neither has a clear-cut program nor a target. It merely seeks to pronounce as loudly as possible all kinds of wishes and wants to take as little responsibility of its own as possible for the state as a whole.

In the course of the next 4, 6 or 8 years it presumably will become apparent whether something predictable will come of it or whether it will perish, just as many other phenomena that flared up have collapsed and ceased to exist. In some cases, in several land and communal parliaments, it can be perceived that individual persons of the Greens and the Alternatives deliberately and intentionally submit to the parliamentary rules and learn to be good parliamentarians. This can only be welcomed.

WELT: If an agreement or a laissez-faire agreement were to be achieved between the SPD and the Green-Alternative list in Hamburg, wouldn't it be, in your view, a pattern absolutely worth imitating by other federal lands?

Schmidt: I am not at all of the view that a partial agreement achieved anywhere — be it in Hamburg or elsewhere -- can work as a model. Nor do I believe that an agreement will be achieved in Hamburg. How does one actually want to achieve agreement with somebody who violates the law himself and even boasts in public that he will do it again? Can he be expected to abide by the agreement? I would be very cautious in handling the idea of an agreement. Agreement means that two people agree on something by promising each other to abide by it.

WELT: Doesn't this necessarily imply that new elections will be due before long?

Schmidt: This may be so, but I do not want to elaborate, for I am not a regional politician, and I do not want to interfere in matters which of course must be seen in the particular light of the Hamburg Constitution. The Hamburg Constitution is basically shaped differently in many points than the Basic Law which is valid for the Federal Parliament and the Federal Government. I can only comment on the demand raised by the CDU, above all by Mr Kohl, the most senior candidate to the chancellor's office we ever had in the history of the second German Republic, that is to say, the demand for new Bundestag elections. In this respect, I can only say that he who looks at the Basic Law knows that this depends to a very substantial degree on the federal chancellor.

WELT: Mr Federal Chancellor, will you — after your return from vacation — engage yourself strongly in the Hesse election campaign?

Schmidt: I will engage myself in Hesse as much as in any other land. In the Hamburg election campaign I did a bit more because this is my hometown. I surely will engage myself in Hesse, but to the same degree I did in the spring of the year in Lower Saxony. And at the same time I have to go to Bavaria.

WELT: Will you run as a candidate in 1984 for the Bergedorf constituency?

Schmidt: This does not depend on me but on my party in the Hamburg-Bergedorf constituency. But I would be very glad if they were to place that much confidence in me once again, that they would present me to the voters in Hamburg-Bergedorf as Social Democratic candidate.

WELT: And would you run for chancellor again if your party were successful?

Schmidt: It is somewhat premature to talk about this. In this respect, too, matters do not depend on me in the first place but on the will of my own party. Granted, there are people who want to become federal chancellor. I never did. I am and have been for a very long time, for almost my entire adult life, too much a member of a democratically grown party, too much a democrat in the sense of social democratic education. I do not want to impose myself on the basic right of a party, namely to determine by itself in a secret vote who is to be at its head or who it wants to nominate for the chancellor's office. This must be decided by the party.

GENSCHER ON U.S. RELATIONS IN ELECTION CAMPAIGN

DW161347 Frankfurt Hessischer Rundfunk Network in German 0930 GMT 15 Aug 82

[Interview with FDP chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher by Paul Heinz Middeldorf and Karl Heinz Kemper -- live]

[Excerpt] [Question] You referred to some election-campaign topics, the main election campaign topics for Hesse. You are the foreign minister, and you will put in 60 appearances in Hesse. Will foreign policy be exempted? After all, the relationship between the Federal Republic and the United States has meanwhile reached a high level of importance in the public discussion. Would you accept an election campaigning offer from the SPD in this field? It is, after all, from the SPD that the highly critical utterances against U.S. policy come as well as against opposition leader Kohl, for example. SPD Federal Manager Glotz has made rather drastic remarks in this respect. So, will you be waging discussions in this field, waging the election campaign and advocating divergent positions?

[Answer] What Mr Glotz said about Mr Kohl was not drastic but self-exposing and coarse, if I may say so. But to the matter at issue: The FDP in our country has the mission to ensure continuity, especially when a change takes place. It is its task to ensure continuity, especially in the important field of foreign policy. This is based on the fact that only we enforced the Federal Republic's tie with the West jointly with the CDU, and its opening toward the East, specifically the treaty policy and the detente policy, jointly with the Social Democrats. Hence, we are the guarantor of this policy. It goes without saying that I note with some concern that some people in the SPD obviously propose to wage an election campaign in Hesse which is directed against the United States as well. It is our task to advocate our interests in the alliance with self-awareness. No doubt about that at all. Yet in so doing we must never forget with whom we are allied and who is our adversary.

Whoever believes that he might blame our economic problems on the United States just because he lacks the strength to take the proper decisions not only peddles wrong recipes but also burdens a tie with the United States which is vital for our security. Anyone pretending that what matters in the disarmament negotiations is to merely pound the head of the Americans on the table over and over agin, as it were, to make them negotiate, while the Soviets like nothing better than to get rid of their missiles as quickly as possible, were they not prevented from doing so by the Americans, just distorts the realities as well. This should not be done. What we have jointly planned in the alliance we should also implement consistently. In that respect we will have our say toward all partners. After all, what makes the Western alliance different from the Warsaw Pact is that we are an alliance of equals. And we propose to act that way too. There is not one partner that must submit to another.

[Question] Let me refer to another quotation of Mr Glotz. He spoke of a crossroads represented by Hesse. Would you agree with that as far as Bonn is concerned and perhaps even with a view to your party congress in Berlin? Will that have any impact on your party?

[Answer] A new majority will have to be formed for Hesse, for an economic policy which will be oriented toward the future. I believe that after Hesse the Social Democrats will have cause to ponder whether the Hessian SPD course of a retrospective economic policy is the proper way. Viewed from this angle it definitely represents a crossroads. Our federal-level party congress in Berlin must draft the perspectives for the future and once again underscore the FDP as the force of renewal and progress in this country -- progress out of a liberal spirit -- and reaffirm this role.

INTERVIEW WITH ISRAELI LABOR PARTY LEADER PERES

LD162050 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Excerpt] On arriving in Paris this afternoon, Shimon Peres [leader of Israeli Labor Party] said he wants a dialogue to be established between France and Israel so that the two countries can overcome their differences. Peres also said President Mitterrand is a friend of Israel, that France is not an anti-Semitic country, and that the security of Jews living within France is the sole responsibility of the French Government. There is no separation between the two countries, concluded Mr Peres in an interview with Louis Gosset.

[Begin recording] [Peres] I do not think it is a separation. I am sure that in France, as in Israel, deep down there is a mutual friendly feeling. I am convinced that President Mitterrand has been, is and will remain our friend.

[Gosset] Despite what happened in Paris?

[Peres] Despite what happened in Paris.

[Gosset] Is Israel prepared for the French soldiers to be the first to arrive in Beirut to prepare the evacuation of the Palestinians?

[Peres] Yes, The Americans have promised that if the PLO does not follow the agreement, they will leave Beirut. France has taken the same stand, and so I see no problem.

[Gosset] So there is no opposition from Mr Begin to the arrival of French soldiers?

[Peres] No. I know the Israeli Government will agree.

[Gosset] In your opinion, when will the first departures be?

[Peres] It is a question of days or weeks, no more. [end recording]

DEFFERRE COMMENTS ON FRENCH ASYLUM POLICY

PM161009 Paris LE MONDE in French 12 Aug 82 p 3

[Text] On Tuesday, 10 August, Interior and Decentralization Minister Gaston Defferre made a reference to talks which he had with the premier and the keeper of the seals relating to the right of asylum.

Referring to a more precise definition of that right, the minister said: "France must remain a land of asylum. I discussed this problem a week ago with the premier and the keeper of the seals. There is no question of abandoning the right of asylum, but it is necessary to give a better and more precise definition of that right because it is unacceptable for French people to be harmed by individuals enjoying that right on our territory.

"The air and border police have had their numbers considerably increased since I became interior minister and many foreigners undesirable in France have been turned back at our borders," he also stated.

"In addition, I have given instructions to officials in the police service to establish contact with the Jewish populations throughout the country in order to reassure them and guarantee their physical and psychological security," Mr Defferre continued.

FOREIGN MINISTRY STATEMENT ON PEACE FORCE

AU161928 Rome ANSA in English 1922 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 16 -- The Italian Foreign Ministry said today that evacuation of Palestinian guerrillas from besieged west Beirut must pave the way to negotiations which assure Palestinians a just consideration of their national aspirations and Israel's security.

The statement was issued in connection with the participation of Italy in the multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon.

The Foreign Ministry statement added that Italian participation in the buffer force is motivated by "both urgent humanitarian and political" reasons and falls within the framework of the goals pursued by the United Nations, which has also decided to send observers to Beirut to monitor the evacuation.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the Italian Navy in the southern port town of Brindisi confirmed today that preparations are under way for the departure of the Italian contingent, and that the Bersaglieri battalion will have boarded three ships by tomorrow, awaiting orders to set sail for Lebanon.

Contingent Preparing to Depart

NC161917 Paris AFP in English 1913 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Brindisi, Italy, Aug 16 (AFP) -- The Italian contingent for the multi-national buffer force in Lebanon will be ready to [word indistinct] tomorrow at 1000 GMT, a navy spokesman said in this southern Italian port today.

The international force, which will probably also include U.S. and French troops, is expected to oversee the evacuation of Palestinian fighters from west Beirut once an agreement is reached among the parties involved in the Lebanese conflict.

Tanks, jeeps, buses, ambulances and reconnaissance vehicles, all painted white, are currently being loaded on two troop transports and a car-ferry.

Some 529 troops, all volunteers, who have been given special training over the past few days and extensive briefing on the Lebanese situation, are expected to arrive shortly. They will be accompanied by 30 carabinieri, who will act as military police.

Observers here estimated it would take the ships 72 hours to reach Lebanon.

COLOMBO CITED ON FOREIGN POLICY, WORLD ISSUES

AU161955 Rome ANSA in English 1945 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Rome, August 16 -- It is now "required" that Italy play an active role in the international sphere, according to Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo in a radio interview to be broadcast tomorrow morning.

"Italy has the duty, as a great European nation and despite its domestic crises, to play its role", Colombo said.

"It is required, not only by Europe but also by the Atlantic alliance, East-West relations and by Third World nations".

Colombo referred in particular to his recent diplomatic initiatives: his tour of three Latin American nations, also representing the European Economic Community, and Italy's participation in the multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon.

Apropos the Lebanese crisis, Colombo said that "a return to that nation's sovereignty" has as its final objective peaceful negotiations which will give a homeland to Palestinians and create the premises for peaceful relations between Arabs and Israelis.

With respect to relations between Europe and the United States, the foreign minister said that one must not generalize nor emphasize tensions, be they economic (interest rates and food policy) or political (the Siberian pipeline and credits to the Soviet Union).

Colombo also stressed "the limits of superpowers" in solving local crises with the risk of overshadowing them with "East-West tensions" citing the case of the Falklands war, where the United States acted first as mediator and then sided with Britain.

Colombo called for actions such as those of the Italian Government with the Organization of American States and Organization of African Unity.

PERTINI RESUMES VACATION, OPTIMISTIC ON CRISIS

AU161606 Rome ANSA in English 1548 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] (ANSA) -- Selva Val Gardena, near Bolzano, northern Italy, August 16 -- "The new government will be formed in the near future", Italian President Sandro Pertini told reporters here this morning as he resumed the vacation in this Dolomite beauty spot brusquely interrupted by the fall of the Spadolini government on August 7.

"I've left the situation in the hands of Spadolini... in whom I have the highest confidence", he added as he got down from the helicopter. Spadolini is currently working to recreate the five-party coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Liberals and his own Republicans which he led till the crisis broke.

On arrival, Pertini, who is loved by the Italians as much for his wit as for his political acumen, also had a tale of good omen for the premier-designate's government-formation attempt.

"This morning, while I was talking with Spadolini at the airport in Rome, I saw a general come up to me with a worried look on his face", the 84-year-old veteran said. "So I asked him, sottovoce, what was up and he said, 'presidente, you've got an unmatching pair of shoes on'".

"In my hurry, I had in fact put on one shoe with laces and one without. But this, so the Neapolitans say, brings good fortune, and today is a fortunate day. I'm back home here".

Val Gardena, a splendid valley with the dramatic backdrop of the Dolomite Mountains, is where Pertini has been taking vacations for 21 years. Since being elected president, he has stayed in a finance guards barracks for security reasons.

Returning to more serious considerations on the crisis, he said that "Spadolini and I put good will into it".

"We are united not just by friendship, but also by a loyal and sincere cooperation which takes account of the country's interests".

As for the now distant possibility of early general elections, Pertini said they would be a "disturbance for the country's life", adding that he would return to Rome to swear in the new government and then get back to his vacationing.

Shortly after his arrival, Pertini went for a walk in the mountains, still wearing his unmatching shoes, and later got down to a game of cards with his friends.

ATAKOL REBUTS ALLEGATIONS OF AIRSPACE VIOLATIONS

TA132003 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 13 Aug 82

[Text] Turkish Cypriot Minister of Foreign Affairs and Defense Kenan Atakol has said that the Greek Cypriots have no right to complain about the airspace of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC]. Recalling that the Greek Cypriot administration has lodged a protest with the United Nations complaining of the violation of the Cypriot airspace by Turkish airplanes last Tuesday, Atakol said that the time has come for countries which are seriously interested in the solution of the Cyprus problem as well as international institutions to avoid according serious consideration to Greek Cypriot efforts to act like the Cyprus Government. Atakol reiterated that since 27 December 1963 there has been no single legal government in Cyprus, adding that the Greek Cypriot allegations are unfounded and biased. Atakol concluded by stressing that the Turkish airplanes were only flying over TFSC airspace on Tuesday.

ASSEMBLY CONTINUES DEBATE ON CONSTITUTION

TA161121 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Excerpt] The Consultative Assembly Constitutional Committee is replying to criticism leveled against the whole of the draft constitution. Addressing the Consultative Assembly session, which began at 0900 this morning, Constitutional Committee Chairman Orhan Aldikacti commented on criticism concerning the length, method, form and basic philosophy of the draft constitution.

Referring to criticism that the draft constitution was too lengthy and that it was submitted to the Consultative Assembly chairmanship at a late stage, Aldikacti said: We did not construct a bridge or a building, we organized a social event.

Aldikacti noted that suitability to the country's needs rather than the length is important in the preparation of the constitution. Also rejecting the views that the committee wasted time through lack of methodology, Aldikacti explained that a certain method was pursued during the work on the constitution, that other countries' constitutions as well as Turkey's previous constitutional periods were studied and that the views of various personalities and organizations were sought during this time.

Replying to criticism of the fact that the draft comprises 200 articles, the committee chairman noted that since the 14th century, the duties of the state have increased and constitutions have become longer to allow for these duties and to adapt to the changing conditions.

Aldikacti said that the opposition expressed by certain committee members to the various articles of the draft constitution was wrongly interpreted and that the draft as a whole was approved by all members of the committee.

Reacting to criticism that the draft constitution is devoid of a fundamental philosophy, Aldikacti noted: This draft consists of a constitution that is not conducive to a return to the periods prior to 12 September 1980. While drafting this constitution, could we have ignored the basic principles of our constitutional law? The concepts of our constitutional law would naturally be included in our new constitution. What was there to add after including the conditions for the principle of national sovereignty in our constitution and merging these with a parliamentary system? We naturally knew what we were going to do. We had to create a constitution based on human rights, a parliamentary system and the national sovereignty principle. We believed in the need for mankind to conduct the struggle for life in mutual respect, without animosity and hand in hand, which is a condition for a democratic system. We tried to shape the constitution to reflect this conviction.

Aldikacti said that the committee respected the criticism leveled at the Consultative Assembly and that it will reply to these points separately during the debate on the various articles. He said, however: Only one point is unjustified and has grieved us. This is the claim that we drafted a constitution protecting the wealthy. We believe that we prepared a constitution not only for the rich but for all groups and persons who will work hand in hand to develop our country. Those who leveled this criticism have probably overlooked the articles of the constitution against private enterprise. If they had read these articles, they would have realized that we are opposed to holding and trust companies and would have seen the stipulations on the protection of human rights and the calculation of wages in accordance with the distribution of wealth and they would not have claimed that we drafted a constitution protecting the rich.

Draft Constitution Defended

TA161551 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1535 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Ankara, Aug 16 (AA) -- Rapporteur of the Consulative Assembly drafting committee for the constitution Sener Akyol said lifting of the check-off system would discourage extravagance and militancy by trade union officers.

Speaking on social and economic provisions of the draft constitution, Prof. Akyol believed union members would follow closely the use to which the funds, which they are to pay in directly, are put.

The lockout was allowed as a right to counterbalance the strike, Akyol said, and to establish "equality" between labor and management.

Akyol defended the provision that nationalization of property would be made at "current value" on the grounds that the value "declared for tax purposes" would be one of the elements of current value.

The restrictions on nationalized land and on state exploitation of natural resources were all included in the draft to encourage productivity, the committee rapporteur said.

He believed "production, protection (of property) and distribution (of income)" were three areas where conflict should be reduced so as to "enlarge the pie" from which all should get their share.

Debate on Articles To Begin

TA170616 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Excerpt] The Consultative Assembly has decided to begin debate on the separate articles of the draft constitution. In its session last night, the Assembly held a vote by roll call and 136 members participated in the voting. The motion to begin the debate on the separate articles of the draft constitution was approved by 135 votes to 1; 21 members did not participate in the voting.

During the Consultative Assembly session that ended at 0100 in the morning, Constitutional Committee member Feridun Ergin replied to criticism on finance, Tevfik Fikret Alpaslan on national defense, Recep Melic on agriculture and forestry, Hikmet Atun on health and universities and Mumin Kavalali and Muammer Yazar replied to criticism on the judiciary.

Constitutional Committee Chairman Orhan Aldikacti was the last to address the Assembly to reply to criticism on the executive organ and give a general assessment. Aldikacti noted that in the 1961 Constitution the executive body was subject to the legislative body. Describing this provision as the basic shortcoming of the 1961 Constitution, Aldikacti said: In the new draft constitution, the executive is no longer subject to the legislative. We transformed these two into equal and balanced powers.

Aldikacti explained that this new arrangement does not mean that the executive is entitled to enact laws at will and that he does not agree with the criticism that the executive has been transformed into a two-headed body as a result of the powers accorded to the president. He noted that it will be possible for the president to dismiss the prime minister and the ministers only in critical periods and under certain conditions in a bid to avert political crises. Further pointing out that the draft increases the executive powers to be exercised by the president through a single signature, Aldikacti said that these new authorities pertain to procedures not involving responsibility.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS TO USSR ON PHONE LINE CUTS

PM161013 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 12 Aug 82 p 20

[Excerpt] Sweden has once again protested to the Soviet authorities about the cuts in telephone lines to and from the Soviet Union. On Wednesday morning [11 August] Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Leif Leifland summoned Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Yakovlev and requested that telephone communications be restored in full.

"The Swedish Government takes a serious view of the cuts and considers that they are a clear deviation from the main principles contained in the Helsinki agreement covering contacts between nations," Leifland said.

It will now also be more difficult for the Swedish Embassy in Moscow to maintain normal contacts since the Swedish telecommunications board reckons that there could be long waits for calls to the Soviet Union.

AUBERT, FRG'S GENSCHER HOLD TALKS IN BERNE

LD162046 Hamburg DPA in German 1812 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Berne, 16 Aug (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and his Swiss counterpart, Pierre Aubert, in Berne today joined in expressing the hope that the efforts by U.S. Middle East intermediary Philip Habib would be successful in ending the war in Lebanon. The U.S. efforts should not be disrupted by fresh acts of violence, stressed Genscher and Aubert in a discussion on the eve of Federal President Karl Carsten's state visit.

It was announced by spokesmen of the German delegation after the meeting that Genscher had urged that the problem of an overall settlement for the Middle East would not be forgotten after the Lebanon settlement. There must be political prospects for the Palestinians consisting in the implementation of their right to self-determination.

In the presence of the two foreign ministers, Carstens and Swiss Federal President Fritz Honegger earlier discussed relations between Europe and the United States, the economic and labor situation of the Federal Republic and Switzerland as well as environmental problems common to both countries. Both presidents expressed their satisfaction in this respect at the recently concluded agreement on mutual information regarding the operation of nuclear power stations on both sides of the border.

During the discussion, the Swiss side gave its assurance that the planned project for a subterranean oil reserve depot in Graubuenden in the watershed area of Lake Constance was not being hurried forward but thoroughly examined. Berne would inform the German side of the results.

BENEFITS EXPECTED FROM U.S. PIPELINE EMBARGO

[Editorial Report: "Austria's Exports to East To Benefit From U.S. Embargo"]

[Summary] "Vienna -- The Trade Ministry sees additional export chances for Austrian industry as a result of the U.S. embargo on subcontractors' deliveries for the new natural gas pipeline. As a neutral country Austria naturally does not observe the embargo rules, stated Section Chief Josef Meisl, who is in charge of foreign trade. Specific opportunities for deliveries should be discussed in September in Moscow within the framework of the bilateral mixed commission.

"But the state-owned refined steel works have lost an almost-certain order on the grounds of the U.S. embargo. As DIE PRESSE reported, the enterprise was to deliver to the Soviet Union, in cooperation with the French affiliate of the U.S. Dresser concern, compressors valued at 250 to 300 million schillings. This deal is now affected by the tightened embargo rules."

Austria's exports to the East could well use another incentive. "In the first half of 1982 both exports, totaling 13.9 billion schillings, and imports, totaling 18.8 billion schillings, were stagnant. Hence, Austria's trade deficit totaled the respectable sum of 4.9 billion schillings. A bright spot was the increase in exports to the Soviet Union by 23.7 percent to 4.6 billion schillings. Since imports concurrently decreased 9.5 percent to 8.8 billion schillings, the trade deficit dropped from 6 billion in the past year to 4.2 billion schillings. More commodities were also exported to the CSSR and Hungary, whereas business with Poland shrank by almost 50 percent."

FOREIGN MINISTRY INSISTS ON MBFR DATA DISCUSSION

[Bernt Conrad article]

[Text] Bonn -- "We insist: A troop reduction agreement is nonsensical unless accord has been reached on the data beforehand." This was the statement with which a Bonn Foreign Ministry spokesman yesterday repudiated the urging of leading Social Democrats for more "flexibility" in the Vienna troop reduction negotiations [MBFR].

At the present stage of negotiations more flexibility can only mean that the West give up the demand for an accord on the troop data as a precondition for a reduction agreement. In the same vein is a report by DER SPIEGEL which -- under express reference to social democratic tendencies -- mentions a "Bonn study kept under lock and key" in which the proposal has been made to count the troops in East and West not prior to, but after a reduction agreement.

The Foreign Ministry, however, has no knowledge of such a study. "Granted, contemplations are being made in the alliance on how to overcome the difficulties found in Vienna. Yet, proposals concerning a renunciation of a prior accord on the starting data have not been made," people in Genscher's ministry say.

But there cannot be any doubt about the fact that important SPD politicians not only demand greater speed in the Geneva negotiations on medium-range missiles (INF) but also advocate political decisions at te MBFR negotiations at long last instead of the "excluding data counting"

It was only at the end of the week that Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, in a radio interview [see 17 August Western Europe DAILY REPORT, p J5] came out expressly against all those "who pretend that all that matters in the disarmament negotiations is to pound the heads of the Americans on the table time and again, as it were." Now he had a Foreign Ministry spokesman reaffirm the insistence on the precondition of an MBFR data accord, an insistence which is based on joint alliance decisions.

In the Vienna negotiations, the West proceeds from the premise that the Warsaw Pact has at least 150,000 more soldiers in Europe than it admits. To arrive at a common calculation basis the West submitted proposals in July 1981 which so far have not been answered by the East bloc. Only when a rapprochement has been achieved in this respect, Genscher is convinced, can an agreement be signed on reductions such as the West advanced in Vienna in July.

BONN REACTION TO WEINBERGER REPORT FAVORABLE

DW180936 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 18 Aug 82 pp 1, 2

[Alexander Szandar article]

[Excerpt] Bonn, 17 August -- The endeavors of the Federal Government toward putting German efforts into the proper light for the Washington government have obviously shown effect. This is the conclusion which Bonn experts draw after an analysis of the annual report submitted by U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger to Congress on the defense contributions of the NATO allies and of Japan. Regardless of the repeated demand that the partners must increase their defense expenditures in view of an intensifying Soviet threat, the report is also assessed as an argumentation aid against those voices in the U.S. Congress which advocate a reduction of the U.S. troop involvement in Western Europe because of allegedly inadequate contributions by Europe toward burden sharing.

Since Weinberger reportedly treated the German defense contribution with particular understanding, the assumption is obvious that Bonn will rely on the statements of the report when it becomes necessary to deal with renewed demands on Washington's part. This is probably also aimed at the tendencies to relocate U.S. troops more closely to the border with the GDR and the CSSR, especially since the American cost estimates for this project are deemed too optimistic, as it is put with diplomatic reserve.

On the whole, it was learned in Bonn, Weinberger draws a differentiated picture and arrives at a balanced result. He has endeavored to produce an objective description which also makes allowances for the viewpoints of the allies. The Federal Republic "is getting off pretty well," said an expert who is familiar with the Weinberger report.

SPOKESMAN RUEHL ON WISCHNEWSKI-MOLDT MEETING

LD161450 Hamburg DPA in German 1347 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 16 Aug (DPA) -- At a meeting today in the federal chancellor's office, Minister of State Hans-Juergen Wischnewski and the head of the GDR's permanent mission in Bonn, Ewald Moldt, discussed the "entire breath" of intra-German relations. But according to Government Spokesman Lothar Ruehl, a visit by GDR State and party chief Erich Honecker to the Federal Republic was not discussed. The Federal Government is, however, still interested in a visit by Honecker. The two governments have not as yet entered into discussions on this.

Ruehl refused to go into detail on the topics of the meeting, which was agreed to before Wischnewski and Moldt went on leave.

Speaking later to the press, Ruehl pointed out that one of the topics discussed was the GDR authorities; refusing entry to federal citizens, including leading CDU politicians. Ruehl recalled that the Federal Government protested against this measure publicly and with a demarche in East Berlin. Since other leading Union politicians have in the meantime and previously been able to enter the GDR, it remains to be seen how the GDR authorities will behave in the future. In any case, the Federal Government cannot accept practice of this sort, he stressed.

CDU/CSU POLITICIAN VIEWS GDR BORDER ISSUE

LD171514 Hamburg DPA in German 1105 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn, 17 Aug (DPA) -- Carl-Dieter Spranger, CDU/CSU parliamentary spokesman for internal affairs, sees new signs of the Federal Government giving into the GDR in the dispute over the intra-German border which runs along the stretch of the Elbe between Schnackenburg and Lauenburg. "The GDR wants a quick conclusion to the negotiations at all costs and before the end of the year," Spranger told DPA on Tuesday [17 Aug]. He did not exclude the possibility of this being linked to the expected visit of GDR state and party chief Erich Honecker to the Federal Republic.

While the GDR insists on the border running down the middle of the Elbe along the 95 km stretch, Spranger referred to the Allies' London Protocol of 1944 which established the border on the eastern bank of the Elbe in this section. The Intra-German Border Commission, which has been trying to sort out the dispute without success, has no authority to effect a "constitutive, autonomous border settlement" between the Federal Republic and the GDR, the CDU/CSU politician emphasized. The basic treaty and the accompanying statement on the protocol specified that the border's course should be determined solely by regulations in the London Protocol.

Spranger claims that Federal Chancellor Schmidt had tried to persuade Ernst Albrecht, the premier of Lower Saxony (CDU), to "give way" to the GDR. Referring to statements made by Egon Franke, federal minister for intra-German relations (SPD), in the Bundestag a few months ago, Spranger noted that Franke thought it would be a case of "going on about principles" if the Federal Republic did not accommodate the GDR on this question. "All these maneuvers to give in have to be resolutely opposed," he added. The CSU/CDU will do everything it can to prevent such a serious development. The opposition threatened in the fall of 1981 to call on the Federal Constitutional Court if Bonn complied with GDR demands to move the Elbe frontier.

SPD'S EHMKE ACCEPTS INVITATION TO MOSCOW

DW160941 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 14 Aug 82 pp 1-2

[Dispatch signed CKN]

[Excerpt] Bonn, 13 August -- At a time of continuous discord between Bonn and Washington, Deputy Chairman of the SPD Bundestag Group Ehmke will be going to Moscow in response to an invitation from the Supreme Soviet. He is the first high-ranking politician of the Federal Republic to establish contact with political bodies of the Soviet Union outside the government since the imposition of martial law in Poland. Within the European Community the governments had come to the understanding that they would continue the political dialogue with governments of the East bloc, to be sure, but that they would adapt the rest of the relations and contacts to the situation that has emerged in East-West relations since the promulgation of martial law in Poland under Soviet pressure. From 16 August on, Ehmke will be having talks in the Soviet capital with "government and party offices." It was impossible to learn from the press office of the SPD faction whom the SPD deputy floorleader will be meeting. Ehmke will also visit Kiev during his 6-day official visit. Subsequently, he will make a private tour of Uzbekistan.

GDR SPY SERVICE SEEKS RECRUITS AMONG UNEMPLOYED

LD161346 Hamburg DPA in German 0943 GMT 16 Aug 82

[Text] Bonn, 16 Aug (DPA) -- In view of the present labor market situation in the Federal Republic, the GDR intelligence services are noticeably trying to recruit the unemployed as agents. The Federal Interior Ministry made reference to this on Monday in Bonn. According to the information, the GDR's military intelligence service systematically evaluate the "situations wanted" advertisements in the Federal Republic's daily newspapers to this end. There was particular interest in job-hunters indicating they had formerly been or were presently in the Bundeswehr. Those employed in professions in the armament sector were also considered.

According to the Interior Ministry in Bonn, the GDR intelligence service is also interested in people who are still in school. Students, once recruited, can eventually be infiltrated into positions where they can gain access to confidential material. Those looking for jobs often receive an offer from the GDR in writing or by telephone, together with an invitation for a talk in East Berlin. In most cases freelance work proposed in which payment is to be according to the results. The jobs then move increasingly in the direction of reconnoitering military and armaments establishments in the Federal Republic.

The Interior Ministry pointed out that only after some time do the federal citizens become aware of the dubious nature of their contacts. The deceived job-hunter often did not dare break away from the intelligence service connection because his GDR contacts threaten reprisals. Those involved are urged to contact the Office for the Protection of the Constitution immediately in every case. It is not a prosecuting authority. Its job is to help citizens in these situations.

Press Review

DW170934 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany
0505 GMT 17 Aug 82

[From the Press Review]

[Text] STUTTGARTER ZEITUNG deals with the GDR's attempts to recruit agents and writes: That's all the unemployed needed, the people who are desperately looking for new jobs and are therefore ready to catch at any, even meager, straw, are now becoming a favorite recruiting object for the GDR's military intelligence service. It is sometimes difficult for outsiders to realize how easily even intelligent people can get caught in the jungle of intelligence services when they find themselves in a crisis of life. The business of these services is done by all states, but the GDR and the other East bloc countries are doing it particularly unscrupulously. The hope placed in the easily-earned money and perhaps also in the thrill, however, are usually dispelled rather rapidly and bluntly by the Eastern employers.

And now the view of DARMSTAEDTER ECHO -- quotation: It is a tall order that the GDR intelligence service is exploiting unemployment in the Federal Republic for its obscure purposes by examining job applications in West German papers to find out whether desperate unemployed persons are suited to serve the GDR as spies. Nevertheless, the Federal Government endeavors not to step on the feet of the Warsaw Pact in general and the GDR in particular. It was a mere coincidence that a pertinent event was taking place yesterday -- the talk between Wischnewski, the head of the chancellor's office, and Moldt, the GDR representative to Bonn, on all issues of interest to both states, as Government Spokesman Ruehl said. The subject of the GDR's espionage certainly did not figure in the talk. Bonn does not dare to tackle it on such occasions.

KOELNER STADT ANZEIGER has the following to say: The warning against the GDR's tricks, with which it seeks to seduce job applicants for espionage purposes, deserves attention. But this time, too, it is useless to get excited about how flexibly and, at the same time, unscrupulously East Berlin is reacting to exploit developments in the Federal Republic for its own purposes. Rather, it is important that the FRG people are drawing the correct conclusions from the Interior Ministry's warning. The fact that many people who were contacted by the GDR are afraid to go to the Office for the Protection of the Constitution may be attributable to many a shocking story disseminated about this authority.

MITTERRAND HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE 17 AUG

LD172010 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 17 Aug 82

[Press conference given by President Francois Mitterrand to (Jean-Pierre Guerat), Paris Radio editor in chief, and (Dominique Bromberger), head of Paris Radio's foreign affairs service, at the Elysee on 17 August -- live]

[Text] [Question] Mr President, during this discussion you agreed to answer questions on two topics: first, your and the government's policy on the conflict between the Israelis and the Palestinians in Lebanon. We would also like your opinion on a problem that worries the French: the renewal of violent incidents and their seriousness. This afternoon you chaired an important cabinet meeting on terrorism -- we will talk about that -- but perhaps some of these violent crimes in France would not have happened if we were not so committed in the Near East. So perhaps we should start with a question that the French are asking: What are you trying to do in the Near East?

[Answer] I can only answer that question after briefly defining France's policy in the Near East. That policy is one of presence, balance and peace. It is one of presence because France has for centuries maintained privileged relations in that part of the world; because our country, one of the five permanent members of the UN Security Council, with its wealth of history, has particular duties that I intend to perpetuate. It is a policy of balance that rests upon three principles: the right of the people of Israel to live in peace within the secure frontiers of a state that is recognized and respected by all; the right of the Palestinian people to possess a homeland and to establish the institutions it desires there; and the right of the Lebanese people to recover the unity and independence that is flouted today. It is a policy of peace because I think that the only way to reach that goal is to opt for negotiation rather than war.

What I am trying to achieve is peace, because I think that the principles I have just spelled out will only become reality if that path is followed. The obstacles are many, as you and all the French know, but let no one think that the obstacles will make me change course.

[Question] Mr President, you have already spelled out the substance of those principles. Just 5 months ago you were received almost fervently, so to speak, in Israel. Now, today, the gravest crisis since your election is developing between Israel and France. Does that not mean that this policy is running into difficulties in its application and that in applying it you have moved away from Israel during the latest Lebanese crisis?

[Answer] The point is that the crisis must be placed in its proper context. I was, as you say, received fervently in Israel and I was moved by that people's hospitality. But that in no way induces me to follow -- or to suffer -- the political decisions made by that government, and I said as much in Jerusalem itself, in the Knesset, where I defined principles for relations that I have not revoked. Everyone knew it. All the same, I would add that in France's relations with Israel one must, without keeping score, at least have some knowledge of what has happened over the past almost 15 months -- and even before that, because just remember: When the Camp David agreements were signed I was the only French political leader to approve them. Why? Because they made peace possible between Israel and Egypt. Admittedly, although I thought, and still think it impossible to settle the future of the Palestinians without or despite their participation, my attitude towards peace has nonetheless always been to move forward step by step.

Well now, I have just recalled Camp David, and one of its implications is that today France is represented in the Sinai multination force, the last act in the conflict between Israel and Egypt, because I took that position.

What about the boycott? As soon as I was elected to the presidency, I put an end to the commercial boycott on Israel. It must be admitted that before that time France had been wrong to agree to it under pressure.

There's something else: Everytime I have met an Arab head of state -- and I have met many of them -- I have advised that the state of Israel be recognized, just as I have advised the Palestinian representatives that I have had the occasion to meet. It is true that my trip took place in the context of this series of acts, which clearly shows that my policy was inspired by respect for Israel and the rejection of any discrimination toward it, but also by France's freedom of action. It now happens that because of a unilateral act the balance in this part of the world appears likely to be jeopardized again.

Well, as for the state of our relations, I have just told you that everything I am saying now I have, in fact, said before the Israeli parliament. I placed all our cards on the table.

If the symbolism of that trip, just as my remarks, has been poorly understood by some people, it is very easy for me to recall today that my conduct is that of a friend of Israel, to the extent I recognize its right to intervene in Middle East affairs.

[Question] France has decided to participate in an international force which will interpose itself in the withdrawal of the Palestinians. What will the role of the French contingent be? Will it resort to arms in the event of a violation of the cease-fire?

[Answer] What I have said up to now should naturally lead us to understand what is taking place today in Beirut, and France's attitude. I have defined the principles for you. Now you are asking me, and you are perfectly right to do so, about the application of those principles, since we are now faced with a city under siege, occupied, partly destroyed, under bombardment, with the presence of several armies physically present, several armies facing each other, and the Lebanese Government which is searching for a way out. France is seeking to facilitate the task of the legitimate Government of Lebanon in dealing with what is taking place in Lebanon, and Lebanon is not at war.

I have said what I think about the policy of friendship with Israel, and no one can deny it. Not even Mr Begin's arguments will make me any more of an enemy of Israel. I think should say what I think of the Palestinians. I outlined this a little earlier, pointing out that I felt that the Palestinians, like any people in the world, should have a homeland. And I asked for a mutual and preliminary recognition from the representatives of the Palestinians and the representatives of Israel, without which it would be impossible to engage in a process of detente. In short, I have always preferred the political solution to the solution of war. And that is what inspires my policy in the affair of Beirut. France is one of the three countries called on by the Lebanese Government to carry out a mission which I asked for 2 months ago when I expressed my hopes for the future of Lebanon: to arrive at an end to the conflict, for the opposing sides to separate, for the foreign armies in Lebanon to leave one day and, in the immediate future, for the Palestinians to be able to withdraw honorably, saving the maximum number of lives. I asked what purpose would be served by an intensive bombardment and the continuation of the war, causing the elimination of thousands more men and women, military and civilian, Palestinian and Lebanese.

So I advised -- still under the authority of the Lebanese Government -- that the primary condition should never be forgotten: the setting up of a neutral, multinational force. And the talks which have been started between the Lebanese Government and the other sides indicate that, if all goes as it should, one ought to finish up toward the end of this week with the arrival of an initial detachment, the first being Lebanese, since it is, after all, their country. The first foreigners in Lebanon will be the French, within the working arrangement which seems to have been accepted. And a few days later, if all goes well -- this precaution should always be stated -- other detachments: French, Italian and American.

The mandate of these multinational forces, each remaining under national command and, of course, under the authority of the Lebanese Government, will be for as long as the negotiations indicate. I would not like to prejudge the discussions which are taking place at present and on which the Lebanese Government will pronounce itself tomorrow, I think for a certain period of time these multinational forces will oversee the departure of the PLO forces under the best conditions of safety and dignity -- I say, the departure, I did not say the maintenance [as heard]. During my last press conference on 9 June, which all the French people, or at any rate many French people, heard, I said -- and that was during the first days of the affair of Beirut -- that it was essential for the foreign armies in Lebanon to leave the country. I remain true to my own logic, and I think that France, which I believe has gained the confidence and respect of all the sides in that part of the world, could usefully contribute in the departure of the belligerents, the Palestinians, before participating, if asked, in the final settlement.

[Question] There is a question which has still to be asked, Mr President. We have, all the same, already seen multinational forces serving no purpose, and just recently, UN forces in Lebanon who let the Israelis through. There is a problem here, which is to know whether these forces will have to intervene in the event of one of the two parties not respecting its commitments.

[Answer] For the time being, and it is useful to point this out, it is not a question of UN forces. But, of course, there are UN observers on the spot and the role of these observers is not irrelevant to the presence of this multinational force. Well, this multinational force is composed of national detachments under the auspices of the Lebanese Government. They will have a mandate to carry out. This mandate will be given them by the Lebanese Government. They will have to keep to this mandate. That is to say, if ever, in mid-course, this mandate has to be revoked, it will be. It is obvious that France is not a belligerent as regards Lebanon. It only consented to go there with the agreement of the Lebanese, the Israelis and the Palestinians. If one of these agreements were revoked, we would not stay.

[Question] You allude to what happened when the Israelis went into Lebanon 2 months ago and to the attitude of the UNIFIL batallion, the international force which was on the spot. I do not think that a scenario such as that could be reproduced. At the end of the week, then, if all goes well, if everything happens as envisaged, at least the Palestinians, the PLO, will begin to leave Beirut for various countries, having surrendered their heavy weaponry. So what we have is, as it were, a breakdown of the PLO. Now, to what extent does France still feel it necessary to recognize the PLO?

[Answer] Good. You have just used rather strong language, although your knowledge of the problem is first-rate. France has not recognized the PLO. In my Knesset speech, my definitive statement, I addressed the Israeli parliament and spoke of a Palestinian homeland, of mutual and prior recognition -- in short, I said what I thought and took risks. I have always said equally that the recognition of the PLO as the representative of the Palestinian people depends upon certain conditions. The expression that I used was "the fighting organization". And the PLO is indeed the fighting organization -- the only one I know -- for the Palestinians. And in that capacity it has won certain rights, more especially the right to fight and to undergo the hardships it is undergoing today. But what about recognition of the PLO? First, in the longer term, it will be up to the Palestinians to decide for themselves, to choose their representatives. In the immediate term I have a very simple reason which is not an argument inspired by expediency. What can I say? I have said the same thing to whoever approached me, whether Palestinians or others, including the representatives of the Arab League. Unless the PLO opts for a political solution of negotiation based on the recognition of the state of Israel, unless it clears its head of the obsession with the destruction of the state of Israel, which still figures in certain documents, it will not be possible to settle this problem. And since my objective, and that of France, is peace, this is a condition put to the PLO from the very first day and one which I have never revoked. But tell me, what could possibly authorize anyone to put France in the dock today?

At a time when thousands of Palestinians, in a district of a city of over 500,000 people, military and civilians, risk being crushed by bombs, is it not France's role to say "Stop there"; is it not France's role to do everything that should be done to save these lives, to save the dignity of these men without, for all that, compromising in any way the political outcome of these events? I wish to tell you that France's Arab policy cannot be, has never been and never will be anti-Israeli; that France's Israeli policy is not today, has never been, and will not be an anti-Arab policy.

[Question] Perhaps one last question on this foreign policy topic: You have called for the restoration of a Lebanese state, but the Palestinians' departure from Beirut will not solve everything. Other foreign troops will remain in Lebanon.

[Answer] I return to my statement of 9 June -- You see, it was right at the start and I remain true to it. All forces of foreign armies must leave Lebanon. And if Israel needs guarantees, well, within a zone that is still to be defined to the north of Israel -- I mean outside Israel, in southern Lebanon -- a zone which is still to be defined, neutral forces must be in a position to guarantee the perpetuation of peace until such time as it becomes a historical truth, an official truth. That is all I can say on that subject.

[Question]. Mr President, we come to the second topic of the discussion. How do you explain the growth of terrorism in France? Is it bound up with the policy you are pursuing in the Near East, is it an action designed to weaken the government or is it, as Mme Simone Veil said recently, a campaign by organized international groups seeking to destabilize the democracies, one after the other?

[Answer] We can and should ask. Terrorism was not born yesterday, and terrorism from certain foreign countries, particularly the Near East, started well before my election as president of the republic. There have been some 150 anti-Semitic attacks in the past 3 years, the last 3 and 1/2 years, from the beginning of 1979 to today. Of these 150 attacks about 135 or 140 occurred before I became president of the republic. France has faced this problem regardless of the government, and the government's duty is always the same: to study their system, seek their roots and suppress those who commit these crimes. It seems to me, however, that the terrorism from which we are suffering is international. We are suffering from an extension onto French soil of conflicts that do not concern France. I could mention a lot of them to you. The one we have been speaking about since the beginning of our talk is among them: All sorts of extremists mean to strike France because it is one of the main factors for peace in the present Near East balance, and I shall not give this up under threat. Of course I intend to organize the country and the public and police services so as to ensure that terrorism is finally punished. I have made a number of arrangements to this end.

[Question] You set up an antiterrorist headquarters this afternoon. Can you go into details?

[Answer] I can tell you that I have two types of measures in mind. One concerns the proper operational measures for the police to implement as need arises. We have talked, and rightly, of a central, computerized file on terrorism which contains all the international data. This central file was set up on 24 May. It is now a matter of bringing it into full effect. We will accelerate this process.

Better control of visas: This is not a matter of questioning the right, enshrined in the constitution, of asylum for anyone who wants to defend liberty. It is a matter of ensuring better supervision at frontiers to prevent anyone from importing means of violence into France, though one must distinguish between the international terrorists that we are discussing and people requesting permission, whose papers are generally in order. It is this aspect that we must check more closely.

I have requested -- and it will be set up in the coming days -- a central office to suppress the arms and explosives traffic and to ban the sale of certain weapons. I have spoken of improving frontier controls.

On 1 October there will be 33 mobile brigades instead of the present 12, and there will have to be about 20 more in the following months. I have strengthened the police services: 7,000 men for the police itself, 2,000 for the gendarmerie and 1,400 for the air police and frontier police. Units of auxiliary gendarmerie will back up the guardians of peace, who are charged with guarding public buildings, embassies and consulates. Of course we need certain surveillance: There are considerable abuses by certain embassies. They bring ammunition and sometimes weapons into Paris in their diplomatic pouches. European consultations are also certainly necessary. Discussions have been and are still being held on what is called the European judicial [words indistinct] and some arrangements do not and will not suffice for France.

[Question] You have come out against even the principle...

[Answer -- interrupts] France will not subscribe to these, and it does not even matter that some of these end up (?adding nothing) to the totality of the arrangements. I am thinking in particular of a European court that has the means to enforce respect for justice: for example, judges of different nationalities than the criminals and attackers, and a European court that is capable of judging violent crime in such a way that political violence would be unthinkable as a weapon.

Having taken antiterrorist measures through better organization and new measures, I add that since its foundation the republic has known how to defend itself and how to set penal arrangements into motion, and it is useless to add to this. An excess of repressive measures in a republic has historically ended up as its downfall. You see, what is important is the will to respect the law, to make it apply and be intransigent and implacable in its application. What counts is the will to force terrorism to retreat everywhere, to break it up completely -- at its very roots. The French people should know, as I said the other day outside the synagogue where we mourned the sad victims of the Rue des Rosiers outrage, that this sort of terrorism, like the others [words indistinct]. If it is a matter of exceeding the administrative measures that I have just spoken of, then the implications will be (?considerable). One should increase coordination and improve organization.
